PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

July 5, 1918.

PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

AHAD SHAH AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—

RESPONDENTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 16—Undue influence—Unconscionable bargain—Expectant heir, bargain with, validity of—English equitable rules, applicability of, to India—interest, compounding of, whether oppressive—Interpretation of Statutes—Illustrations to Statutes, value of.

Questions as to undue influence, unconscionable bargains and dealings with expectant heirs must be decided on the provisions of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, as amended by the Indian Contract Amendment Act, 1899, and these alone. The principles on which English Courts of Equity deal with similar questions are entirely inapplicable to India [p. 2, col. 2.]

Dhanipal Das v. Maneshar Bakhsh Singh, 33 L. A. 118 at p. 127; 4 C. L. J. 1; 1 M. L. T. 205; 3 A. L. J. 495; 9 O. C. 188; 8 Bom. L. R. 491; 10 C. W. N. 849; 16 M. L. J. 292; 28 A. 570 (P. In money-lending transactions the mere fact that the sum ultimately claimed exceeds enormously the amount originally advanced is no ground for holding the transaction to be unconscionable. It must also appear that there is something unconscionable, either in the original dealings or in the subsequent stages of the transaction. [p. 3, col. 2.]

By making short term loans and insisting on capitalising the interest immediately it falls due, a money-lender may pile up compound interest at an oppressive and unconscionable rate. But there is nothing inherently wrong or oppressive in his securing interest upon interest after the interest has been due and unpaid for a considerable time. [p. 3, col. 2.]

The Indian Contract Act throws upon the person dealing with an expectant heir and in a position to dominate the latter's will the burden of showing that he has not used his position to obtain an unfair advantage [p. 7, col. 1.]

The illustrations to an Indian Statute are to be taken as part of the Statute. [p. 3, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Chief Court of the Punjab, dated the 13th January 1914, varying a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 31st July 1911.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The question in this appeal was whether certain loan transactions between plaintiffs and defendant were unconscionable bargains within the meaning of section 16 of the Indian Contract Act. The trial Judge held they were not, and decreed plaintiffs' claim in full: the Chief Court (Reid, C. J., and Kensington, J.) considered they were, and modified the decree by allowing plaintiffs only the original principal and eighteen per cent. simple interest. Plaintiffs appealed.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. O. (with him Colonel Arthur Grey), for the Appellants.—The doctrines of the English Courts of Equity are not to be considered: Section 16 of the Contract Act must be construed by itself. Dhanipal Das v. Maneshar Bakhsh Singh (1), Sundar Koer v. Rai-Sham Krishen (2).

The circumstances under which the section applies may be summed up as fraud or coercion: there is no proof of either here.

The lower Courts have treated defendant as an expectant heir: he was only so in the sense in which every Muhammadan is an expectant heir, and when these transactions commenced he had no substantial expectations. To get relief defendant must show that there was undue influence in the period 1872—1897 over which the transactions of purchases and borrowing extended. There was nothing harsh or unconscionable either in the original bargains or in any of the renewals, and one at least of these two things must be shown. The renewals were renewals at the old rates and at long periods.

JUDGMENT.

LORD ATKINSON.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the Chief Court of the Panjab, dated the 13th January 1914, varying a decree of the District Judge of Amritsar, dated the 31st July 1911, and decreeing in part the claim of the present appellants.

The plaintiff Balla Mal is the father of the plaintiff Ibharr Das. They carry on the business of sellers of gold lace in the city of Amritsar, and are in addition money lenders. They are members of a joint Hindu family.

The deceased defendant was a Muham-madan. He was born in the year 1863, and was, therefore, in the year 1892, 29 years of age. At the latter date he had been employed for six years as permanent copying clerk in the office of the Divisional Judge of Amritsar at a salary of Rs. 40 per mensem. The defendant's father was head man of the Kunjar or prostitute caste.

The action out of which this appeal arises was brought by the plaintiffs upon certain promissory notes admittedly drawn up and executed by the deceased defendant to recover the sum of Rs. 61,800 alleged to be due for principal, and Rs. 40,489 3-0 alleged to be due for interest at the rate of Rs. 30 per cent. per annum, according to the tenor of these notes. The plaint, which was filed on the 25th April 1909, set forth the particulars of the several notes sued upon, which it is not disputed were respectively presented to the deceased defendant at maturity and payment demanded without effect.

(4) (1875) 10 Ch. 389; 32 L. T. 353; 23 W. R. 531.

The deceased defendant on the 15th May 1909 filed a written statement admitting the execution of the several promissory notes sued upon, but alleging—

1. That he did not receive any consideration for the making of them;

2. That the notes sued upon and all promissory notes and acknowledgment made or given by him leading up to the making of the former were procured from him by the exercise by the plaintiffs of undue influence upon him; and

3. That the whole transaction of which the promissory notes sued upon were the outcome was an unconscionable bargain made with him as an expectant heir, and, therefore, liable to cancellation.

It has been decided by this Board in two cases, namely, Dhanipal Das v. Maneshwar Bakhsh Singh (1) and Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (2), that questions such as those raised by this written statement must be decided on the provisions of the Indian Contract Act of 1872, as amended by the Indian Contract Amendment Act of 1899, and on those alone. The principles upon which English Courts of Equity deal with similar questions are, therefore, entirely inapplicable.

The 16th section of the Contract Act of 1872, as amended by the later Act, runs as follows:—

"1. A contract is said to be induced by undue influence where the relations subsisting between the parties are such that one of the parties is in a position to dominate the will of the other and uses that position to obtain an unfair advantage over the other.

"2. In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing principle, a person is deemed to be in a position to dominate the will of another:—

"(a) Where he holds a real or apparent authority over the other, or where he stands in a fiduciary relation to the other; or

"(b) Where he makes a contract with a person whose mental capacity is temporarily or permanently affected by reason of age, illness, or mental or bodily distress.

"3. Where a person who is in a position to dominate the will of another enters into a contract with him, and the transaction appears, on the face of it or on the evidence adduced, to be unconscionable, the burden of proving that such contract was not induced by undue influence shall lie upon the person in a position to dominate the will of the other."

Four illustrations are given. These are to be taken as part of the Statute. Two of them, namely, (c) and (d), appear to be applicable to the present case, (c) provides if "A, being in debt to B, the money-lender of his village, contracts a fresh loan on terms which appear to be unconscionable. It lies on B to prove that the contract was not induced by undue influence." (d) Provides that if "A applies to a banker for a loan at a time when there is stringency in the money market. The banker declines to make the loan except at...high rate of interest, A accepts the loan on these terms. This is a transaction in the ordinary course of business, and the contract is not induced by undue influence." Now both Courts have held that the averment in the plaint that the deceased defendant did not receive any consideration for the making of the notes sued on was untrue, and that consideration in fact amounting to the sum of Rs. 4,471-5-9 was received by him for the making of them. The deceased defendant himself deposed that about Rs. 3,000 of this sum represented money actually advanced to him by the plaintiffs.

The balance was proved to be the price of goods, such as gold lace, by the plaintiffs actually sold to him, or of clothing by them actually procured for him.

The District Judge, in delivering his judgment, most truly remarked that one "cannot avoid being struck by the fact that an original principal of Rs. 4,471-5-9 had expanded to a principal sum of no less than Rs. 61,800 . . . and that such a result certainly impressed one at first sight as distinctly harsh and unconscionable." "But" (he continues) "I doubt whether—

"on examination it can be held really to be so, for what we have to look at, primarily at any rate, are the circumstances existing at the time of the original dealings, and not the ultimate result of these dealings, unless the intermediate stages whereby that ultimate result has been arrived at have themselves been harsh or unconscionable. In other words, the mere fact that the principal sum now claimed exceeds enormously the amount originally advanced will be no ground for holding the transaction unconscionable. It must also appear that there was something unconscionable either in the original dealings or in the subsequent stages of the transaction."—See Ganga Baksh v. Jagat Bahadur Singh (5), and he then proceeds to examine the original dealings between the parties.

The learned Judge has, in their Lordships' view, in this passage laid down the true principle upon which this extreme augmentation of the deceased defendant's indebtedness should be regarded and dealt with. It is not enough—indeed, it is misleading—to look at the result alone.

This is, in their Lordships' view, the error into which the Chief Court have, to some degree apparently, fallen. A borrower who obtains a loan secured by a promissory note on quite reasonable terms, by neglecting to pay the note at maturity, further neglecting to pay the accruing interest for the several years following, and then giving a renewal note for the original debt plus the capitalised interest, could produce a result which might at first sight appear oppressive, and yet there would be nothing harsh or unconscionable in the creditor's demand, since the added interest only accumulated while he forebore to enforce the payment of the sums from time to time due to him.

On the other hand, it would be quite possible for a money-lender, by making loans for short periods on apparently fair terms, and then insisting on capitalising the interest immediately on its becoming payable, to pile up compound interest on the initial debt at such a rate as would make the result after a few years most oppressive and unconscionable. But there is nothing inherently wrong or oppressive in a lender's securing for himself compound interest after the borrower has for a considerable time neglected to pay the debt he owes or the interest accruing due upon it which he has contracted to pay. The borrower cannot acquire merit simply by breaking his contract. Bankers are, in fact, in this country in the habit, in the ordinary course of their business, of capitalising the interest accruing on overdrawn current accounts every six months, as long as a debit balance against the customer remains due. [Yarell v. Hibernian Bank, Limited (6)].

The District Judge examined exhaustively and with the greatest care all the dealings which took place between the plaintiffs and the deceased defendant from their initiation in the year 1892 down to the making of the notes sued upon, tracing backwards from the latter to their first beginnings. And at the end of his judgment will be found under his hand a genealogical tree, as it were, of these several groups of hundis. The Chief Court did not suggest that there was any inaccuracy in the dates and figures so set out. It differed merely as to the conclusions to be drawn from them. The first transaction between the parties took place on the 18th November 1892. On that day the deceased defendant purchased on credit in the shop of Balla Mal, from the Munib in charge, lace at the price of Rs. 252-10-9. The details of this purchase have been entered in the plaintiffs' books by the deceased defendant, and by the latter signed. On the 29th of the same month he purchased from the plaintiffs goods of various character at the price of Rs. 627-15-0, which together with the earlier purchase brought his indebtedness to the plaintiffs up to the sum of Rs. 880-9-9.

As on the previous occasion the particulars of this transaction were entered by the purchaser in the appellants' books and the entries duly signed by him. From the 3rd to the 27th December 1892 the deceased defendant purchased in the like manner from the plaintiffs clothes and other articles, raising his indebtedness to them to the sum of Rs. 1,653-14-3. This account is signed by him on the 28th January 1893. No interest whatever appears up to this to have been charged upon it. On the 30th January, two days after the correctness of the account was thus acknowledged, two bonds were executed by the deceased defendant in favour of Lala Balla Mal. The first for a sum of Rs. 1,753-14-5, stated to be due under a bahi account entered in the deceased's handwriting on leaves Nos. 215 to 281, commencing from the 18th November 1892 to the 28th January 1893, the deceased agreeing to pay this sum on the 1st August following with interest at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. (per mensem presumably), and in default of payment on that date interest to be charged at Rs. 2-8-0 per mensem, i.e., Rs. 30 per cent. per annum.

The second bond contained a recital that the obligor had received from Lala Balla Mal Rs. 450 in cash and also a clause agreeing to pay this money with interest at the rate of Rs. 2-8-0 per cent. (per mensem presumably) on the 1st September then following. The bond then sets forth the fact that he had on that day executed another bond for Rs. 1,753-14-3, and provides that on the deceased's default in paying both bonds the creditor was authorised to recover in any way he liked the entire money due with interest from the obligor's personal property. In the plaintiffs' books, under date the 30th January 1892, appear two entries signed by deceased defendant setting forth accurately these two transactions.

There is not a particle of evidence in the case to show that the plaintiffs ever made any threat to or put any pressure upon the deceased defendant to induce him to execute these securities or either of them.

The deceased defendant himself never so stated, and Balla Mal, who was examined as a witness on his opponent's behalf, stated that he never made any complaint to the father of Nasir-ud-Din; that the latter was in debt to him and had omitted to pay; that he, the witness, looked upon Nasir-ud-Din as an honourable man; that the things the latter bought in his shops were for Nasir-ud-Din's family purposes, as was also the cash he borrowed; that he, the witness, never practised any fraud or undue influence upon the deceased defendant; that every time the latter executed a hundi he was in the habit of going through the accounts carefully; that all the hundis were in the deceased's own handwriting; and that whenever a hundi was renewed Nasir-ud-Din used to note on the back of the old one the fact of renewal, etc. The deceased defendant relied much in this action on his own dissolute and licentious habits, which were probably exaggerated to suit the case; but if this evidence of the plaintiff be true, and it is practically uncontradicted, he was one of the most careful, accurate, and business-like drunkards and debauchees that could be well imagined. The principal plaintiff frankly admitted that he refrained from pressing the deceased defendant for payment of the hundis given him from time to time by the latter in order that his interest might accumulate. If the deceased was solvent, or nearly solvent, and the payment of his debt was at all secure, it was a good investment of the plaintiffs' capital. There does not to their Lordships appear to have been anything rapacious or exacting in the plaintiff's procuring the execution of these bonds on the 30th January 1893 to secure the repayment of his shop debt and the sum of Rs. 450 money advanced, unless it is to be found in the rate of interest charged, Rs. 30 per cent. per annum, Rs. $2\frac{1}{2}$ per mensem. Well, the interest allowed by the Chief Court in the decree is Rs. 18 per cent. per annum, Rs. $1\frac{1}{2}$ per mensem. It only exceeds that rate by Rs. 1 per mensem; Rs. 2 per mensem is by no means an unusual rate of interest in cases from India coming before this Board. And their Lordships think that Mr. DeGruyther was fully justified in contending that if a suit had been brought immediately or some months after the 30th January 1893 to have these bonds of that date set aside on any of the grounds mentioned in the above-mentioned written statement it would have failed.

Now, as appears from the table at the end of the judgment of the District Judge and from the documents in the case, neither the principal nor interest secured by these bonds was ever paid; but on the 23rd May 1896, two years and nine months after the day by it named for payment, the 1st August 1893, the arrears of interest then due were capitalised, and a new bond as of that date for the sum of Rs. 362-9-2, bearing interest at the same rate, was executed by the deceased.

Similarly nothing was paid on foot of either the principal or interest secured by the second bond of the 30th January 1893 till the 31st July 1896. Two years and ten months after the day named for payment the interest then due, amounting to Rs. 472-8-0, was capitalised, added to the principal, and a new bond executed by Nasir-ud-Din to the principal debt, Rs. 450 and interest, making together Rs. 922-8-0, bearing interest at the same rate, Rs. 2-8-0 per cent. per mensem. This affords a fair illustration of the manner in which interest was capitalised and the debt augmented. The District Judge has found that taking the various groups of hundis as he has grouped them, that after the initial hundi for Rs. 1,000, dated the 24th January 1897, due on a book account then, first renewal was not given till the 3rd May 1900, three and a quarter years, and the second renewal now in suit was not given till the 7th October 1904, nearly four and a half years after its predecessor became due, when no doubt the overdue interest was capitalised.

The correctness of the table framed by the District Judge cannot be questioned. The documents in the case establish its correctness. It clearly shows that, so far from hundis being renewed with undue frequency, they were frequently allowed to remain overdue for periods of from two and a half to four and a half years, before a renewal was taken and the overdue interest capitalised. In some instances the period of limitation of suits on hundis was allowed to run out before any renewal was given, the debtor being thus in a position, if disposed, to refuse to renew. The District Judge having regard to these facts found that the numerous transactions, which took place between the plaintiff and the deceased defendant, including the making of the notes sued on, were not on the face of them unconscionable contracts within the meaning of section 16, sub-section (3), of the Indian Contract Act of 1872 as amended. Their Lordships concur with the learned District Judge in that conclusion. In their opinion neither the rate of interest reserved, Rs. 30 per cent. per annum, nor the capitalisation of overdue interest at intervals so lengthy as those proved by the dates of the securities themselves, nor the two combined, are sufficient to lead to a contrary conclusion.

They also concur with the learned District Judge in the second conclusion at which he has arrived, namely, that the evidence does not establish that these contracts were of an unconscionable character. The deceased defendant was undoubtedly a spendthrift of depraved and licentious habits. He undoubtedly became heavily indebted to several creditors during the years covered by the transactions dealt with in this appeal. It was legitimate to prove these facts in order to establish that he was a person of weak and debauched character, unable to resist the pressure of creditors if applied, or to resist the temptation to borrow money recklessly to gratify his lusts; but it was wholly illegitimate to give any evidence as to the terms on which he succeeded in compromising with creditors other than the plaintiffs. From what appears, it may well have been that these other creditors were rather tricked into making easy settlements by their belief in the representations made that the father of the deceased was either a less wealthy man than, in fact, he was, or that he had disposed of his property, as he was entitled to do, by gift inter vivos. The plaintiff, Balla Mal, heard that the defendant's father had done this, but he considered that it was a mere fictitious thing, done to defraud creditors, and paid no attention to it.

It has already been pointed out that there is no evidence, whatever that the plaintiffs ever sought, by threat or otherwise, to induce or coerce the deceased defendant to give them any of the securities which he actually gave. Nor is there any satisfactory proof that, though the deceased defendant may have been extravagant and have spent more than he should have done, he was in necessitous circumstances when he commenced dealing with the plaintiff Balla Mal, or that he was in pecuniary distress in consequence of the importunities or pressure of creditors, or that it was to meet the claims of such creditors he borrowed money or bought goods on credit from the plaintiff. On the contrary, it would rather appear from the deceased defendant's own evidence that he borrowed this money from, and incurred these debts to, the plaintiff in order to procure the means of feeding his own vices.

The learned District Judge accordingly held that, even on the assumption that the plaintiff Balla Mal was in a position to dominate the will of the deceased defendant, he did not, to use the words of section 16 of the Contract Act as amended, use that position to obtain an unfair advantage over the deceased by extorting from him unconscionable bargains or otherwise, and that the deceased defendant had utterly failed to prove, as he was bound to do, that the plaintiff Balla Mal had in fact exercised undue influence upon him in any of the transactions out of which his liability for the debt sued for ultimately resulted.

Their Lordships concur with the learned District Judge as to all these conclusions, and, therefore, it is for the purpose of this appeal unnecessary for them to determine whether the plaintiff Balla Mal in fact occupied a position to dominate the will of the deceased defendant at all within the meaning of the Statute. The District Judge did not hold that the plaintiff had acquired that position by reason of his being the latter's creditor to a large amount, holding various negotiable securities given by the defendant which almost at any time he might have put in suit. On the contrary, the learned Judge expressly held that there was nothing to suggest that the plaintiff Balla Mal and the deceased defendant as to all the aforesaid transactions did not in this regard contract with one another on perfectly equal terms, in which latter conclusion their Lordships concur. But the learned Judge went on to decide—

1. That the deceased defendant was in the position of an expectant heir within the meaning of the decision in Earl of Chesterfield v. Janssen (7) and the authorities following it;
2. That the said plaintiff dealt with him on the strength of that expectancy;
3. That a person so doing would be in a position to dominate the will of the expectant heir within the meaning of section 16, sub-section 1, of the Indian Contract Act of 1872 as amended; and

CUNNIAH MUDALI v. RANGASWAMI MUDALI.

4. As their Lordships understand his judgment, that the burden is by this Statute thrown upon the person occupying this position to show that he has not used it to obtain an unfair advantage over the expectant heir with whom he so deals.

The Chief Court concur with the learned District Judge on each of these points. Where they differ from him is apparently in this: that while he holds that the plaintiff Balla Mal has discharged this burden, else he should have pronounced a decree against the plaintiff's claim instead of in its favour as he has done, the Chief Court hold that Balla Mal has failed to discharge the burden. That Court, however, appears to base its decision mainly, if not entirely, on the high rate of the interest received by the notes, Rs. 30 per cent, coupled with the great augmentation of the deceased defendant's debt due to the capitalisation of interest. For the reasons already given, their Lordships disagree with the conclusion of the Chief Court on this latter point and concur with the District Judge. So that whether their Lordships concur with the District Judge on these points (1), (2) and (3) or not, since they concur with him upon point (4), the result of the appeal would be the same.

On the whole, therefore, their Lordships are of opinion, for the reasons already given, that the judgment appealed from was erroneous and should be reversed, that the judgment of the Judge of the District Court was right and should be restored, and that this appeal should be allowed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The respondents must pay the costs of the appellants in the Chief Court, and the costs of this appeal.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for partition. The plaintiff and the 1st defendant are the sons of one Cunniah Mudali and the 2nd and 3rd defendants are the sons of the 1st defendant. When the suit first came on for hearing, the learned Judge referred the question regarding the extent of the family property to a Commissioner. The Commissioner sent in his report in April. Mr. Justice Wallis, as he then was, differed from the Commissioner on one point, namely, that the Royapettah garden which was held to belong to the wife of the 1st defendant by the Commissioner was family property. The learned Judge passed a preliminary decree to the effect that the Royapettah garden should go to the plaintiff on his paying Rs. 600 to defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and that items Nos. 1 to 3 should go to the 1st to 3rd defendants, who were ordered to pay to the plaintiff a sum of Rs 3,800 and odd within a month. There was a further direction that if the said sum of Rs. 3,800 and odd was not paid in a month, the plaintiff was to become absolute owner of items Nos. 1

AKBAR HUSSAIN v. KARM DAD.

3. There was an appeal against this preliminary decree, which was not decided until two years after. In the meantime a final decree in pursuance of the preliminary decree was passed. As the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 did not pay the money within the time stipulated, the plaintiff was put in possession of items Nos. 1 to 3 as absolute owner thereof.

The appeal against the preliminary decree was disposed of on the 9th of September 1912. The appellate decree varied the preliminary decree by declaring that the Royapettah garden was the property of the 1st defendant's wife and that it was not part of the family property. As a result of this pronouncement, application was made by the 1st defendant for restitution of the garden to the wife. Thereupon Mr. Justice Bakewell, before whom the application was made, came to the conclusion that the original final decree passed on the footing of the preliminary decree should be revised and that a fresh final decree should be passed. It is against this direction of the learned Judge that this appeal has been preferred.

We think the course adopted by the learned Judge is right. Section 97 of the Civil Procedure Code makes it incumbent upon the parties to appeal against the preliminary decree. Under what circumstances such an appeal should be preferred has been pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Ahmed Musaji Saleji v. Hashim Ebrahim Saleji (1). In the present case, by the passing of the decree in appeal, the original partition has become infructuous. The equalisation as to value was dependent upon the view that the Royapettah garden belonged to the family. When that view was upset in appeal, it became necessary that there should be a fresh partition. Consequently the final decree passed by Mr. Justice Wallis can no longer remain in force. It was pointed out in Lakshmi v. Marudevi (2) and in Ramien v. Veerappudian (3) that, if a preliminary decree is reversed on appeal, the final decree passed on the footing of that preliminary decree ceased to be operative. We think the same result would follow in cases of modifications of the preliminary decree which imperilled the original final decree. In our opinion, the result of the appeal was to imperil the final decree based on the preliminary decree. The principle of the decisions of Jenkins, C. J., and Mookerjee, J., in Nistarinee Dabee v. Rai Mohun Biswas (4) and Abdul Jalil v. Amar Chand Paul (5) and of the decision in Wahidunnissa v. Dip Narain Pershad (6) are applicable to the present case. We must, therefore, uphold the order of Mr. Justice Bakewell. There has been great delay on the part of the respondents Nos. 1 to 3. We do not think they are entitled to their costs in this appeal. The other costs have been provided for by the learned Judge and we agree with his directions. We dismiss the appeal.

JUDGMENT.

CHEVIS, J. (March 28, 1918.)—The facts of this case are as follows:—The plaintiff is the tenant, the defendants are the landlords. In May or June 1915 the defendants dispossessed the plaintiff, who sued to recover possession and obtained a decree on 8th May 1916. Later on, more than a year after his dispossession, he brought the present claim, which is one for compensation in the Civil Court. The Civil Court held that the suit was one falling under sections 14 and 77 (3) (n) of the Tenancy Act, and returned the plaint for presentation to the Revenue Court. The Revenue Court dismissed the suit as barred by limitation, it having been brought after the expiry of the period of one year from the date of dispossession, see section 50 of the Tenancy Act. The plaintiff appealed to the Collector, who remarked that the issue whether the case was cognizable by the Revenue Court had not been decided, and that the suit did not fall under section 77 (3) (g), as it had not been brought within one year of dispossession as required by section 50. So the Collector referred the case to the Chief Court through the Commissioner.

In the first place I would note that, the reference being under section 100 of the Act, and not under section 99, the Collector could have made the reference to this Court direct, and not through the Commissioner.

Next I would note that in my opinion the Civil Court erred in holding that the suit was one falling under section 14. This is not a suit for payment for the use or occupation of land, but for compensation for dispossession. Further, though in certain cases it may be said that the person immediately entitled to the use and occupation of the land is the "landlord" with respect to the person occupying land without his consent, [vide Ghuna Mal v. Jhanda Singh (1)],

I do not think that in a suit where the plaintiff is the tenant and the landlord is the defendant, we can possibly twist matters round so as to regard the claim as one by the landlord against mere trespassers.

But the real question in this case is whether after the expiry of the one year within which a dispossessed tenant can bring a suit under section 50 he can still bring a suit in the Civil Court. His remedy in the Revenue Court is time-barred; what we have to decide is whether he has any other remedy left. According to Imam Din v. Feroz Khan (2), he can still sue in the Civil Court within the period of limitation laid down by the Limitation Act (12 years in the case of a suit to recover possession of the land, 3 years in the case of a suit for compensation). If this be the correct view, then the Civil Court was wrong in returning the plaint to the Revenue Court and the Revenue Court should have detected the error of the Civil Court and should have followed the course laid down in Kure v. Ghisa (3), i.e., it should have made a reference to this Court under section 99 with a view to obtaining a final decision on the question of jurisdiction. The plaintiff's remedy is obviously barred, so far as the Revenue Courts are concerned, but if he still has a remedy open to him in the Civil Courts, I do not think any Court should dismiss his claim as time-barred; all that should be done is to refer him to the proper Court. In my opinion there can only be one period of limitation for any particular suit, and if it be correct law to say that for one year the Revenue Court has jurisdiction and after that jurisdiction is transferred to the Civil Court, I would hold that the proper course for a Revenue Court, on finding that the case before it has been brought after the expiry of the one year, is to refuse to exercise jurisdiction, and not to decide the legal issue of limitation. If a Court never had jurisdiction or has ceased to have jurisdiction, I do not see how it can decide any issues.

Turning now to Imam Din v. Feroz Khan (2), I think the reasons there given for holding that after the year allowed by section 50 for bringing a suit in the Revenue Court has expired the dispossessed tenant may still bring a suit in the Civil Court, may briefly be said to be that a tenant is still regarded as a tenant for the period of one year from the date of his dispossession and no longer, and that after the expiry of the year the late tenant being no longer a tenant the suit cannot be regarded as a suit between tenant and landlord, and so the cognizance of the Civil Courts is no longer excluded. The learned Judges quote from the opinion expressed by Sir Meredyth Plowden in Kesar Singh v. Nihal Singh (4), viz., "Ordinarily, then, a tenant is a person who has a right to hold, and does hold, and the person described in section 50 is a tenant only by an exceptional use of the term tenant, and only, as it seems to me during the period prescribed for bringing the special suit granted to him by section 50, and for the purpose of exercising this right to sue." So the right to sue in the Civil Court after the expiry of the year is allowed on the ground that after the expiry of the year the claimant is no longer a tenant. It seems to me obvious that this line of argument cannot apply to the present suit, for the plaintiff before us has actually recovered possession of the land and was undoubtedly a tenant at the time when the present suit was instituted. If the tenant is to be regarded as still a tenant for the period of one year from the date of his dispossession then, since the plaintiff recovered possession within the year, he never ceased to be tenant, and the present suit must, in my opinion, be regarded as one between tenant and landlord. Thus the present case seems to me clearly distinguishable from the cases dealt with in the Full Bench ruling in Kesar Singh v. Nihal Singh (4) and in Imam Din v. Feroz Khan (2), and I would hold that the present suit being one between landlord and tenant the cognizance of the Civil Courts is barred by section 77 of the Act, and the suit has rightly been entertained by the Revenue Court.

I regret, however, that I cannot express my assent to the proposition that a tenant is still to be regarded as a tenant for the space of one year and no more from the date of his dispossession, and that after the year mentioned in section 50 a dispossessed tenant can still sue in the Civil Court. I am aware that in writing this I am disagreeing with what has been held in a Bench ruling in Imam Din v. Feroz Khan (2), but at the same time I note that all that was then decided was that a suit brought after the year by an ex tenant who had not sued within the year allowed by section 50 was not a suit falling under section 77 (3) (i) of the Tenancy Act and was not cognizable by a Revenue Court. The Bench refrained from deciding whether a man who had lost his remedy in the Revenue Court had still a remedy left, viz., a right to sue in a Civil Court. With all due respect I wish to express my opinion as to the position of a tenant who has been dispossessed.

Section 4 of the Act defines a tenant as a person who holds land under another, but the definition is subject to the reservation "unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context." In section 50 we read of tenants who have been dispossessed or ejected from their tenancy. It seems to me that in this section we must regard the word "tenant" as meaning a person who formerly held land under another, in other words, an ex tenant. Now why an ex tenant should cease to be regarded as such at the end of one year I cannot understand. In my opinion the expiry of the year simply stops his right to bring a suit, but in no way changes his status; from the very date of his dispossession his status is simply that of a person formerly holding land who has been dispossessed, and I cannot see that this description became inapplicable to him after the expiry of the year. Sir Meredyth Plowden speaks of the tenant as being "regarded by the Act as continuing to hold the land of his tenancy after dispossession." I should, however, prefer to say that, though the word "tenant" generally means a person holding land, the word as used in section 50 merely means a person who formerly held it. The same learned Judge also refers to section 51 of the Act, and reading it jointly with section 50, is of opinion that the latter section gives a summary remedy to the dispossessed tenant instead of that given by section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, but that if the ex-tenant does not avail himself of this remedy, he can still later on bring a regular suit in the Civil Court. But in a suit to recover possession under section 50 the plaintiff has to prove more than in a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act; it is not enough merely to prove dispossession, he must also prove a right to recover possession, just as he would have to prove in a regular suit in the Civil Court, and so I fail to see how section 50 can be said to provide a "summary" remedy..

(4) 45 P. R. 1891 (F. B.).

AKBAR HUSSAIN V. KARM DAD.

Either section 50 combined with section 77 lays down the sole remedies open to a dispossessed tenant excluding the cognizance of the Civil Courts, and laying down a period of limitation, or else it lays down a remedy excluding the cognizance of the Civil Courts for one year only leaving it open to the plaintiff to sue in the Civil Court after the expiry of that year. Now reading the Tenancy Act as a whole, that Act seems to me, when dealing with suits and applications, to mark off certain classes of suits and applications as cognizable only by Revenue Officers or Revenue Courts. The cognizance of Civil Courts in all such cases is jealously excluded, see sections 76 (1) and 77 (3) of the Act. Certain matters are to be dealt with by Revenue Officers, and no Court is to take cognizance of any dispute or matter with respect to which any such application or proceeding might be made or had. Certain suits are to be heard and determined by Revenue Courts, and no other Court is to take cognizance of any dispute or matter with respect to which any such suit might be instituted. Thus certain suits, including suits under section 50, are carefully fenced off from the Civil Courts. It seems to me most unlikely that in such circumstances the Legislature could ever have contemplated that because section 50 provides for institution of suits within one year, a suit which would otherwise have fallen under section 50 should at the end of a year become entertainable by a Civil Court. What I think was intended by section 50 was that the remedy was provided and the period of limitation also laid down. If a tenant is to get the full period of limitation allowed by the Limitation Act, what possible object can there be in giving jurisdiction to one class of Courts for the first year only and after that shifting the cognizance to another class of Courts? If the subject is one which is to be excluded from the cognizance of the Civil Courts at all, why not keep jurisdiction with the Revenue Courts for the full period of limitation? If the Revenue Court is for any reason better fitted to deal with the case than the Civil Court during the first year, what change occurs at the end of that year which renders it necessary or advisable to take away the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court and restore that of the Civil Courts? Surely the question of jurisdiction should ordinarily depend on the nature of the suit, and not on the length of time that has elapsed since the cause of action arose. And to hold that after the first year cognizance changes from the Revenue to the Civil Court means that the plaintiff is at liberty to choose his forum. This too can surely not have been intended. It appears to me that the Legislature intended that certain classes of suits should be heard by Revenue Courts, presided over by officers who had training and experience of revenue matters; this intention would be entirely frustrated if simply by waiting for a year the plaintiff could bring his suit in a Civil Court presided over by an officer who had possibly never had any experience in all his service of revenue matters, thus evading the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts presided over by revenue experts.

It may be argued that the Legislature could not have intended thus to curtail the ordinary period of limitation in the case of dispossessed tenants. But there are similar provisions in other Tenancy Acts. The C. P. Tenancy Act allows only two years for a dispossessed tenant-at-will to recover possession. The Bengal Tenancy Act allows the same period in the case of dispossessed occupancy raiyats. In Ramdhan Bhadra v. Ramkumar Dey (5) we read: "It may seem somewhat remarkable that...the Legislature intended to curtail greatly to the disadvantage of the raiyat the period of limitation from 12 years to 2 years.....but what we have to do is simply to administer the law as we find it." The same judgment also refers to the proceedings of the Select Committee to which the Bengal Tenancy Bill was referred for consideration, and from those proceedings it would appear that the C. P. Tenancy Act was followed and limitation was intentionally cut down.

Then turning to the N.-W. P. Rent Act we find a period of six months laid down within which a dispossessed tenant must apply to the Revenue Courts for recovery of possession or for compensation for wrongful dispossession, the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts being barred (see sections 95 and 96 of the Act). A case occurred in which a dispossessed tenant who had not applied to the Revenue Court within the prescribed period subsequently took forcible possession. On a suit by the landlords to eject him as a trespasser it was held that he had lost his right to plead his status as a tenant. See Dalip Rai v. Deoki Rai (6), upheld on appeal in Dalip Rai v. Deoki Rai (7). In these judgments it seems to have been taken as a matter beyond dispute that at the end of the six months the defendant had no remedy by suit in a Civil Court. On page 205* of the latter judgment we read, "the position of the defendant when he obtained possession in 1895 was this. On the one hand he had clearly no remedy by legal proceedings. By virtue of the opening words of section 95 of the Rent Act he never had any remedy in a Civil Court. His only remedy in a Revenue Court, namely, an application under section 95 (a) was barred by section 96 (e)." It is pointed out by Blair, J., in his judgment in Dalip Rai v. Deoki Rai (6) that to allow the defendant to plead his title as a tenant would be to allow him by his own laches to oust the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court and set up the jurisdiction of the Civil Court in relation to a matter which, if the subject of contention, could have been brought only in the Revenue Court within a period of six months."

In conclusion I would express my indebtedness to the able commentary to be found on pages 74 to 77 of the late Rai Bahadur Sukh Dyal's Punjab Tenancy Act, 4th Edition. The learned commentator is of opinion that if Sir Meredyth Plowden's opinion be correct, there is nothing to prevent a tenant who has sued unsuccessfully within the year in the Revenue Court from bringing another suit after the expiry of the year in the Civil Court. But whether a second suit would be barred by the law of res judicata is, I think, an arguable point.

I would hold that such a suit as the present, whether brought within or after the year of limitation laid down in section 50, falls under section 77 (3) (g) and is cognizable only by the Revenue Courts, and that the present suit has rightly been entertained by the Revenue Court. I think the case should be returned to the Collector for decision of the appeal in due course.

LE ROSSIGNOL, J.—(April 2, 1918.)—I agree generally with what my learned brother Chevis has written. With all respect, I hold that the attempt to establish an analogy between the provisions of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act and section 50 of the Punjab Tenancy Act fails.

The period of limitation for a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act is six months only, a period which in the opinion of many should suffer curtailment, and no appeal lies from a decree passed in such a suit. The period for a suit by an alleged improperly dispossessed tenant on the other hand is one whole year and the decree is subject to appeal and revision. There appears to me to be nothing common in the nature of the two suits.

I agree with my learned brother that it is absurd to suppose that the Legislature intended to give an ex-tenant a remedy in the Revenue Courts for one year and to permit him after the expiry of that period to have recourse to the Civil Courts.

Section 77 (3) of the Tenancy Act seems to me to be quite clear and imperative and to decide this question, we have no need to look outside it.

It runs:—"The following suits shall be... heard and determined by Revenue Courts

and, no other Court shall take cognizance of any dispute or matter with respect to which any such suit might be instituted." In other words, if the evicted tenant has a remedy in the Revenue Courts and neglects to avail himself of that remedy, he shall have none in any other Court. Section 77 (3) (g) and (i) appear to me to cover all conceivable causes of litigation between a landlord and his tenant qua tenant. My conclusion is that an ex-tenant in that capacity can look for no relief outside the Revenue Courts and that the Civil Courts can hear his plaint only if he sets forth a claim to relief in a capacity other than that of ex-tenant.

I concur that the suit was correctly entertained and heard by the Revenue Court.

SHAH DIN, J.—(April 6, 1918).—The question involved in this reference is not free from difficulty, and there is much force in the reasoning employed by Sir Meredyth Plowden in his referring order in the Full Bench case reported as Kesar Singh v. Nihal Singh (4), in support of the opinion tentatively expressed by him that if a wrongfully dispossessed tenant does not sue in a Revenue Court for recovery of possession within the period of one year prescribed by section 50 read with section 77 (3) (g) of the Punjab Tenancy Act, he can still avail himself of his ordinary remedy in a Civil Court and can bring a suit for recovery of possession within 12 years of the date of his dispossession (pages 243 and 244 of the report). But regard being had to the general scheme of the Punjab Tenancy Act and to the policy underlying section 77 of it, I think that it was the intention of the Legislature to take away the jurisdiction of a Civil Court in regard to a suit contemplated by section 50 and section 77 (3) (g) aforesaid and also to cut down the period of limitation which, had the dispossessed tenant been allowed to sue in a Civil Court for recovery of possession of his tenancy or for compensation for wrongful ejection, would have been available to him under the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act. Any opinion even tentatively expressed by that eminent Judge, Sir Meredyth Plowden, is entitled to very great weight, but with all due deference I find myself unable to subscribe to his view that the real object of section 50 was "to substitute a summary remedy to the wrongfully dispossessed tenant for recovery of possession instead of that given with a shorter period of limitation by section 9 of the Specific Relief Act." Section 51 of the Act expressly takes away, in the case of a dispossessed tenant, the remedy given by section 9 of the Specific Relief Act; but it does not follow that because the summary remedy provided by section 9 of the Specific Relief Act is so taken away by section 51, the object of section 50 is to substitute another "summary remedy" to the wrongfully dispossessed tenant with a longer period of limitation than would have been available to him under section 9 aforesaid.

After a careful consideration of the provisions of sections 50, 51 and 77 (3) (g) of the Punjab Tenancy Act by the light of the general policy underlying them as regards the substitution of the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts for that of the Civil Courts in matters which fall peculiarly within the cognizance of the former, I am of opinion that a tenant who has been wrongfully dispossessed of his tenancy, in the circumstances mentioned in section 50 of the Act, can institute a suit for recovery of possession or for compensation or for both only in a Revenue Court under section 77 (3) (g), and that the period of limitation within which such a suit can be brought is, as laid down in section 50, one year from the date of his dispossession. If he allows the period of one year prescribed by section 50 to expire without bringing a suit in the Revenue Court he loses his remedy altogether, and by the combined operation of section 50 and section 77 (3) (g) is debarred from bringing a suit for recovery of possession or for compensation or for both in a Civil Court. In other words, a Civil Court has no jurisdiction at all to hear and determine a suit instituted by a tenant who has been wrongfully dispossessed of his tenancy, and the sole remedy open to such tenant for recovery of possession or for compensation for wrongful dispossession or for both is a suit in a Revenue Court which he must institute within one year from the date of his ejection.

For the foregoing reasons my answer to the reference is that the plaintiff's suit was cognizable only by a Revenue Court, and not by a Civil Court, and that the Revenue Court had full jurisdiction to hear and determine it. In my opinion Ghuna Mal v. Jhanda Singh (1) was wrongly decided and should be overruled.

Answer accordingly.

CIVIL REVISION No. 50 OF 1918.

June 29, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ryves.

BEHARI LAL—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—

versus

BALDEO NARAIN AND OTHERS—

DECEEN-HOLDERS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. III, r. 4, O. XXI, r. 89, O. XXXII, r. 5—Revision—High Court, power of interference of—Execution—Application to set aside sale on behalf of minor—Pleader, appointment of—Vakalatnama, defect in, effect of.

Under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code the High Court is competent to revise a conclusion of law or of fact which bears on a question of jurisdiction. [p. 15, col. 2.]

In execution of a simple money decree passed against a minor, a house belonging to the minor was attached and advertised for sale. An application asking for an adjournment of the sale was put in by a Vakil appointed by the guardian of the minor, but the vakalatnama did not state that the guardian was executing it as such. An affidavit was filed by the guardian along with the application. The Court adjourned the sale and on the adjourned date the property was sold to a stranger. Thereupon the same Vakil purporting to act on behalf of the minor filed an application under Order XXI, rule 89, of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside the sale. The Court rejected the application on the ground that it was not filed by the guardian or by a properly appointed Vakil:

Held, (1) that the application was in order inasmuch as it had been filed by a Vakil appointed by the guardian of the minor; [p. 16, col. 2.]

(2) that the refusal of the Court to entertain the application amounted to a refusal to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it and that, therefore, the High Court was entitled to interfere in revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 15, col. 2; p. 16, col. 1.]

Civil revision from an order of the District Judge, Allahabad.

Messrs. Motilal Nehru and Radha Kant Malaviya, for the Applicant.

Mr. W. Wallach, Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, Mr. Ibn Ahmad, the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Sital Prasad Ghosh, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this application arises are admitted. A suit was filed against a minor, Behari Lal, under the guardianship of his brother, Gaya Prasad, and a simple money decree was passed against him for a sum of Rs. 238-15-0. In execution of that decree, house property belonging to the minor was attached and advertised for sale. The sale was fixed for the 14th April 1917. On the 18th of April 1917, an application was made by Gaya Prasad, as guardian of the minor, asking for the adjournment of the sale. The application was put in by a Vakil of the Court under a vakalatnama executed by Gaya Prasad. In the body of the vakalatnama which is a printed document, and which is usually filed in by the Vakil himself or his clerk, the name of Gaya Prasad was not entered. The document reads "I appoint" so and so. It was executed by Gaya Prasad. Of this there is no question, but he did not add that he was executing it as the guardian of the minor. Along with this application there was filed an affidavit by Gaya Prasad. Taking the two together it was quite obvious that the application for adjournment was being made by him as guardian of the minor through the Vakil whom he had appointed to act for him. The Court accepted the application to this extent that it granted an adjournment of the sale for six days and the 20th of April 1917 was fixed. On that date the sale was held and the property was knocked down to an outsider, i. e., to a person who was no party to the suit, for a sum of Rs. 180, the opposite party here. It is admitted that the property was worth a very great deal more than what it was knocked down for. On the 4th May 1917, an application was made under Order XXI, rule 89, by the same Vakil. It purported to be tendered on behalf of the minor. The proper amount had been paid into Court within the time allowed and the application must have been accepted by the Court and the sale set aside unless the application was not in order. The Court of first instance rejected the application in these terms:—"This application under rule 89, Order XXI, of the Code of Civil Procedure has been presented by the applicant who is a minor and it is not presented by a next friend. The minor's application was filed through a Pleader who does not appear to have been retained by him, vide the vakalatnama. The application is against the provisions of rule 5 (1), Order XXXII, of the Code of Civil Procedure and is also vague. No order can legally be passed on it without the minor being represented by a next friend. I, therefore, reject this application with costs." That is the order really in question here. The lower Court found, and rightly found, that the application in itself was not vague and that it entirely complied with Order XXI, rule 89, but it held substantially for the same reason as the first Court that the application had not been properly presented on behalf of the minor, and rejected the application. From this order no appeal lies to this Court; hence an application in revision.

Two arguments are raised against my interfering. First of all it is said, on the authority of Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (1), and three recent rulings of this Court, reported as Fazal Rab v. Manzur Ahmad (2), Jhunku Lal v. Bisheshar Das (3) and Jwala Prasad v. East Indian Railway Co. (4), that this Court has no power to interfere. It is said that the lower Court had jurisdiction to go wrong and assuming it did go wrong, that decision is final. Secondly, it is argued on the merits that the decision on the point of law is correct. It seems to me that, put in plain language, the Court declined to hear the applicant. It declined to hear the minor himself because of his minority, and declined to hear the Pleader because of a supposed defect in his vakalanama. It seems to me that if the Court was wrong in its reasons for not hearing the Pleader and, therefore, not accepting the application, it declined to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it, or at least acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction. There is one passage in the judgment of the Privy Council report [Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva

Aiyar (1)] which, read by itself, and separated from the context and read without consideration of the facts of that case, does support the objection of the opposite party. It is the sentence which is reported at page 799* and runs as follows:—"It will be observed that the section (115) applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise or non-exercise of it or the illegal assumption of it." But the judgment does not end there, it goes on to say:—"The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved, and if the appellant's contention be correct, then, if the Civil Court should absolutely and whimsically decline to exercise its jurisdiction and refuse to make any orders as to the filling up of vacancies, no matter how many existed, there would not, in a case such as the present, be any remedy available under this section and no appeal would lie." In that case the District Judge, purporting to act under a particular section of a particular Act, construing the section as he did, held that he had jurisdiction to pass a particular order, and passed it. Objection was taken to this order before the successor of the District Judge on the ground that the former District Judge had no jurisdiction to pass it. The Court held that he had. An application was then made to the High Court of Madras in revision, and it was argued that the High Court had no power to interfere, one argument being that the decision of the Court below was at the most a wrong decision on a point of law. The High Court repelled this objection and did interfere in revision, and the Privy Council upheld its decision. It seems to me what the Privy Council case decided was that the section (115 of the Code of Civil Procedure) is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved. (I think the words which I have italicised are most important.) It seems to me to follow from this that where a question of jurisdiction is involved, this Court is competent to revise a conclusion of law or fact which bears on a question of jurisdiction. In the case before me it seems to me that on the point of law decided, a question of jurisdiction is involved, therefore, I think I have jurisdiction to consider that point on the merits.

Three recent cases of this Court, however, are quoted in support of the objection. The first case is that of Fazal Rab v. Manzur Ahmad (2). On the face of it, that case looks very like the present case, but there the only point decided was that payment of money into the Treasury was not a payment into Court within the meaning of rule 89, Order XXI, and this Court held that, if that decision was a wrong one, it could not be set aside in revision. There no question of jurisdiction was involved. In the next case, at page 499* of the same Volume, also no question of jurisdiction was involved. In the last case, to which I was a party, a question of jurisdiction was involved. The case was decided only a very short time ago and I remember perfectly well that we did go into the merits and were satisfied that the order of the Courts below, in returning the plaint, was a proper order and one which the Courts had jurisdiction to pass and should have passed. That case, therefore, in my opinion is not a helping guide. In that case no authorities were cited. I must confess that I had not then studied the Privy Council case in Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (1) as carefully as I have since done, and I am inclined to think that perhaps the judgment was expressed unnecessarily broadly. It seems to me on full consideration that the Privy Council case gives me jurisdiction to go into the merits of the decision in this case on the point of law involved.

There is one other aspect of the case which I think should not be lost sight of. The defects, if any, in the application or the power-of-attorney were purely technical, and seeing that the property of a minor was at stake, I think that if the Court had doubts, it would have been well advised to have called evidence and ascertained whether the guardian had in fact authorized the Vakil to make the application. I do not, however, base my judgment on this consideration, though in my opinion it has weight.

On the merits—the application of the 4th of May 1917 purported, as I have said, to be made by the Vakil on behalf of the minor. There was no fresh vakalatnama, it is admitted, executed by the guardian of the minor authorizing the vakil specifically to file this application. It seems to me that no new vakalatnama was required for this particular application. The Vakil had been appointed by Gaya Prasad to appear for the minor in a former stage of the litigation and also to put in the application of the 13th of April, asking for an adjournment of the sale in these very execution proceedings. If that appointment was a good appointment, then it seems to me that it was still in force under Order III, rule 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But it is argued that the vakalatnama executed by Gaya Prasad was not valid for two reasons. One that the clerk of the Vakil or somebody should have recorded in the body of the application, for a second time, the statement that it was Gaya Prasad who was making the appointment, and as guardian of the minor. As the vakalatnama runs, Gaya Prasad and no one else was making the appointment. It says so. "I.....appoint", and although that vakalatnama was executed by Gaya Prasad, it is said to be invalid as there was no statement in it to the effect that Gaya Prasad executed it as "guardian of the minor" or some such words. This seems to me a very technical objection. Except as guardian of the minor he had nothing whatever to do with the suit or the proceedings in execution. I have already said, he himself came into Court and made the application for the stay of the sale on the 13th April, and put in an affidavit. The application showed that he had appointed the Vakil to act for the minor of whom he, Gaya Prasad, was the guardian. It seems to me, therefore, that the application of the 4th of May was in order, and that the Court has failed to exercise its jurisdiction in not accepting it because it came to a wrong decision on a point of law. Undoubtedly if it had decided as, I think, it should have decided, it should have accepted the application. I, therefore, setting aside the order of the Court below, pass the order which, I think, it should have passed, i. e., I direct that the money paid into Court be made over to the purchaser and the sale be set aside. The applicant will have his costs throughout.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 16—Undue influence—Karinda, whether dominates will of employer—Interest, high rate of—Court, power of, to reduce rate.

Apart from the Usurious Loans Act the mere fact that a bargain is unconscionable, in the sense that the rate of interest charged is excessive, is not in itself a sufficient ground for interference by the Court. [p. 17, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeals from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 1st July 1916.

Mr. John Jackson and Babu Ohhote Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. C. Dutt, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These two cross-appeals arise out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs Dalpat Singh, Mathura Singh and Mangli on the basis of three deeds of simple mortgage executed by Haidar Ali Beg, the father of the first four defendants. The rate of interest in each case was 2 per cent. per mensem compound interest with six monthly rests. The learned Subordinate Judge has reduced this to 24 per cent. per annum simple interest on two grounds:—

(1) that the debtor was in the hands of the plaintiffs who could dominate his will and that the plaintiffs, therefore, imposed their own terms, and

(2) that compound interest at 2 per cent. per mensem is a monstrous rate and is by itself sufficient evidence of the fact that the contract is hard and unconscionable and cannot be enforced.

The plaintiffs appeal against reduction of interest. The defendants have filed a cross-appeal asking that the interest should be still further reduced.

It is now well established that apart from the recent Usurious Loans Act the mere fact that a bargain is unconscionable, in the sense that the rate of interest charged is excessive, is not in itself a sufficient ground for interference. Here the rate of interest though high is by no means unprecedented, and it is admitted that the same rate of interest has been charged in previous transactions between the parties. The bonds in suit were executed partly in lieu of previous bonds bearing the same rate of interest.

The learned Subordinate Judge's finding as to undue influence is difficult to follow. In view of the fact that in the course of the proceedings it was distinctly admitted by the first defendant through his Pleader that he did not plead that execution of the deeds in suit was procured by undue influence and in fact no issue of undue influence was framed (The other representatives of the mortgagor were absent and put in no defence.) The first defendant had put forward certain pleas in his written statement, paragraphs 12 and 13, which look like a plea of undue influence under section 16 of the Contract Act. He was asked by the predecessor in-office of the Subordinate Judge who decided the suit to clear up this pleading and did so as stated above. Immediately afterwards on the same date the issues were framed and no issue under section 16 of the Contract Act was drawn up. The issues were:—

1. Whether the mortgage-deeds were genuine and for consideration?
2. Whether the terms relating to interest were hard and unconscionable; and
3. Whether the plaintiffs were entitled to all the interest claimed.

There was a fourth issue relating to certain prior mortgagees with which we are not now concerned. It is clear that the Court treated the question whether the terms as regards interest were hard and unconscionable as distinct from the question whether the execution of the documents had been procured by undue influence. The learned Subordinate Judge who decided the case has done the same, where he holds that the rate of interest charged is by itself sufficient to render the contract unenforceable.

In view of the fact that the plea of undue influence had been withdrawn and that no issue had been framed upon it, it was not open to the learned Subordinate Judge to set aside the terms of the contract on this ground. Even if it had been open to him, the evidence falls very far short of establishing undue influence within the meaning of section 16 of the Contract Act. The defendants adduced no evidence whatever on this point. The only evidence on which the Subordinate Judge relies is a statement of the principal defendant Ahmad Shah, who was called as a witness for the plaintiffs on another matter, and statements of two attesting witnesses Maiku Lal and Girja Dayal, whom the plaintiffs were obliged to call but who, being for obvious reasons on the side of the defendants, were desirous of doing the plaintiffs' case as much harm as they could. The two latter declared that the deceased debtor used to take opium and that Dalpat Singh was a karinda of the deceased who used to repose great confidence in him. A karinda is as a rule a servant of very minor status, who could not be presumed without very distinct evidence on the point to be in a position to dominate the will of his employer. As for the statements of the defendant the stamp of falsehood is written large upon them. He would have us believe that the plaintiffs had full control over his father's estate, could make him do what they liked and were practically talukdars. They are said to have the sole charge of the books of account and it is stated that the deceased never saw them. When challenged, the defendant could not produce a lease or account or a single scrap of paper relating to the estate in the handwriting of the plaintiffs. Two of the plaintiffs were examined as witnesses and they emphatically denied the defendant's story and there was hardly any cross-examination directed to show that they were in a position to, far less that they ever did, dominate the will of Haidar Ali Beg.

The lower Court's finding cannot be supported. We allow the plaintiffs' appeal and restore the contractual rate of interest up to the date fixed for payment, though in view of the very large sum claimed as interest we think it equitable to direct that the parties should bear their own costs in his Court. In the lower Court the plaintiffs will have their costs. For the reasons already given the defendants' cross-appeal fails and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 116—Construction of document—Sale-deed—Covenant, of indemnity, breach of—Suit for damages—Limitation.

A sale-deed recited that the property was sold free from all debts or liabilities, and contained a covenant that in the event of the vendees having to pay some excess amount, that is to say, some further charge over and above the sale consideration set forth in the deed, the estate of the vendor would be liable to make it good together with damages and costs. It subsequently transpired that the property was subject to a mortgage and on the basis of that mortgage a decree was passed against the vendees along with the original mortgagor. In order to save the property from sale under that decree, the vendees had to pay up the mortgage money along with interest and costs. They then sued their vendor to recover the sum paid by them under the mortgage decree:

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to rely upon the covenant contained in the deed as a covenant of indemnity and to bring a suit upon it, the limitation for which began to run from the date on which they suffered actual loss by reason of their being compelled to pay off the prior mortgage charge. JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit which, as brought, was a suit for damages on account of the breach of a covenant of indemnity contained in a sale-deed of the 4th of July 1901. That deed in itself arose out of and formed the completion of a transaction embodied in a previous deed of 9th of January 1899. The plaintiffs in this case represent the transferees of the vendees under these two deeds and the defendant the vendor in each of these deeds. The vendor purports to convey certain property free of all encumbrances, and in each of them there is a covenant setting forth what is to happen in the event of its being found that the property is in fact encumbered, and in the event of the vendees being disturbed in possession or having to make any payment on account of some previously existing encumbrance. The matter is clearer in the earlier of the two deeds, but no doubt the point has to be decided with reference to the agreement as embodied at the end of the deed of July the 4th, 1901, on page 8 R. of the book before us. We have only referred to the previous document in order to explain the nature of the transaction as throwing light on the intention of the parties and the footing on which they were dealing with one another. Unfortunately in the deed of July the 4th, 1901, there has been a clerical error on the part of the scribe in that very portion of the document which is most material for our purpose. We are not sure that this error is really vital to the decision of the question argued before us, but the error is there and it is as well that attention should be called to it. A certain word in the deed may have been intended to be written as "Maqabal" or as "Fazil". As the document stands it is actually written "Faqabal," which is nonsense, but it must be intended to be read as one or other of these two words. Now, on the one reading the expression is correctly translated in our paper book by the words "or if any excess amount is charged against them," on the other reading, we may translate "or if they are held chargeable with any prior encumbrance." The latter of these two readings would be less favourable to the appellant's case and for the purposes of argument we may adopt the former. The covenant then is that, in the event of the vendees having to pay some excess amount, that is to say, some further charge over and above the sale consideration set forth in the deed, the estate of the vendor will be liable to make it good, together with damages and costs. Immediately before the words above set forth there is a recital that the property is conveyed to the vendees free from all debts and liabilities or claims. Then follows the agreement that if any portion of the property passes out of the possession of the vendees, or they fail to obtain possession or finally, in the alternative, if any excess amount is charged against them, the other property of the vendor will be liable for damages. It subsequently transpired that there was a prior encumbrance on the property conveyed in the shape of a mortgage in favour of one Chattri Lal. A suit was brought on this mortgage in which the present plaintiffs, the vendees, were impleaded along with the original mortgagor. The claim was contested, but resulted finally in a decree in favour of Chattri Lal, and in order to save the property from sale under that decree the present plaintiffs, the vendees under the deed of July the 4th, 1901, had to pay up the sum now claimed by them, consisting of the mortgage money due to Chattri Lal along with interest and costs. In the Court below this claim was resisted upon a variety of pleas, some of which are repeated in the memorandum of appeal now before us, but the appeal has been argued upon one ground only, namely, on the plea of limitation.

There was an issue on this point in the Court below (issue No. 5), and the learned Subordinate Judge disposed of it very briefly, by pointing out that in his opinion the cause of action accrued to the plaintiffs in the month of May, 1915, when they had to pay the money to Chattri Lal, and that this plaint had been filed with great promptitude in the month of July 1915. He held, therefore, that it was clearly within time. Curiously enough, in the memorandum of appeal before us this finding on the question of limitation is not in express terms challenged. We have been told, however, that there has been some error or oversight about the drafting of the memorandum of appeal and that the plea taken in the first paragraph was intended to read, "that the plaintiffs had no subsisting cause of action," and so raised the question of limitation. At any rate we have heard the appellant on this point, and it was within our discretion to do so. The plea is based upon the contention that the agreement embodied in the last paragraph of the deed of July the 4th, 1901, was simply a covenant of title, that there was a breach of this covenant the moment the deed itself was executed, that a cause of action accrued to the plaintiffs on that very date and that consequently the present suit is barred under the six years' rule of limitation. As subsidiary arguments on this point our attention has been drawn to the fact that the mortgage in favour of Chatri Lal was a registered document, of which it might be said that the plaintiffs had constructive notice, and that in any event they had actual notice of it when Chatri Lal instituted his suit, which was as long ago as the year 1902. The argument before us has proceeded upon lines which evidently were not followed in the Court below. Our attention has been drawn to a number of rulings, of which the decision most in point is that in Hari Tiwari v. Raghunath Tiwari (1). What that case seems to us to lay down is that, if the plaintiffs in a suit like the present were bound to rely solely upon a covenant of title, whether express or implied, it might be held that limitation ran against them from the date of the execution of the deed; but in that suit itself a distinction was drawn, and the plaintiffs were held to be within time, because they were not suing upon a mere covenant of title, and it was held that their cause of action arose long subsequently when they were dispossessed of a portion of land then in question.

Similarly in the present case, it seems to us that the plaintiffs are entitled to rely upon the words already set forth as a covenant of indemnity and to bring a suit upon them from the date on which they suffered actual loss by reason of their being compelled to pay off the prior mortgage charge. The decision of the Court below on the issue of limitation, therefore, appears to be substantially correct on the ground on which it proceeds, although the point was not fully argued. The appeal, therefore, fails and we dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Construction of document—Taluqa, succession to, settled by agreement—Agreement, deed of, interpretation of—Transferable interest, whether acquired.

A dispute regarding succession to a taluqa belonging to a Muhammadan gentleman A in respect of which proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, had been taken against its three claimants, B, C and D, was settled by mutual agreement, the relevant terms of which were as follows:—

1. The taluqa will not for the present be divided.
 2. The taluqa will be released in favour of all the three claimants and the evidence adduced in the proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, will be regarded as proof of possession of all of them.
 3. Mutation of names in respect of the taluqa will be made in favour of all the three claimants subject to the conditions laid down in the agreement.
 4. Each of the three claimants will take a few villages for his personal expenses.
 5. Each of the three claimants will in succession hold the office of the taluqdar of the entire taluqa without the power of alienation.
 6. All the debts due from A will be a charge on the taluqa and the taluqdar for the time being will utilize the net income of the taluqa in payment of those debts.
 7. After payment of the entire debts the net profits will be divided equally between the three claimants.
 8. If the taluqdar for the time being neglects the payment of debts or commits any breach of trust, the man next after him may get him ousted and may himself assume that office.
 9. In case of urgent necessity, prior to the payment of the debts due by A, if the writing of a deed of alienation or hypothecation becomes necessary, then the deed will be valid only when it is signed and executed by all the three claimants.

- Held*, that under the above agreement C and D took a transferable interest in the villages assigned to them as well as in their shares in the taluqa, which they were competent to transfer even during the time when B was the taluqdar. [p. 25, col. 1; p. 26, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated 30th October 1916.

BISHESHWAR NATH v. HAMID MIRZA BEG.

Babu Ram Chandra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mumtaz Husain and Pandit Tara Shankar Sharma, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These three appeals have been argued together, as the principal issue in each is the same and depends on the construction of an agreement, dated the 12th July 1909, entered into between Ahmad Mirza Beg, Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg. The following pedigree given in the plaint in Suit No. 45 of 1916, out of which First Appeal No. 137 of 1916 arises, is necessary to explain the position:—

The dispute relates to Taluqa Anrangabad, which belonged to Agha Jan Beg. His name was entered in List I at No. 77 and List II, at No. 26 appended to Act I of 1869. His eldest son, Nawab Ali Beg, died during his lifetime. Agha Jan Beg died on the 18th June 1875, and was succeeded by his second son, Muhammad Ali Beg, by virtue of a bequest, the effect of which was to vest the estate in his eldest surviving son. Muhammad Ali Beg died childless on the 18th October 1908. On his death disputes arose between his sole surviving brother Ahmad Mirza Beg, and his two nephews Hamid Mirza Beg, and Amir Mirza Beg, as to their rights in the Taluqa and proceedings were taken against them under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to prevent a breach of the peace. These disputes were subsequently settled by mutual agreement on the 12th July 1909,

The effect of this agreement was that mutation was to be effected in respect of the Taluqa in favour of all the three claimants, that the Magistrate, before whom the proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure were pending, was to release the property in their favour, treating all of them as in possession, and that subject to the conditions laid down in the agreement Ahmad Mirza Beg and after him Hamid Mirza Beg and after the latter Amir Mirza Beg were to hold the office of Taluqdar in succession without any power to transfer the property, except in certain contingencies therein specified. The agreement made a provision for the personal expenses of each of the said persons and for the division of the remainder of the profits of the estate after the debts due by the late Taluqdar Muhammad Ali Beg were paid up, and further declared that after the expiry of the tenure of office of Amir Mirza Beg, who was to be the last Taluqdar, the son or sons of Hamid Mirza Beg, born of a biradari wife, would take a moiety and the son or sons of Amir Mirza Beg, born of a biradari wife, would take the remainder as absolute proprietors to the exclusion of the male descendants of Ahmad Mirza Beg, who in the presence of such sons were to get maintenance (Exhibit 1).

In pursuance of the said agreement, mutation of names was effected in favour of Ahmad Mirza Beg, Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg (Exhibit 10).

On the 29th May 1912 Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg borrowed Rs. 93,000 from the Allahabad Bank, Limited, by means of two promissory notes, for the re-payment of which Lachhmi Narain, the defendant-appellant in First Appeal No. 137 of 1916, stood surety. On the same date these persons executed an agreement in favour of Lachhmi Narain, promising to re-pay him what he might have to pay to the Allahabad Bank, Limited, on their account with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem. As these persons subsequently failed to pay the money due to the Allahabad Bank, Limited, the latter realized Rs. 93,120-6-0 from Lachhmi Narain on the 8th October 1912,

BISHESHWAR NATH v. HAMID MIRZA BEG.

On the 16th November 1912 Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg executed a deed of simple mortgage in favour of Lachhmi Narain for a lac of rupees in consideration of the amount paid by the latter to the Allahabad Bank, Limited, on their account with the interest due thereon and a sum of Rs. 5,824.4-0 due by them on another account. By the said deed they mortgaged a 6-annas share out of Taluqa Aurangabad including the guzara villages assigned to them for their personal expenses, and agreed to pay the mortgage-money within ten years with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem, compoundable half yearly (Exhibit C 1).

On the 14th May 1913 they made another mortgage of a 4-annas 8-pies share of Taluqa Aurangabad inclusive of the said guzara villages in favour of Lachhmi Narain for Rs. 40,000, agreeing similarly to re-pay the same within ten years with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem, compoundable half-yearly (Exhibit C 3).

On the 2nd January 1914 they made a mortgage of what they described as their entire 10-annas 8-pies share in favour of Lachhmi Narain for Rs. 79,450, agreeing similarly to re-pay the same within ten years with interest at the same rate (Exhibit C 4).

The contention of Ahmad Mirza Beg is that the said mortgages were invalid, inasmuch as the mortgagors had no right to transfer the mortgaged property. The relief claimed by him in Suit No. 45 of 1916, out of which First Appeal No. 137 of 1916 arises, is, however, confined to the mortgage of the 16th November 1912 and that of the 14th May 1913. No relief is claimed in regard to the third mortgage. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the mortgagors had no right to mortgage the property in question.

On the 24th February 1914 Hamid Mirza Beg effected a simple mortgage of the entire village Rampur, which was assigned to him for his personal expenses by way of maintenance, in favour of Seth Bisheshwar Nath and Hafiz Muhammad Faruq in lieu of Rs. 16,000, and on the same date he executed a lease of the said village in favour of the mortgagees for 14 years beginning from 1321 Fasli on the rental of Rs. 2,700 per year, agreeing that the said rent might be credited by the mortgagees year after year towards the principal and interest due on their simple mortgage till the entire mortgage-money was liquidated. On the lessees' attempting to get mutation of names effected in their favour Ahmad Mirza Beg objected that the lessors had no right to mortgage the village or grant a lease thereof and he was successful. Seth Bisheshwar Nath accordingly sued for possession of the leasehold village with mesne profits for Rabi 1321 Fasli or in the alternative for the recovery of money due on his mortgage by sale of the mortgaged property. This suit, being No. 233 of 1915, is the subject of First Appeal No. 5 of 1916. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the mortgage and the lease were both invalid and he gave the plaintiff a simple decree for money subject to the right of Hafiz Muhammad Faruq to get such portion of the consideration as he might have advanced.

There was a third Suit No. 96 of 1916, forming the subject of First Appeal No. 12 of 1917, arising out of an attachment of a 5-annas 4-pies share in the villages Nimkhar and Pataunja, forming part of Taluqa Aurangabad, obtained by Kedar Nath and Gauri Nath in execution of a decree for money held by them against Amir Mirza Beg. An objection filed by Ahmad Mirza Beg to the said attachment was unsuccessful, and the present suit was filed for a declaration that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property attached. The learned Subordinate Judge found in his favour.

The first question to be decided is whether Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg had acquired a transferable interest by virtue of the agreement, of the 12th July 1909. The agreement so far as it is material for the determination of the above issue, runs as follows:—

"We are Ahmad Mirza Beg, son of Agha Jan Beg, and Hamid Mirza Beg, son of Nawab Ali Beg, and Muhammad Amir Mirza Beg, son of Ali Mirza Beg, caste Moghal, residents of Aurangabad, district Sitapur.

"A compromise has been arrived at amicably between all the three parties as given below:—

BISHESWAR NATH V. HAMID MIRZA BEG.

"1. The Taluqa Aurangabad in Sitapur will not for the present be divided.

"2. The office of Taluqdar of the entire Taluqa Aurangabad, left by Mirza Muhammad Ali Beg, will be held by Ahmad Mirza Beg, and after him by Hamid Mirza Beg, and after the latter by Amir Mirza Beg, and none will have the power to transfer the said property. During the time of one, the others will not have the power to interfere with the work of collections in the Taluqa and other administrative works, contrary to the terms of the compromise, but they will have the right to inspect the accounts. But if the Taluqdar for the time being neglects the payment of debts or commits any breach of trust, the man next after him may get him ousted and may himself assume that office. But the Taluqdar, who is ousted, will get his fixed maintenance. But in case of urgent necessity, prior to the payment of the debts of Mirza Muhammad Ali Beg deceased, if the writing of a deed of alienation or hypothecation becomes necessary, then the deed will be valid only when it is signed and executed by all the three persons.

"3. Every one of the three parties will take for his personal expenses villages yielding Rs. 10,000 a year. The rent of such villages will mostly be in cash. In order to determine the gross rental of a village, the village papers for 1208 to 1310 will be consulted. The Taluqdar for the time being will pay with the entire Taluqa the dues of the Government in respect of such villages."

After providing for the maintenance of Siddiq Mirza Beg, the son of Ahmad Mirza Beg by a non-biradari wife, and his male descendants, the agreement continues:—

"5. After the expiry of the tenure of office of Amir Mirza Beg as Taluqdar, i.e., when this chain of Taluqdars will be finished, the son or sons of Hamid Mirza Beg, born of a biradari wife, to the extent of one moiety, and the son or sons of Muhammad Amir Mirza Beg, born of a biradari wife, to the extent of one moiety, will divide the estate and hold proprietary possession thereof, subject to the right of maintenance of Siddiq Mirza Beg and his heirs, as mentioned in clause 4 of this compromise. If Hamid Mirza Beg died before getting the office of Taluqdar, the deceased's male issue, born of a biradari wife, will get, so long as the Taluqdari system lasts, the same maintenance and profits which his or their ancestor would have received, if alive.

"6. The moveables left by Mirza Muhammad Ali Beg will be divided in equal shares between the three parties, except the elephants, horses and conveyances given below, the costs of whose maintenance has been fixed and which the members of the family will be entitled to use with the Taluqdar's permission."

The agreement then proceeds to provide for the payment of the debts and the distribution of the profits in the following manner:—

"8. All the debts due from Mirza Muhammad Ali Beg will be a charge on the estate and the Taluqdar for the time being will utilise the income of the villages of the estate, other than the maintenance villages, after deducting therefrom the Government revenue and defraying the costs of collection and the estate expenses described below, in payment of the aforesaid debts. No amount can possibly be fixed for the expenses of litigation, it is, therefore, left to the discretion of the Taluqdar to spend a reasonable amount on cases between the landlord and the tenants, under-proprietors or other raiya out of the income of the estate other than the maintenance villages. The costs of other litigation will be determined in consultation with all the three parties. After payment of the entire debt which is against the estate, the net profits of the estate will be divided equally between the three persons, i.e., each person will get a third during the lifetime of Ahmad Mirza Beg. If, God forbid, Amir Mirza Beg or Hamid Mirza Beg do not live till then, their male children will receive the same. After Ahmad Mirza Beg's death, Siddiq Mirza Beg and his male issue and other heirs, mentioned in clause 4 of this compromise, will get only the aforesaid maintenance and Hamid Mirza Beg and Muhammad Amir Mirza Beg or their aforesaid issue will take the property in equal shares."

The agreement winds up by describing interest which each was to get as follows:—

"12. In conformity with the compromise mutation of names in respect of the ilaga will be made in favour of Ahmad Mirza

BISHESHWAR NATH v. HAMID MIRZA BEG.

Beg, Hamid Mirza Beg and Muhammad Amir Mirza Beg, subject to the conditions laid down in this deed. Ahmad Mirza Beg will receive possession subject to the conditions of this document. In the case under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, a separate application will be filed to the effect that a compromise has been effected between the parties and that now there is no danger of a breach of peace, and that the evidence which has been produced may be regarded as proof of possession of all the three parties and the ilaqa be released in favour of all the three parties."

The Court below construes the deed as giving to Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg nothing more than a right to share in the usufruct; but such a construction is inconsistent with the entire tenor of the deed. In the first place, the agreement states that the ilaqa shall be released in favour of all the three parties and the evidence adduced in the proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure shall be regarded as proof of the possession of all of them. In the second place, it provides that in conformity with the compromise mutation of names in respect of the ilaqa shall be made in favour of Ahmad Mirza Beg, Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg, subject to the conditions laid down in this deed. It concedes to Ahmad Mirza Beg and after him to Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg in succession the mansab or the office, dignity or position of the Taluqdar for such time as he may act in that capacity, maintaining "for the present" its indivisibility as recognised by List II of Act I of 1869. But it describes each of them as acting Taluqdars or Taluqdars for the time being (Taluqdar waqt), and expressly states that if any of them neglects the payment of debts or commits any breach of trust, the man next after him may get him ousted and may himself assume the office. If the intention was to recognise Ahmad Mirza Beg as the sole proprietor of the estate without any power of alienation and to allow Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg only a share in the usufruct so long as they were alive, the suggestion that Ahmad Mirza Beg could be ousted from his position of Taluqdar, if he neglected the payment of debts or committed any breach of trust, would be out of place. A breach of trust can only be committed by a trustee and not by a proprietor. Ahmad Mirza Beg held by virtue of the agreement the management of the property on behalf of himself and his nephews, Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg, and the male children of these two born of biradari wives who were to succeed after the death of all the three. By assigning the position or office of Taluqdar to one man and maintaining indivisibility "for the present", the object was that the dignity or status of the family should not ostensibly be reduced.

In the third place, in the case of urgent necessity prior to the payment of the debts due by Muhammad Ali Beg, the late Taluqdar, if the writing of a deed of alienation or hypothecation became necessary, all the three persons were authorised to sign or execute such a deed jointly. If each of these persons was entitled only to a life interest, they would not have transferred more than the interest they possessed. If, on the other hand, Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg were entitled to a share in the usufruct, the authority given to them to join in a sale or mortgage in certain circumstances and to obtain a release of the property in proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and to get mutation of names effected in their favour jointly with Ahmad Mirza Beg, would be without any significance. In the fourth place, even the male children of Ahmad Mirza Beg were not absolutely deprived of all possible interest in the disputed property. If Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg happened to have no more children by biradari wives, the former were to have such heritable interest as might be permitted to them under the Muhammadan Law.

The position of Ahmad Mirza Beg, Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg was exactly similar in regard to the assignment of villages for their personal expenses and the distribution of the profits, except in so far that each of them was to act in succession or in a particular order as the Taluqdar or, in other words, as the custodian of the dignity of the family and the manager of the estate. Their rights in other respects were equal. Each was to be treated as holding possession and entitled to get mutation of names in his favour and if their rights were greater than those of a person holding a share in the usufruct or a mere life-estate, they could not but be proprietary. In the latter instance the restriction on alienation imposed by the agreement would be void under section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act.

On the death of Muhammad Ali Beg it was disputed whether the property would devolve according to the Muhammadan Law or according to the rule of primogeniture laid down in the Sanad or family custom. The parties to the agreement were in any case uncertain as to their rights. Under section 22 of Act I of 1869 Hamid Mirza Beg was the person entitled to succeed, but by virtue of the bequest Muhammad Ali Beg was held entitled to the estate (Exhibit 20). If the estate went out of the statutory rule of succession laid down under section 15 of that Act, the property could still remain indivisible if the family custom or Sanad was to be applied, but would become divisible, if the Muhammadan Law was to be held applicable uncontrolled by the Sanad or the custom of the family. The claimants to the estate apparently agreed that all the three should hold the property together, that each of them shall in succession hold the office of Taluqdar and manage the estate on behalf of himself and the rest subject to the conditions laid down in the agreement and that on the death of all of them, the property shall devolve in a certain manner. The compromise was in the nature of a settlement of disputed claims, and as held in Faiyaz Husain Khan v. Nilkanth (1), Gaya Din Singh v. Syed Mumtaz Husain (2), Bhairo v. Parmeshri Dayal (3) and Ram Chandra v. Gopi Nath (4), it may be regarded as a transfer to which the provisions of section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act are applicable. The corpus of the estate passed jointly to Ahmad Mirza Beg, Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg by virtue of the agreement; and the restraint of alienation being void, each of them got an absolute estate, subject to the conditions as to the management and the like contained therein. In Faiz Muhammad Khan v. Muhammad Said Khan (5) their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out that in order to show that an ultimate gift of the profits was less than a gift of the corpus, some evidence should be found in the context or in the circumstances affecting the property, tending to show a restriction of the interest given. The agreement in question contains only two restrictions, one against alienation or mortgage except in certain circumstances and the other deducible from the ulterior disposition mentioned therein. But if an absolute estate was given to Ahmad Mirza Beg, Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg, the restraint on alienation being void, the ulterior disposition would necessarily fail.

There is nothing to show that any sons of Hamid Mirza Beg or Amir Mirza Beg born of biradari wives were alive or in existence on the date of the agreement. A gift in favour of persons unborn is not valid under the Muhammadan Law and a restriction of the gift to the life of the donee is not allowed by the Hanafi Law by which the parties to the agreement are governed (Tyabji's Muhammadan Law, pages 274 and 341, and Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Volume I, 4th Edition, pages 64 and 140).

Even a life-interest can, moreover, be attached, sold or mortgaged for the lifetime of the holder of such interest, unless such interest is restricted in its enjoyment to the holder personally. Such is not the case here. The assignment of certain villages for personal expenses was only a method of enabling the persons concerned to recover money for those expenses directly without the intervention of the manager. The life-interest is as much saleable or transferable as any other interest, though such interest cannot last for more than a limited duration.

The learned Counsel for Ahmad Mirza Beg contends that if the interest of Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg be sold, his client will not be able to carry out the trust reposed in him, namely, the discharge of the debts due by Muhammad Ali Beg and the preservation of the property for the benefit of his grand nephews. But the payment of the debts due by Muhammad Ali Beg has been declared by paragraph 8 of the agreement to be a charge on the estate and will follow the property in whatsoever hands it goes. The agreement creates no other charge and so far as it gives a vested remainder to persons not shown to have been in existence on the date of the agreement, it is invalid. If the restriction on alienation is void, the gift over will, moreover, fail.

The appeals are, therefore, allowed and the claims of Ahmad Mirza Beg dismissed and that of Seth Bisheshwar Nath allowed, a decree being granted to the latter for possession of the leasehold property subject to the rights, if any, of his co-lessee Hafiz Muhammad Faruq. The appellants will, in the circumstances, get their costs here and hitherto in each case from the contesting respondents, who will bear their own costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1909), O. XXI, r. 32—Injunction, decree for, mode of execution of—Execution, whether can be effected through Police—Hereditary office, decree passed with regard to, whether binds legal representatives of parties—Civil Court, power of—Procedure.

A decree for a perpetual injunction was passed in favour of the plaintiffs and the defendants third party, restraining the defendants second party from interfering with the right of the plaintiffs and of the defendants third party to perform the "Singar Arti" ceremony in a temple. The legal representatives of the defendants second party caused an obstruction to the performance of the ceremony by the defendants third party, and the latter applied for execution of the decree through the Police:

Held, (1) that the decree having been passed both in favour of the plaintiffs and of the defendants third party, the latter were entitled to execute it; [p. 27, col. 1.]

(2) that if the defendants second party disobeyed the order of the Court, they were liable to the penalties mentioned in Order XXI, rule 32 of the Civil Procedure Code, which prescribed the manner for the execution of a decree for injunction and that the Court had no power to order the Police to see that the decree-holders performed the ceremony without obstruction by the defendants second party; [p. 27, col. 2; p. 28, col. 1.]

(3) that as the suit was brought by the plaintiffs on the basis of a right which they claimed as the descendants of the founder of the temple, the injunction was granted against the defendants not as individuals but as persons claiming a right as descendants of the original founder and that therefore the decree could be enforced against their legal representatives also. Execution first appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Muttra.

Mr. Shyam Krishna Dar, for the Appellants.

Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application for the execution of a decree passed on the 17th of December 1906, in a suit brought by one Goswami Manohar Lal against a number of defendants of whom the appellant Pearey Lal is one. Certain persons who were alleged to have the same rights as the plaintiffs were made defendants of the third party, one of these defendants being the present applicant for execution Goswami Maksudan Ballabh. A decree was made by the Court against all the defendants of the first and second party with the exception of one Kishori Lal, declaring that the plaintiff and the defendants of the third party were entitled to perform the "Singar Arti" ceremony in a certain temple both on ordinary and festive occasions. The decree also ordered a perpetual injunction to issue restraining the defendants of the first and second parties from obstructing the plaintiff and the defendants third party from performing the duties of the office claimed by them. The present application was made by Goswami Maksudan Ballabh, who is one of the defendants of the third party, against Goswami Gotardhar Lalji, the grandson of GORDHANLALJI V. MAKSUDAN BALLABH.

Prem Lal, who was defendant No. 1, and Goshain Girdhar Lalji and Goshain Gourdhan Lalji, the sons of Goshain Munna Lal, who was one of the defendants of the second party, and Pearey Lalji who, as we have said above, was also a defendant of the second party. It is stated on behalf of the decree-holder that these defendants are now interfering with the performance of the duties appertaining to the office which was claimed in the suit and which was decreed to the plaintiff and the defendants of the third party. Their prayer, as contained in the application, is that the decree may be enforced through the Superintendent of Police of Muttra in this way, that on the dates mentioned in the application he (the Superintendent of Police) may have the "Arti" performed by the decree-holders-applicants, and that the defendants may be directed not to interfere with the performance of those duties. The application was opposed on several grounds, but the objections were disallowed and the application as made was granted by the Court below. In this appeal which has been preferred by the judgment-debtors, the first contention raised is that Goswami Maksudan Ballabh is not entitled to apply for execution as he was not one of the plaintiffs to the suit. This objection was raised in the Court below and was, we think, rightly disallowed. The decree was made in favour not only of Manohar Lal but also of the defendants of the third party, declaring their right to perform the duties of the office claimed by them at certain hours every day and also on festive occasions. The decree thus declared the right of, amongst others, the present applicant Maksudan Ballabh and the injunction decreed was also an injunction in his favour. He is, therefore, entitled to maintain the present application.

The next contention put forward on behalf of the appellants is that the decree was personal to the persons in whose favour it was made and could only be enforced against the individuals who were defendants to the suit, and not against persons who are their legal representatives. This contention also is, in our opinion, without force. It appears that the suit was brought on the basis of a right which the plaintiffs claimed as descendants of one of the founders of the temple and that the defendants were also made parties as such descendants. The plaintiffs claimed to have the right to perform certain offices which, the defendants contended, they themselves had a right to perform. So that the decree related to a hereditary office which the plaintiffs claimed, and in regard to which their claim was resisted by the defendants. The injunction was also granted against them not as individuals but as persons who claimed a right as descendants of the original founder of the temple. The appellants, who after the death of some of the defendants in the former suit, have taken their place—or claim to have taken their place—are thus persons against whom the decree may properly be executed so far as the injunction goes. We may mention that this plea was not put forward in the Court below and it, therefore, did not become necessary for that Court to consider it.

The third contention is that the application is time-barred. As the decree was one for a perpetual injunction limitation would run from the date of breach of the injunction, that is, from the date on which the defendants disobeyed the injunction—that date was within three years of the present application. Consequently no question of limitation arises in the present case, as held by the Court below.

It is lastly urged that the Court below was wrong in ordering the Superintendent of Police of Muttra to see that the "Arti" was performed by Goswami Maksudan Ballabh and that the defendants offered no obstruction. So far as this part of the prayer in the application for execution is concerned, we do not think that the Court below ought to have granted it. It had no power under the Code of Civil Procedure to order the Police to interfere in the matter. There being a decree for a perpetual injunction against the defendants or those whom they represented, it was the duty of the defendants to carry out the injunction, that is to say, to refrain from offering any obstruction to the performance of the office which was decreed to the decree-holder. If they disobeyed the order of the Court they were liable to the penalties mentioned in Order XXI, rule 32, of the Code, but the Court could not order the Police to see that the decree-holders performed the duties of their office without interference on the part of the defendants. If a breach of the peace was apprehended, that was a matter for the Magistrate and the Police, and not for the Civil Court. We accordingly set aside that portion of the lower Court's order which directs the Superintendent of Police to order the Sub-Inspector of Bindraban to have the applicant Maksudan Ballabh perform "Singar Arti" in the temple.

We are also of opinion that the Court had no power to appoint a Commissioner to see that the decree-holder performed without obstruction the duties appertaining to his office. This portion of the lower Court's order, which was passed on a subsequent date, should also be set aside. In our opinion clause (5) of rule 32 does not authorize the Court to make these orders and provides for a different state of things.

We accordingly vary the order of the Court below by directing that an order do issue to the defendants-appellants forbidding them to interfere with the performance of the duties of the decree-holder, namely, "Singar Arti" every day and on festive days in the temple of Radha Ballabhji. If the defendants-appellants fail to obey the injunction, it will be time for the decree-holder to make a proper application in the terms of Order XXI, rule 32. We direct the parties to bear their own costs of this appeal.

Decree varied.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. V, r. 17

—Summons, service of, modes of—Copy of summons delivered to defendant—Refusal to sign acknowledgment—Failure to affix copy to door—Service, whether effected.

The object of serving a summons is that the defendant may be informed of the institution of the suit in sufficient time before the date fixed for the hearing, and the procedure laid down for the service of summonses is intended to guard against fraud and ensure that the proper person has been served. [p. 30, col. 1.]

There are three modes of serving a summons on a defendant: (1) by delivery of a copy of the summons to the defendant personally or to an agent or some one on his behalf and by obtaining the signature of the person to whom the said copy is delivered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons;

(2) by affixing a copy of the summons on the door of the defendant's residence or place of business;

(3) by effecting substituted service as laid down in rule 20 of Order V of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 30, col. 1.]

Where a copy of the summons was delivered to the defendant who refused to sign the required acknowledgment, but no copy of the summons was affixed to the door of his house:

Held, that the summons was not duly served. [p. 30, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 31st August 1917.

Lala Tirath Ram, for the Appellant.

Lala Dhanpat Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Lachhman Das, a Brahmin of Lahore, died leaving him surviving a widow Musammât Jiwani and three sons Karm Chand, Diwan Chand and Gobind Ram. Somewhere about the year 1906 Gobind Ram became of unsound mind, and as the remaining members of the family could not get on amicably an agreement was entered into, and executed on the 10th November 1912 by Karm Chand, Diwan Chand and Musammât Jiwani referring their dispute to one Pandit Hari Chand who, as arbitrator, was empowered to effect a partition, and to appoint one of the executants to manage the share that should be allotted to Gobind Ram. The said Hari Chand was brother to Musammât Jiwani and consequently the maternal uncle of the others.

For some reason or other no award was made till the 2nd December 1915.

On the 8th June 1916 Musammât Parbati filed an application in Court under paragraph

DIWAN CHAND V. PARBATI.

20 of the 2nd Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, in which she recited the fact of the reference to arbitration and stated that she was the widow of Karm Chand who had died some 5 months before and that she had come to know of the existence of the award after her husband had died. She asked that the award should be filed and a decree passed in accordance with its terms.

It appears that Gobind Ram had also died by the time this application was filed.

The usual summonses were issued to Diwan Chand and Musammat Jiwani, the 6th July 1916 being fixed for hearing.

On the 27th June 1916 a report was made by the process-server to the effect that a copy of the summons had been delivered to Diwan Chand, who had taken it but refused to give any acknowledgment for it.

Fresh summonses were then issued for the 25th July 1916, and on the 22nd July 1916 the process-server again reported that he had given a copy to Diwan Chand, who had been pointed out by the plaintiff, but that he had refused to acknowledge its receipt.

On the 25th July 1916 the process-server was examined by the Court and supported the report made by him, but stated that Diwan Chand was known to him personally.

The case proceeded against him ex parte and on the 31st August 1916 it was ordered that the award be filed and a decree be passed in accordance with its terms. It should be mentioned that Musammat Jiwani also made no appearance and the order and decree was ex parte against her as well.

On the 16th October 1916 Musammat Parbati applied to have the decree executed and asked to be put in possession of the house in suit which had been allotted to her husband, and on the 31st October 1916 a warrant for the delivery of possession was issued for the 21st November 1916.

On the 13th November 1916 one Ghulam Dastgir, Civil Nazir (now dead), is said to have made a report to the effect that when he was going to the spot with the decree-holder, Diwan Chand had met him in the bazar and had told him that Musammat Jiwani was in possession of the house and that it was she from whom possession should be taken, and that Musammat Jiwani had refused to surrender possession.

On the 21st November 1916 notices were issued to both the judgment-debtors for the 2nd December 1916 and then again for the 11th December 1916.

On the 8th December 1916 a report was made that a copy of the notice had been affixed to the open door of Diwan Chand's house as he had refused to accept service. A fresh notice was issued for the 2nd December 1916, and on the 19th December 1916 it was reported that it had been affixed to his door as he had gone away on hearing of the notice.

On the 21st December 1916 another notice was issued to him for the 11th January 1917, and on the 8th January 1917 the process-server again reported that as Diwan Chand refused to accept it the notice had been affixed to his door.

On the 11th January 1917 a Mukhtar appeared in Court on Diwan Chand's behalf and asked for time as he wished to raise objections, and on the 3rd February 1917 an application was filed by him in which it was sought to get the ex parte decree set aside, on the ground that he had never been duly served and had only come to know of the state of affairs on the 14th January 1917 through Musammat Jiwani.

This application having been dismissed on the 31st August 1917, Diwan Chand has preferred this appeal through Lala Tirath Ram. Lala Dhanpat Rai has addressed me on behalf of Musammat Parbati.

The Court below has dismissed the application holding that it was time-barred, both because the summons had been duly served in the first instance, and because in any event he had had knowledge of the decree in November 1916.

Mr. Tirath Ram contended that the summons had not been duly served. He referred to Order V, rule 17, Civil Procedure Code, and contended that the provisions of that rule had not been complied with, inasmuch as a copy of the summons had not been affixed to the door of Diwan Chand's house.

Now there are three modes of serving a summons on a defendant:—

(1) by delivery of a copy of the summons to the defendant personally or to an agent or some one on his behalf and by obtaining the signature of the person to whom the said copy is delivered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons (vide Order V, rules 10—16 and 18, Civil Procedure Code, 1908);

(2) as laid down in rule 17, by affixing a copy of the summons on the defendant's residence or place of business.

When this method is adopted, the provisions of rule 19 have to be complied with and the Court concerned has to decide whether the summons has or has not been duly "served;" and

(3) by effecting substituted service as laid down in rule 20.

In the present case rule 17 has clearly not been complied with, inasmuch as no copy of the summons was affixed to the door of Diwan Chand's house—the report in each instance being that a copy had been given to Diwan Chand who had refused to sign the required acknowledgment. Mr. Dhanpat Rai contended that in the circumstances it was impossible to comply with the provisions of rule 17 as the process-server, having delivered a copy of the summons to Diwan Chand, had none which he could affix to his house.

This, no doubt, is correct, but does this fact do away with the necessity of complying with the provisions of the law?

I think the answer must be in the negative.

The object of serving a summons is that the defendant may be informed of the institution of the suit in sufficient time before the date fixed for the hearing, and the procedure laid down for the service of summons is intended to guard against fraud and ensure that the proper person has been served. The summons in this case was clearly not duly served so far as rule 17 is concerned, nor can it be said that personal service was effected within the four corners of rule 16.

In Maruti v. Vithu (1) it was held that service had not been duly effected when the respondent in an appeal had refused to take a copy of the notice of appeal and the provisions of rule 17 had not been complied with. I hold, therefore, that Diwan Chand was not duly served with a summons.

The next question is whether he came to know of the decree in November 1916 or, as he says, in January 1917.

As to this it certainly is curious that Diwan Chand should have been away for the whole of the period—and that he should not have heard of this matter from his mother Musammât Jiwani who was living in the house.

The report of the deceased Civil Nazir would go to show that he had knowledge. It was urged that this report is not admissible in evidence. It was, however, made in the ordinary course of his duties and has been proved. Witnesses have also deposed to the correctness of what it contained. I do not think, therefore, that it can be entirely ignored.

It will be seen that the notices issued subsequent to the passing of the decree were served as provided for in rule 17, and after a careful consideration of the evidence on the record I am unable to hold that Diwan Chand duly came to know of the decree only in January 1917.

The evidence as to his absence from Lahore is vague and inconclusive, and it seems to me most improbable that he never heard of the decree till January 1917. The evidence that he knew of it in November 1916 is supported by the report of the deceased Nazir and, I think, should be accepted.

In these circumstances the appeal fails and is dismissed, but I leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 2629 OF 1917.

April 19, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chevis.

SHER SINGH—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 12—Time spent in obtaining copies of judgment and decree—Separate periods, whether can be allowed—"Requisite," meaning of—Time requisite, whether question of fact or of law.

It is the duty of an appellant to obtain as many copies as possible on a single petition, and if he wastes time applying first for one copy and then for another, he cannot claim that all the separate periods spent in obtaining copies were really "requisite" within the meaning of section 12 of the Limitation Act. [p. 31, col. 2.]

An appellant can, under section 12 of the Limitation Act, only deduct such time as was requisite for obtaining copies, and what time is requisite for this purpose is a question of fact on the circumstances of each particular case. Where a lower Appellate Court decides that a double period was not necessary, the question whether it is right or wrong is not a question of law. [p. 31, col. 2; p. 32, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 1st May 1917.

Mr. Saeed Hassan, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rambhaji Dutta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's suit for an injunction having been decreed by the first Court, Sher Singh, one of the defendants, appealed to the District Judge who dismissed his appeal as time-barred. Sher Singh appeals to this Court, and the only question is whether his appeal to the District Judge is barred by time.

The first Court's decree is dated 5th May 1916. Sher Singh applied for copy of judgment on 20th May 1916, and it was ready on 23rd May. He applied for copy of decree on 5th June 1916, and it was ready on 6th June. He lodged his appeal on the 10th June.

It is admitted by Mr. Sayyad Hassan that unless his client can get credit for both the above periods, viz., 20th to 23rd May and 5th to 6th June, 6 days in all, the appeal to the District Judge is time-barred. Section 12 of the Limitation Act lays down that in computing the period of limitation for an appeal the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree, sentence or order appealed from shall be excluded, and where the appeal is from a decree the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which it is founded shall also be excluded. Relying on Raman Chetti v. Kadirvalu (1), Karnam Narasimhulu v. Secretary of State (2) and Din Dayal v. Rameshar (3), Mr. Sayyad Hassan urges that his client can get credit for both periods. But it is clear that only the time requisite can be excluded, and these judgments do not discuss the question whether when it is open to a party to apply for both copies at once, he can apply first for one and then for the other and claim to exclude two periods as both being requisite. The question is one on which there is a diversity of opinion. Other cases on the point in addition to those already mentioned have been cited on page 75 of Rustomjee's Limitation Act, 2nd Edition. There are two Punjab rulings. The first is an unreported case Civil Appeal No. 1505 of 1879. The two Judges differed, and the case was referred to a third Judge (Rattigan, J.), who held that it was the duty of a litigant to obtain as many copies as possible on a single petition, and that if he wasted time applying first for one copy and then for another he could not claim that all the separate periods spent in obtaining copies were really "requisite." The second case is Thana Mal v. Musammal Nihali (4) and is on all fours with the present case. The appellant first applied for copy of the judgment, and subsequently for copy of decree, and claimed to deduct the time spent in getting copy of decree in addition to the time spent in getting copy of the judgment. The Divisional Judge held that as he could have applied for both copies at the same time, the extra time spent in getting copy of decree was not requisite within the meaning of section 12, and dismissed the appeal as time-barred. On further appeal, with certificate to this Court, the learned Judge (Plowden, J.) held that the appellant could only deduct such time as was requisite for obtaining copies and said: "What time is requisite for this purpose is a question of fact on the circumstances of the particular case. The two periods may be concurrent or not concurrent, for the section ordains nothing whatever on this point. In some cases it might properly be held that a separate allowance should be made in respect of each copy. But when the Divisional Judge decided that in this case two periods were not requisite, and made only one allowance, he decided that in this case a double period was not necessary and whether he was right or wrong is not a question of law."

With this decision I fully agree. I quite admit that cases may arise in which a person aggrieved by a decision may apply separately for copy of judgment and for copy of decree and may claim that both periods should be allowed as requisite. But in this case no reason has been shown for separate applications. All that has been suggested is that Sher Singh may have first applied for copy of judgment, merely to see whether he would appeal, and then, having made up his mind that he would appeal, applied for copy of decree. This may have been the case, but the fact remains that he could easily have applied for both copies at once. Even had he afterwards made up his mind that it was not worth his while to appeal, the extra expenditure involved in getting copy of decree as well as copy of judgment would have been slight, and if merely to avoid the risk of spending a little extra money he chose to apply first for copy of judgment only, I do not see how he can now say that both periods should be allowed as requisite.

As to allowing any extension under section 5, I need only remark that if Sher Singh had exercised due diligence he could have filed his appeal on the 7th or 8th of June, when it would have been within time, even allowing credit only for the time spent in getting copy of judgment. He had his copy of judgment in May, so he could easily have got his grounds of appeal drafted and could have filed his appeal accompanied by copies of both judgment and decree on the 7th or 8th June.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Mortgage—Term fixed for redemption—Redemption, suit for, before expiry of term, maintainability of—Clog on redemption—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 16—Undue influence—Borrower in need of money—Lender, whether dominates his will.

A mortgage-deed provided that if the principal and interest due on the mortgage was not paid up to the date fixed for such payment, the mortgagee was to take possession of the mortgaged property, was to appropriate its profits in lieu of interest without any liability to account to the mortgagor for the profits, which exceeded the amount of interest at the contract rate by practically half as much, was to secure to himself certain further or collateral advantages and was to remain in possession of the mortgaged property for a fixed period during which the mortgagor could not claim redemption. On the mortgagor failing to pay the principal and interest as stipulated in the deed, the mortgagee entered into possession of the mortgaged property. The mortgagor then sued for redemption, alleging that he was entitled to redeem during the period of the mortgagee's possession on the ground that the conditions in the mortgage-deed constituted a clog on the right to redeem:

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Kheri, dated the 17th April 1916.

JUDGMENT—This is a mortgagor's appeal arising out of a suit for redemption, which has been dismissed by the Court below on the ground that the plaintiff under the mortgage-contract has no present right to redeem. Whether or not he has that right is the matter for determination in this appeal.

MUHAMMAD SHER KHAN v. SWAMI DAYAL.

A short statement of the material facts may conveniently be given here by way of introduction.

The plaintiff Muhammad Sher Khan is a Taluqdar holding an estate in the Kheri district and first entered into dealings with the mortgagee in this suit (or rather his father) in the year 1904. By that time the plaintiff had encumbered his property to a considerable extent. He had executed five mortgages hypothecating portions of his estate in favour of two mortgagees, and the outstanding debt amounted to close on Rs. 72,000. The earliest mortgage executed in favour of a banker named Dwarka Das carried interest at 12 per cent. per annum compoundable with six-monthly rests; on this the mortgagee had brought a suit and obtained a decree. The other four mortgages were in favour of Ganesh Prasad: two of these carried interest at the rate mentioned above, the third at 15 per cent. per annum compoundable in the same way; the fourth loan was given at 12 per cent. per annum simple. To discharge these debts the plaintiff on the 31st August 1904 borrowed a lakh of rupees from Seth Raghubar Dayal, the father of the present defendant: the sum owing to the prior mortgagees was left with Raghubar Dayal for payment and the balance was taken by the mortgagor.

To secure this loan the plaintiff executed a mortgage. It was agreed that interest should run at the rate of Rs. 7-1-8 per cent. per annum payable half-yearly, with a stipulation that the interest should be compounded in default of punctual payment, and the mortgagor undertook to pay off the debt at the end of four years in the month of Jeth.

It was further agreed that if the mortgagor failed to pay four successive instalments of interest, or if he failed to redeem on expiry of the period mentioned, the mortgagee was to have the option of taking possession of the mortgaged property for a period of twelve years during which the mortgagor was not to be entitled to exercise his right to redeem; the profits during the term of twelve years during which the mortgagor was not to be entitled to exercise his right to redeem, i.e., the profits during the term of the mortgagee's possession, were to be appropriated in lieu of interest and there was to be no accounting between the parties for this period. The mortgagor undertook to deliver complete possession to the mortgagee, including possession of all sir and khudkasht lands and of all buildings. The mortgagee was to be allowed to appropriate fallen timber and to cut down four trees a year. Another condition was that when the mortgagor came to redeem on the expiration of twelve years he was to be liable to pay to the mortgagee, in addition to principal and interest making up the mortgage debt, all sums recoverable from tenants on account of arrears of rent and taqavi.

The only other condition of which we need take notice is one by which the mortgagee, while out of possession, agreed to receive payments of not less than Rs. 3,000 at a time in reduction of the principal sum.

On the 9th June 1908 before the period of this mortgage expired, the mortgagor renewed the bond after an account had been taken between the parties showing that the mortgagor owed Rs. 82,154-15-6. He paid up Rs. 154-15-6 and the fresh bond was executed for Rs. 82,000. This is the bond now in suit.

The terms of this bond are for the most part identical with those of the earlier document, but the period for redemption was fixed at five instead of four years. Further the mortgagee agreed that while he was out of possession he would receive payments of sums not less than Rs. 500 in reduction of principal. There was still a clause enabling the mortgagee to take possession for twelve years in case the mortgagor failed to redeem at the end of the five years' term, and under this clause the mortgagee is now in possession by virtue of a decree of this Court dated the 9th of February 1915. It is admitted that before this decree was passed, the Court gave the mortgagor an opportunity of paying off the debt by private arrangement so as to avoid delivery of possession to the mortgagee: the mortgagor, however, failed to take advantage of the indulgence. He has now brought this suit for redemption and claims that he is entitled to recover possession, notwithstanding the covenant in the deed by which he is debarred from seeking redemption for a period of twelve years to count from the date of the mortgagee's taking possession. He says that he is entitled to relief against this contract on the ground that the bargain between himself and the mortgagee is harsh and unconscionable and was procured by undue influence, the mortgagee having taken advantage of his necessities for the purpose of obtaining unfair terms. He asks the Court to treat this covenant, read with the other terms of the contract, as amounting to a 'clog' on the right of redemption which cannot in equity be enforced so as to prevent his now coming forward and asking to be restored to possession on payment of principal and interest.

With regard to the plea of undue influence, the Subordinate Judge has ruled that it was not open to the plaintiff in accordance with the doctrine of res judicata: in his opinion this was a plea which the plaintiff could have and ought to have raised when he was resisting the mortgagee's suit for possession.

We are not disposed to accept this finding of the Court below but we agree with the finding which it came to on the merits of the plea, namely, that there was no proof of undue influence which would entitle the plaintiff to avoid the contract under the provisions of section 16 of the Contract Act.

The plaintiff gave oral evidence for the purpose of showing that the mortgagee had taken undue advantage of him at the time the mortgage was renewed. A good deal of that evidence was irrelevant, and what was relevant has been found to be untrue. We agree entirely with the judgment of the Court below on this point; the evidence led by the defendant proves conclusively that the story told by the plaintiff and his witnesses regarding the events which happened at the time the deed was renewed is absolutely false. It is clearly established by the defendant's evidence that the transaction was entered into at the plaintiff's own request, that the mortgagee never pressed for renewal of the deed, and that the plaintiff of his own free-will and without compulsion of any kind executed the deed now in suit, which was written out by his own mukhtar, one Abdul Qayum.

Apart from the oral evidence there is nothing either in the circumstances or in the terms of the document itself to justify the conclusion that the mortgagee was in a position to dominate the will of the plaintiff at the time the mortgage was executed. In this connection it is important to consider the admission made by the plaintiff in the witness-box that he had no complaint to make regarding the terms of the mortgage executed by him in the year 1904. His statement on this point may be quoted here:—

"I executed the former deed in favour of the defendant's father with all its terms, not under any undue influence brought to bear upon me by the defendant's father, but because I was badly in need of money at that time to pay off certain decrees. I did not care much for that deed."

By this last expression we understand the plaintiff to mean that he was indifferent and had no reason to complain of the terms offered him by the mortgagee. If this be so, he appears to have no particular reason to impeach the present contract as being harsh and unconscionable, for the terms are more favourable to him than those of the deed of 1904. While interest is at the same rate, the mortgagee gives the plaintiff the right to make payments of not less than Rs. 500 at a time in reduction of principal. Under the earlier deed the minimum sum which the mortgagee was bound to accept on this account was one of Rs. 3,000. While it may be true that the plaintiff stood in urgent need of money when he executed the first deed, there is nothing to show that he wanted more money when he came to renew it. Indeed no money was advanced to him on the latter occasion. Clearly he wanted a renewal of the contract so as to secure a further opportunity of redeeming before the mortgagee exercised his option to take possession of the mortgaged property, and this the mortgagee agreed to give him. And in any case urgent need of money on the part of the borrower does not of itself place the lender in a position to dominate his will. We are satisfied, therefore, that no case is made out for interference with the bargain of the parties on the ground of undue influence.

Next with regard to the argument that there is a clog upon the right to redeem from which the plaintiff is entitled in equity to be relieved, it is contended that the right to redeem which was settled by the contract is clogged by reason of the stipulation by which the mortgagee is entitled to retain possession of the mortgaged property for a period of twelve years without liability to account to the mortgagor for the profits. The plaintiff's allegation in paragraph 9 of the plaint is that under this arrangement the mortgagee is now receiving profits which represent a sum of over Rs. 6,000 a year in excess of the interest agreed upon. The Subordinate Judge has not expressed any definite opinion on this point, but he states that the defendant's Pleader admitted in the course of argument that the net profits exceed the interest by at least two or three thousand rupees a year; and before us it has been argued by the respondent's Advocate that on the assumption that the excess amounts to Rs. 3,000 a year there is no question of penalty, because on this reckoning the rate of interest has been enhanced from the date of default from Rs. 7-1-8 per cent. per annum to $10\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. per annum, which is still a moderate rate for transactions of this nature.

Then again we are referred on behalf of the appellant to the clause by which the mortgagee while in possession is entitled to cut and remove timber as also to the clause which renders the mortgagor liable at the time of redemption to pay arrears of rent and tagavi advances to tenants which may be recoverable. And lastly we are asked to consider the stipulation by which the mortgagor is precluded from making payments on account of principal during the period of the mortgagee's possession.

The case for the plaintiff, therefore, is that the mortgagee has secured to himself certain further or collateral advantages which constitute a fetter upon the right to redeem.

The agreement by which the exercise of the right of redemption is postponed for a period of twelve years cannot by itself be treated as a clog: the parties are allowed to settle the period of redemption by contract between themselves, and to arrange the date after which redemption may be had. Here we have a time for redemption fixed by the parties themselves, and unless the mortgage is, if it legally can be, satisfied from the usufruct meanwhile, there is no ground apparent upon which the plaintiff should be allowed to depart from his agreement and seek redemption at an earlier date.

The clause by which the mortgagor is debarred from making payments towards principal during the period of the mortgagee's possession is part and parcel of the arrangement by which the exercise of the right of redemption is postponed: it is not a collateral or independent clause in restriction of the exercise of a right already agreed upon.

As for the other terms to which our attention has been drawn, they are concerned with the terms upon which redemption may be had when the time for redemption arrives, and the question whether they are to be treated as penal within the meaning of section 74 of the Contract Act is not one to be dealt with at the present stage, when the only matter before us is the right of the plaintiff to bring this suit for redemption in contravention of the terms of the contract.

We hold that the suit for redemption is premature and affirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge direct that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1895), ss. 29, 52

SONAULLA SARDAR V. BHAGABATI DEBYA CHOWDHURANI.

—Area of holding increased on measurement—Agreement to pay rent at rate considerably in excess of original rate, whether enforceable.

The area of a holding for which the rent payable was Rs. 10-5-0 was described in the dakhilas (rent receipts) given to the tenant and in the papers kept by the landlord as $7\frac{3}{4}$ bighas. On a fresh survey made by the landlord the area was found to be $9\frac{1}{2}$ bighas: whereupon the tenant agreed to pay Rs. 16-14-0 as rent per annum for the holding as found by the measurement:

Held, that as the landlord could not point to any particular piece of land as being an excess area for which the tenant agreed to pay him so much rent in excess, the agreement of the tenant to pay Rs. 16-14-0 for the $9\frac{1}{2}$ bighas found on measurement was unenforceable under section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, since by it the original rate of rent per bigha was increased considerably in excess of the authorised increase of 2 annas in the rupee. [p. 37, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Rajshahi, dated the 25th September 1916, reversing that of the Munsif, Naogaon, dated the 25th April 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment and arguments.

Babu Khitish Chunder Neogy, for the Appellant.—This appeal is on behalf of the defendant and it arises out of a suit for rent. The plaintiffs claim that the rent of the jama is Rs. 16-14-0 per annum. The defendant says that the rent is not Rs. 16-14-0 but Rs. 10-15-0. The plaintiffs say that there was a measurement of the holding in 1309 B.S. and it was then found that the original area was $7\frac{3}{4}$ bighas and that it had increased to about $9\frac{1}{2}$ bighas. In 1311 B.S. the defendant agreed to pay the enhanced rent of Rs. 16-14-0. The defendant says that the agreement of 1311 B.S. having been made in contravention of the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is invalid. The first Court gave effect to the contention of the defendant, but on appeal the Court of Appeal below decreed the suit in full.

My submission is that under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove what was the original area of the land let out to the defendant and what is the amount of the excess; unless he can do that, he cannot claim additional rent for any additional area. It is not sufficient for the landlord to show that the area is more than what is entered in the dakhilas and other collection papers. The leading case on this point is Gouri Pattra v. Reily (1). The case of Rajendra Lal Goswami v. Chunder Bhusan Goswami (2) is also in point. It has been found that the plaintiff has not been able to prove that the original settlement was made on the basis of a measurement, so it cannot be said that there has been any excess in area of land for which the plaintiff-landlord is entitled to claim enhancement of rent. To establish the existence of excess land the landlord has got to prove the area of the land at its inception; in a suit for additional rent he must also prove that the rent originally did not cover and was not intended to cover such excess area. But no such proof has been given in this case. Refers to Rajkumar Pratap Sahay v. Ram Lal Singh (3). Evidence has been given to show, and it has also been found by the Court of first instance, that the boundaries of the land leased and held by the defendant remain the same. The authorities show that when there is a lease of lands within specified and fixed boundaries, the landlord cannot claim additional rent if on a measurement the actual quantity of land let out is found to be in excess of the quantity specified in the lease. See Jagan-nath Manjhi v. Jumman Ali Putwari (4). See also Akbar Ali Mian v. Hira Bibi (5).

The enhancement of rent has contravened the provisions of section 52, clause (3). The excess area has not been assessed according to the provisions of section 52, clause (3).

The next point is that the enhancement is invalid having been made in contravention of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It appears that prior to 1309 B.S. the rent was at the rate of about Re 1-6 $\frac{1}{2}$ annas per bigha. In 1311 B.S. there was by agreement between the landlord and the tenant, an increase of rent, viz., at the rate of Re 1-12 $\frac{1}{2}$ annas per bigha. That increase is by more than 2 annas in the rupee and, therefore, not enforceable.

holding must remain constant. The section has no application where there has been an addition of area. If the holding remains the same, i.e., unaltered in area and the rent is enhanced by agreement, then and then only section 29 applies. Where there is an addition of area to the holding or where there is a subtraction of area from the holding, the holding does not remain constant and hence section 29 cannot apply. Refers to the case of Satish Chundra Giri v. Kabiraddin Mallick (6). It has been held that section 29 applies only to the increase in the rate of rent and not to an increase in the amount of rent for increase of area. Refers to Raj Kumar Sarkar v. Haiuddin Tarafdar (7) and Nazir Peyada v. Jyatindra Narain (8). The present case is stronger than the cases referred to above. By the addition of area the old holding ceases to continue and a new holding comes into existence, and when rent is fixed for the new holding, section 29 cannot be said to have been contravened. Considering that section 29 is a penal section, it should be applied to those cases only which fall strictly within its purview.

As regards section 52 I submit that that section does not apply to this case. It is a case upon an admitted agreement of both parties, which cannot be got rid of except on the ground of fraud, undue influence, etc., i.e., on some ground for which an agreement can be got rid of. It is not a suit for additional rent for additional area. It is a suit for rent agreed to be paid by the tenant for land held by him. The rule of law laid down in Gouri Pattra v. Reily (1) does not apply to this case.

As regards sub-sections (3) and (5) of section 52, I submit that they apply when the rent is determined by the Court in a suit under section 52 and not in a case of this nature.

Babu Khitish Chunder Neogy replied.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The plaintiff-landlord sued the defendant for rent at the rate of Rs. 16-14-0 per annum for three years. The defendant pleaded that his rent was not Rs. 16-14-0 but Rs. 10-15-0, and from the pleadings it appears that the parties are agreed on the facts that the area of the holding was described in the dukhlis given to the tenant and in the papers kept by the landlord as $7\frac{3}{4}$ bighas and that in 1309 there was a fresh survey made by the landlord when the landlord said the area was increased to about $9\frac{1}{2}$ bighas. The plaintiff claims that in 1311 the defendant agreed to pay him rent at the rate of Rs. 16-14-0 per annum for the holding as found by measurement in 1309. The defence raised by the defendant is that the agreement, if made, was in violation of the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Munsif upheld this contention; but, on appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge reversed that decision and gave the plaintiff a decree for the entire amount claimed. The defendant has now appealed to this Court.

Now, it appears that the rent before 1309, assuming the area to be $7\frac{3}{4}$ bighas, was at the rate of about Re. 1-6 $\frac{1}{2}$ annas per bigha, but in 1311 the rent provided by the agreement was at the rate of Re. 1-12 $\frac{1}{2}$ annas. That increase is considerably in excess of the authorized increase of 2 annas in a rupee. Now, the landlord cannot point to any particular piece of land and say that the tenant agreed to pay him so much rent for this piece of land. The rate must be considered as applied to the whole area; and for the purpose of considering section 29 we must take the average rate per bigha throughout the whole area. And the question is whether, when we find an enhancement in the rate per bigha, the provisions of section 29 have been violated. It has been urged before us that section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is applicable only when the holding "remains constant." These particular words have been used in a judgment, but the facts of that case, which is the case of Nazir Peyada v. Jyatindra Narain (8), are entirely different. The facts of an earlier case to which reference is made in that judgment are also entirely different from those in the present case. The principle of these cases has no application to this case. In my opinion, the agreement which was entered into between the landlord and the defendant in this case was made in violation of section 29 of the

JUDGMENT.—This is a judgment-debtor's appeal and the sole question is whether the decree-holders' application of the 18th of July 1913 is an application made to a proper Court to take a step-in-aid of execution. That application was an application to the Court to reject certain objections which had been filed against the execution of the decree, so as to enable the execution to proceed. It was, in our opinion, an application made to the proper Court, and it was an application asking that Court to take a step which was very necessary for the execution of the decree. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Where an execution sale is cancelled under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 91, Civil Procedure Code, without notice to persons having an order in their favour for rateable distribution of the property, the Court, in passing the order, cannot be said to have failed or declined to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law and the High Court cannot interfere with the order in revision. [p. 39, col. 2.]

A mere error in the interpretation of a section is not a failure to exercise jurisdiction within the meaning of section 115, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 39, col. 2.]

Semble.—Persons who have an order for rateable distribution in their favour are persons affected by an application to set aside the sale within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 92, Civil Procedure Code, and an order made behind their backs cannot bind them for the purposes of Order XXI, rule 93. [p. 39, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Tirupati, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 231 of 1917 (Original Suit No. 821 of 1913).

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Petitioner.—It is not necessary that persons who had orders for rateable distribution in their favour should have notice of, or be made parties to, proceedings under Order XXI, rule 91, Civil Procedure Code. They are persons affected by the order under rule 92 and when the order is made, all that the Court has to do is to direct the refund of the purchase-money to the purchaser.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The respondents had an interest in the property and an order prejudicial to them could not be made behind their backs. The order for cancellation passed without notice to them cannot bind them. In any event even if the Munsif had erred in his view of the law, there is no question of want of jurisdiction to justify the High Court's interference in revision.

JUDGMENT.—This petition raises a somewhat difficult question of law on the interpretation of rules 92 and 93 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code. The petitioner before the High Court bought certain properties at an auction sale and afterwards applied to have the sale set aside under rule 91 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the properties sold. He succeeded in his application, but he did not make parties to the proceeding the respondents before me, who had obtained orders for rateable distribution of the sale proceeds of the property of the judgment-debtor before the application was made by the petitioner to set aside the sale under rule 91 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code. The District Munsif held that under rule 92 of Order XXI persons having an order in their favour for rateable distribution were entitled to notice as persons affected by the application to set aside the sale and that, therefore, the respondents were not bound by the order made in their absence on the application of the petitioner.

It is argued before me by the learned Vakil for the petitioner that once there is an order made under rule 92, it binds all persons affected thereby, although they were not made parties to the proceedings, and all that the Court has to do under rule 93, when it finds that such an order has been made, is to direct any person to whom the purchase-money has been paid to refund it. The question is not covered by any authority, and as I have already stated, is not free from difficulty. If it were necessary to express my view on this point, I should be inclined to hold that persons who had obtained orders for rateable distribution are persons affected by an application to set aside the sale, within the meaning of rule 92, and an order made behind their backs cannot bind them for the purposes of rule 93. But Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar has, I think, rightly pointed out that in any case this is not a matter in which any question of jurisdiction arises, so as to call for interference of this Court under section 107 of the Government of India Act. The District Munsif was entitled, in deciding upon the rights of the parties, to deal with the question of law raised before him, and this is not a case in which it could be said, even if he erred in his interpretation of rules 92 and 93, that he declined or failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by the law. The petition is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Held, that the Will did not constitute the property wakf so as to render it inalienable. [p. 44, col. 1.]

The mere construction in a private house of a mosque, which is used for worship by the members of the family occupying that house, is not sufficient, without any other act or declaration on the part of the owner, to constitute a wakf. [p. 44, col. 1.]

In the absence of any representation deceiving the opposite party and thereby causing him to alter his position for the worse, a mere promise does not constitute an estoppel. [p. 48, col. 1.]

Where it was found that a minor had derived benefit from a tenancy created to his advantage by a sarkhat executed on his behalf by a person who was his guardian in fact, though not in law:

There is no rule that only the natural or certificated guardian of a minor can act as his next friend for the purpose of legal proceedings. [p. 47, col. 1.]

A duly appointed guardian for a suit is fully entitled to represent the minor in connection with all subsequent proceedings which take place in the course of the execution of the decree passed in the suit. [p. 46, col. 2.]

Where the Commissioner's order on an application for permission to sell ancestral land under section 20 of the Oudh Laws Act was, "considering the character of the buildings I think permission might be refused at present. If the judgment-debtor takes no steps to arrange, they might be sold afterwards":

Held, that the order was not intended to dispense with the necessity for any further application for sanction but meant that the refusal was not necessarily permanent and that sanction might be granted in future if the judgment-debtor took no steps to satisfy the decree. [p. 47, col. 2.]

The Commissioner's sanction under section 20 of the Oudh Laws Act is not a mere formality, but an essential preliminary to a legal sale being held, and, therefore, parties to a decree cannot dispense with the necessity for it [p. 47, col. 2; p. 48, col. 1.]

Section 20 of the Oudh Laws Act applies to sales in execution of mortgage decrees. [p. 48, col. 1.]

In cases of mortgage decrees the omission to issue a notice under Order XXI, rule 21, Civil Procedure Code, does not render the sale of the mortgaged property absolutely null and void.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 3rd January 1916.

The Hon'ble Sayed Wazir Hasan, for Appellant No. 4.

Shaikh Mohammad Farzand Ali, for all the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Babu Bhairon Prasad, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals arise out of two connected suits. One was brought by five of the children of Mirza Farukh Muhammad Taki Ali Bahadur deceased for a declaration that compound No. 75, measuring 5 bighas 17 biswas 17 $\frac{3}{5}$ biswas in Muhalla Talab Gangni Shukul in the city of Lucknow containing a mosque, an Imambara and a number of tombs, was not liable to sale in execution of a mortgage decree obtained by Rasul Beg and Karim Beg and that the respondent Rasul Beg, one of the decree-holders who purchased the same on 10th March 1903 in execution of his decree, obtained nothing by his purchase. The other was brought by Rasul Beg for the ejectment of all the nine children and the widow of Farukh Muhammad Taki Ali Bahadur and for arrears of rent on the basis of a sarkhat executed by them as tenants of the same compound. Rasul Beg's suit is the earlier in point of time. He sued for arrears of rent and ejectment in November 1914. The declaratory suit was filed in February 1915.

The main issue in the case is whether the property in suit is wakf. But there is a further plea raised by the appellants that the sale under which the respondent Rasul Beg acquired the property was invalid on three grounds—

1. want of the Commissioner's sanction to the sale;

2. that the sale was held without proper notice to the appellants under section 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882;

3. that the representatives of Farukh Muhammad Taki Ali Bahadur were not brought on the record as required by section 234 of that Code.

On the other hand it was contended, and has been found, that these technical pleas are barred by section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and by limitation, and further that the entire suit is bad by reason of the fact that the plaintiffs, having become the tenants of the respondent in respect of the property in suit, are estopped from denying their landlord's title.

The compound in suit admittedly belonged prior to the Mutiny to Nawab Malka Geti, widow of Amjad Ali Shah, and it is proved by an inscription still in existence and is common ground between the parties that the mosque and the Imambara which it contains were constructed by her in the year 1850. It is said that she used to live in another house known as Kothi Zahur Bakhsh but that she removed her residence to the compound in suit after the Mutiny in consequence of the confiscation of the other property to Government. The following brief pedigree will show the relationship of the appellants. (A fuller pedigree is given in the plaint).

NAWAB MALKA GETI WIDOW OF AMJAD ALI SHAH, FOURTH KING OF OUDH, DIED 1866.

Prince Dara Sitwat Muhammad Raza Ali Bahadur.

Farukh Muhammad Taki Ali Bahadur, died 11th July 1900.

=Khurshed Jahan Taqiya Begam, defendant No. 8.

3 sons, 6 daughters.

All the nine children of Farukh Muhammad Taki Ali Bahadur are defendants in the suit brought by Rasul Beg. Four of the daughters and one son are plaintiffs in the declaratory suit while the remainder are arrayed as defendants. Farukh Muhammad Taki Ali Bahadur's widow is arrayed as a defendant in both cases.

The plaint contains no statement as to when or under what circumstances the alleged endowment was made or whether it was made in writing or orally. In the proceedings of 30th March 1915 prior to settlement of issues in the suit in the Subordinate Judge's Court, their Pleader stated that it was made in 1860 by means of a registered document which has since been lost. The plaintiffs' principal witness Asaf Ali Khan, an old man of 84 connected with the family of the appellants, asserts that Nawab Malka Geti who built the mosque and the Imambara executed a deed of wakf in presence of the Mujtahid and her relations, immediately after the construction of the Imambara was completed, i. e., about 1852 or 1853. This deed, if it ever existed, is not forthcoming, nor is there any satisfactory evidence of its loss. The statements on the latter point of Gajadhar Prasad, D. W. No. 5, a servant of the appellants whom the respondent had to put into the witness-box to prove the sarkhats, were rightly rejected by the trial Judge as unreliable, relating as they do to details which it was most unlikely that the witness should remember regarding a suit filed 27 or 28 years ago. In this Court the appellants have tacitly thrown over the evidence of their own witness and asked the Court to infer an oral dedication or to hold that a wakf was constituted under the Will of Nawab Malka Geti referred to below. For this purpose they rely on

(1) the Will of Nawab Malka Geti, who died on 12th April 1866;

(2) a reference to the property as wakf in a letter, dated the 5th December 1860, addressed by her to the Chief Commissioner;

(3) instances in which her grandson Farukh Muhammad Taki Ali asserted the property to be wakf in his lifetime;

(4) the existence of the mosque and the Imambara and evidence of the use of the compound as a graveyard for members of the family.

The clause of the Will dealing with the suit property is as follows:—

"The house of the Imambara with the grove and all the houses and land appertaining thereto which are known as Chiraindapurwa and three notes relating to the Imambara of the value of Rs. 10,500 shall be owned by my worthy son Mirza Dara Sitwat Muhammad Raza Ali Bahadur, may God keep him safe, and his representatives, without any co sharer therein, and he and his representatives shall remain in proprietary possession thereof in perpetuity. But it shall be incumbent upon the said son and his representatives that they shall continue to hold maglis ezadari (i. e., the Muharram celebration) for ever in the same manner as I hold during my lifetime; rather they shall improve the same from time to time; in short, they shall not make any diminution therein."

The appellants rely principally upon the direction to the legatee to continue the annual Muharram celebration. Apart from this they attempt to derive support from the fact that the "representatives" and not the heirs of the legatee are mentioned, from the fact that the land is left to him and his heirs "in perpetuity", and from the expression "three notes relating to the Imambara of the value of Rs. 10,500." Apparently the interest of these notes had been used by her for the upkeep of the Imambara and so they are described as notes relating to the Imambara. These notes were subsequently released by the decree-holders in favour of the appellants by the compromise of 12th December 1898 (vide File of Execution Case No. 405 of 1901, Subordinate Judge, Lucknow). The other expressions are expressions which it is perfectly usual to find in Wills where nothing but proprietary right is in question, and the appellants' Counsel must have been hard to put it to support his argument when he was driven to rely on them. The document not merely makes no mention of the property being trust property but it expressly leaves it to Prince Dara Sitwat, the only son of the testator, in full proprietary right.

The case that this Will constituted the property wakf was never set up in the lower Court; indeed it is inconsistent with the case which the appellants there set up. It is a new case set up for the first time in appeal.

Not much assistance either way can be obtained from the conduct of Farukh Muhammad Taki Ali. When the property was threatened with sale by creditors, he did undoubtedly on two occasions between 1888 and 1890 put forward the plea that it was wakf and not liable to sale, and this plea was accepted. The Courts appear on these occasions to have been mainly impressed by the fact that there were a large number of graves in the area in dispute. As these pleas were put forward to save the property from the hands of creditors, no great reliance can be placed on them on the ground that they were against the interest of the maker. Faced with a choice of evils he might consider it better to keep the property as wakf than run the risk of losing it altogether. On the other hand, we have the fact that Farukh Muhammad Taki Ali on two occasions mortgaged the property as property belonging to him over which he had power of disposal. On 14th November 1895 he executed in favour of Rasul Beg and his brother Karim Beg the mortgage which has given rise to the present proceedings, and on 5th February 1900 he executed a further mortgage of the suit property in favour of the Delhi and London Bank. The Bank obtained a decree for sale which it put in execution, though in the event no sale actually took place. In none of the proceedings was any plea of wakf ever taken.

The most important document in support of the appellants' case is a petition addressed by Nawab Malka Gati to the Chief Commissioner of Lucknow on 9th December 1860, in which she undoubtedly spoke of the property as wakf. The actual text is as follows:—

"Secondly, that Kothi Zahur Bakhsh, our residential house, was confiscated from us without any reason, and that a building worth six or seven lacs of rupees along with glass furniture, carpets, tents, etc., were confiscated without any fault, and we were ruined, so much so that we are living in great inconvenience in an Imambara house of insufficient accommodation and a wakf property situate in Muhalla Talab Gangni Shukul."

This is no doubt a substantial piece of evidence in the appellants' favour. But a consideration of the document as a whole deprives the expression relied on of much of its significance. Nawab Malka Gati was asking for the assistance of the British Government, on the ground that practically all her property had been confiscated and that she was left without means for her own subsistence and the support of her dependents. The suggestion that even the house in which she was living was not her own but she had been forced by destitution to take refuge in the appurtenances of an Imambara, adds a valuable touch towards heightening the impression of misery which it was her object to produce.

The appellants have, however, a second line of attack. They urge that, even if the Will of Nawab Malka Gati (Exhibit F 1) did not constitute a wakf, it had the effect of burdening the property with a trust for the maintenance of the Muharram celebration and thus rendered the property inalienable. In support of this contention they rely on the Privy Council decision in Bishen Chand Basawat v. Nadir Hossein (1). The facts of that case were, however, widely different. Whether the endowment amounted technically to a wakf or not, the property had been constituted trust property in unequivocal terms and made over to trustees appointed by the trust-deed, and what their Lordships decided was that the mere fact that the objects of the trust did not absorb the whole income of the trust property was not sufficient to render the property liable to be sold in execution of a decree.

The case of Bishen Chand Basawat v. Nadir Hossein (1) was considered by the Bombay High Court in a case [Dossa Ram-chandra v. Narsimha Damodar Bhatt (2)] which is reported in 9 Indian Cases, page 769. In that case certain property was burdened with a charge for the maintenance of certain religious services and the same argument was put forward as in this case, namely, that the Privy Council judgment above referred to prevented any part of the property from being sold in payment of debt. The learned Judges say:—

"The controversy turns upon the meaning of the partition deed, Exhibit 59 P. Is there by that deed a complete dedication of this property [to a religious trust or is there merely a gift to Vithoba of the property subject to an obligation to perform certain services? If there was a complete dedication, then admittedly the property is not liable to attachment. If there was merely a gift burdened with an obligation, then an attachable interest was admittedly left in Vithoba. The cases illustrating the two extremes are Bishen Chand Basawat v. Nadir Hossein (1) and Basoo Dhul v. Kishen Chunder Geer Gossain (3)."

It is unnecessary to determine whether the direction regarding keeping up of the annual Muharram celebration constituted a binding trust or was merely of the nature of an exhortation addressed by Malka Geti to her son, but even assuming the former the interest on the Government promissory notes, which, as has been already stated, was released by respondents in favour of the judgment-debtors by the compromise of 1888, should be amply sufficient for its upkeep.

In his last argument on this part of the case the appellants' Counsel takes a bold stand. He urges that whatever may be the case with the rest of the property, any mosque which is used for worship must necessarily be wakf even though, as in this case, it is built inside the walled enclosure of a private house for the exclusive use of the members of the family, and though the general public have no access to it. In high class Muhammadan families where the women necessarily remain secluded, it is no uncommon thing for a mosque to be constructed inside a private house to enable them to perform their devotions without publicity. Counsel would like also to extend his argument to the scattered tombs of the Imambara, in spite of the admission of one of the appellants' own witnesses that every house of a Shia Muhammadan contains an Imambara for tazias.

The doctrine if accepted would lead to very serious consequences. As another of the appellants' witnesses says, "all the well-to-do Shias keep a place apart in their houses as Imambara. There are masjids (mosques) in many ordinary houses." Even if the character of inalienability is to attach in such cases only to the mosque or Imambara, its existence would largely destroy the value of the remainder of the house as a security for a creditor. No judicial authority has been cited in support of this, to us, novel proposition. Counsel relies on certain passages from Muhammadan authorities, and in particular on a passage from the Sharaya-ul-Islam reproduced on pages 219-220 of Baillie's Imamia. The sentence relied on reads: "if one should appropriate a masjid or place of worship, it is valid though only one person should pray in it. So, also, if the appropriation is of a cemetery, it becomes a wakf by the interment in it of a single corpse". Read in connection with its context this passage is far from supporting the appellants' argument. The learned author is speaking of the seisin necessary on the part of those for whom the appropriation is made, and the passage-assumes a prior appropriation. The sentence immediately following that relied on by the appellants makes the matter clear. It runs—"But though people should pray in a masjid, or bury in a cemetery without the formal words of wakf being pronounced, neither would pass out of the property of the original owner. So, also, the result would be the same, though the proper words were used, if possession were not also given of the subject of the wakf." The same passage is cited in page 432 of Tyabji's Muhammadan Law. These passages are no authority for the proposition that the mere construction of a mōsque in a private house with evidence that it had been used for worship by the members of the family occupying that house is sufficient, without any other act or declaration on the part of the owner, to constitute a wakf.

Agreeing with the lower Court we find that the appellants have failed to establish that any part of the property in suit is wakf, or otherwise unalienable, and we decide the issue accordingly.

The next issue is whether the appellants are estopped from denying the respondent's title to the property by reason of the fact that they are at the present time occupying the premises in suit as tenants of the latter. Immediately after the dismissal of Kazim Ali's application to set aside the sale, three successive attempts to get it set aside having failed, the judgment-debtors executed a sarkhat by which they were permitted to continue in occupation of the land as tenants of the successful decree-holders. This sarkhat was executed on behalf of Kazim Ali by his major brother Muhammad Ali Mirza and on behalf of the remaining plaintiffs by their mother. Musammāt Taqiya Begam. The sarkhat sets forth that whereas Rasul Beg has obtained a sale certificate in respect of the house, and whereas the executants are still living in it and are unable to find any other place in which to reside, therefore, in order that they may be provided with a residence they have agreed to rent the premises in question from the decree holder for one year at Rs. 35 a month. This was admittedly a favourable rent, the premises being valued in the plaint at Rs. 12,000. Successive sarkhats in renewal of this agreement were executed on 14th December 1905, 15th March 1907 and 2nd April 1908 respectively. The last sarkhat was for three years. The judgment-debtors have continued to reside in the house up to the present time and paid rent up to March 1914. The cross suit brought by the decree-holder in the Munsif's Court was for rent for the period subsequent to that date. Under section 116 of the Evidence Act no tenant of immoveable property is permitted to deny that the landlord had a title thereto at the commencement of the tenancy. The plaintiffs seek to exclude the effect of the section by pleading that their brother and mother respectively had no authority to execute the sarkhats on their behalf. They say further that there was no person living who had such authority and that only a guardian appointed by the Court could have done so. Now conceding that a mother and brother respectively have no legal right of guardianship under Muhammadan Law even when the father is dead, it appears to us that the question of estoppel would depend on whether the minors derived benefit from the tenancy which the agreement created. The mother and the elder brother, though they might not be the legal guardians, were the persons on whom the care of the minors and of their interests naturally devolved. It has been urged with great force on behalf of the appellants that no such benefit could result as they were in possession, and if the respondent had attempted to turn them out they could have raised in answer to such attempt the same pleas which have been raised in this suit.

It is, however, right to look at the position as it stood at the time.

About two months after the sale was confirmed three of the judgment-debtors Taqiya Begam, Kaniz Husaini Begam and Kaniz Shappari Begam, put in an application under section 244 of the Code of 1882 asking for the setting aside of the sale on the very same objections which have been pressed in this suit. The application was rejected, the learned Subordinate Judge holding that if intended as an application under section 311 of the Code, which it was not, it would have been beyond time and that it did not lie under section 244. While this application was pending, two of the major sons of Farukh Muhammad Taki Ali filed a regular suit to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud, irregularities and want of jurisdiction. The learned Subordinate Judge held that on the merits the suit could not succeed, but he gave the plaintiffs an opportunity to pay up the decretal amount and directed that if they did so, the sale should be set aside but if not, the suit should stand dismissed with costs. They failed to avail themselves of the opportunity given to them. Finally on 12th August 1904, Kazim Ali presented through his next friend Wala Kadar the application which will be hereafter referred to and which was ultimately struck off for default.

Three several attempts had thus been made to get the sale set aside and those attempts had included all the grounds which have been put forward in the present litigation. All those attempts had failed. Possession was about to be delivered to Rasul Beg (vide evidence of the Court Bailiff, D. W. No. 1). In fact possession was delivered in accordance with the sarkhat by the officer of the Court. There was no prospect whatever that any further attempt would have any different fate from its predecessors. The plaintiffs and their brothers and sisters with their mother were faced with the alternative of coming to an agreement with the respondents or of being turned out of the property and rendered homeless. As circumstances stood at the time—and it is to this that we have to look—it can hardly be doubted that the agreement was to their advantage, and under it and the subsequent agreements they have retained undisturbed possession of the property from 1904 down to the present time, both during and subsequent to the minority of the plaintiffs. It is said that there is nothing to fix the plaintiffs individually with any payment of rent since they have come of age. This is true. The rent appears to have been paid in a lump. But on the other hand until the institution of the present suits they have made no attempt to repudiate the tenancy. They continued to occupy the house jointly with the other tenants and it was not till the rent fell into arrears and the suit for ejectment on this ground had been filed against them, that it occurred to them to set up alverse title and to try their luck with the pleas which their brothers and sisters and their mother had unsuccessfully urged more than ten years before.

Before we go on to consider the various technical objections to the execution sale, we are met at the outset by the question whether the appellants' remedy was not by application under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure rather than by suit, and if so, whether it is not time-barred. There appears to be no question that the remedy was under section 47 or rather, as the Code of 1882 was in force when the right to apply accrued, under section 244 of that Code. The sale decree on the basis of the mortgage was obtained against the plaintiff's father, Farukh Muhammad Taki Ali, on 20th September 1897 and made absolute on 16th May 1898. The sale took place on 23rd December 1902 and was confirmed on 24th February 1903. The plaintiffs-appellants claim as Farukh Muhammad Taki Ali's heirs and legal representatives. There is, therefore, no question of their not having been parties to the suit. Their predecessor-in-interest was a party and their rights only accrued after the suit was decided, Farukh Muhammad Taki Ali having died in the year 1900.

There are authorities which lay down that where an auction-purchaser, even though he be also the decree-holder, sues to recover possession on the basis of his purchase, he does so as representative of the judgment-debtor, and, therefore, the questions that arise are questions between the judgment-debtor and his own representatives and are not covered by section 244 (now section 47) of the Code of Civil Procedure. This was the decision of the majority of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Bhagwati v. Banwari Lal (4), Stanley, C. J., and Knox, J., dissenting. This case was cited with approval in Maharaj Singh v. Jagan Nath (5), a case in which the question was whether the auction-purchaser had taken possession of property to which his sale certificate gave him no right. Here the facts are entirely different. The plaintiffs impeached the validity of the execution proceedings which preceded and led up to the sale and they have impleaded, as they were bound to implead, not only the auction-purchaser, but the representatives of both the original judgment-creditors. If their objection should prevail, the judgment creditors would be put back in the position of having a decree which was incompletely executed and they would be entitled, so far as limitation allowed, to have the property put up to sale afresh so as to bind the interests of the plaintiffs.

The appellants perceived this difficulty in their way; indeed the fact that section 144 applied has hardly been contested. Their plea is that the suit should be treated as an application under section 47 in accordance with the second clause of that section. When the history of this litigation is considered, prolonged as it has been over a period of 21 years since the decree-holders obtained a decree for sale, the appellants might have considerable difficulty in satisfying the Court that they were fit subjects for the Court's discretion, but at the outset they are met by the further difficulty that such a discretion can only be exercised "subject to any objection as to limitation." The reason for this is clear. If the judgment-debtors were allowed to attack execution proceedings by suit nearly 12 years after the sale, the decree-holder, on attempting to remedy his mistakes and putting in a fresh application for execution in accordance with the law, might find his way barred by the provisions of section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which forbid any fresh application for execution to be entertained after the expiry of 12 years from the date of the decree. The period of limitation for an application under section 47 is three years under Article 181 of the Limitation Act, which would have allowed ample time for fresh sale proceedings to be taken, whereas the declaratory suit was not filed till 13th February 1915, just short of 12 years after the sale was confirmed.

The appellants were minors at the date of the sale. They rely on sections 6 and 8 of the Limitation Act. But in order to do so successfully it was necessary for them, even under the old law, to show that they attained majority within three years of the institution of the suit. Section 7 of Act XV of 1877, which was in force in 1903, extended to all applications, whereas section 7 of the present Act does not extend to applications other than applications for execution of a decree. As the right to bring an application within a certain period is not a vested right but a matter of procedure [as was held, among other cases, in Jia Bibi v. Ilahi Baksh (6)] they were no longer entitled to an extension of time on account of minority when the present Limitation Act, IX of 1908, came into force. Moreover, even if the old Act had continued to apply they have failed to establish their case. Their oral evidence was disbelieved by the Subordinate Judge and we have not been asked to consider it. Such documentary evidence as is available goes to show that even the youngest plaintiff Kazim Ali was at the time of suit at the lowest computation somewhere between 21 and 22 years old or, as the Subordinate Judge says, not less than 22 years. As the learned Subordinate Judge points out, his age was given as 14 years in an application presented on his behalf through his next friend in August 1904. It is admitted that no guardian had ever been appointed for any of the plaintiffs under the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act. They, therefore, attained majority at the age of 18 under the provisions of the Indian Majority Act.

The appellants' remedy being barred by efflux of time, it is not, strictly speaking necessary to go into the various technical objections which have been raised in the sale proceedings. As, however, these objections have been argued before us at great length, it may be well to record briefly the findings at which we have arrived upon them, it being premised that these objections would in any case only affect the shares of the female appellants (amounting in all to 4 annas 8 pies out of 16 annas), as the remaining heirs of Farukh Muhammad Taki Ali are barred by the rule of res judicata from contesting the validity of the sale. As regards those heirs who are not plaintiffs this is admitted. Kazim Ali also through his next friend Mirza Wala Kadar put forward on 12th August 1904 an objection to the sale (6) 30 Ind. Cas. 573; 13 A. L. J. 837; 37 A. 597.

KANIZ MEHDI BEGAM V. RASUL BEG.

on the same grounds as are now put forward. This objection was dismissed on the merits on 30th August 1904. It is contended on his behalf that he is not bound by this decision, on the ground that his next friend was not the natural guardian of his property under Muhammadan Law. Admittedly there was no natural guardian in existence, since that office only belongs to a paternal ancestor and Kazim Ali had no paternal ancestor living. There is, however, no rule that only the natural or certificated guardian can act as a next friend for the purpose of legal proceedings. Mirza Wala Kadar, who acted as his next friend in this case, was the husband of Kazim Ali's sister who had a common interest with himself in the subject-matter of the application. The proceedings were taken in good faith in the minor's interest and there is no reason why they should not be binding on the minor.

The first of the technical pleas is that the sale was invalid, because it was made without obtaining the sanction of the Commissioner as required by section 20 of the Oudh Laws Act, 1876. On a previous application for execution sanction had been applied for and the Commissioner passed an order in the following terms:—

"I happen to know about this case. The buildings are a mosque, Imambara and graveyard. The judgment-debtor has a large pension and could pay off all debts with interest in seven or eight years. Considering the character of the buildings I think permission might be refused at present. If the judgment-debtor takes no steps to arrange, they might be sold afterwards.

"(Sd.) H. Fraser, Commissioner.

22nd August 1898."

Subsequently on 12th December 1898 the parties entered into a compromise arranging for the payment of the debt by instalments with the following condition added:—

"If the aforesaid instalments are not paid the decree-holder shall have power, without regard to his obligation to proceed first against the mortgaged property, to immediately realise his money in execution proceedings against the persons and the entire property of every description of us, the judgment-debtors. We shall have no right to put forward any objection of fact or law in respect of it and the Court will have power to cause our property to be sold by auction without obtaining the sanction of the Commissioner."

A fresh application for execution was presented on 26th October 1900 and without any fresh application being made to the Commissioner for sanction, the property was sold and knocked down to Rasul Beg decree-holder for Rs. 705 on 23rd December 1902.

The respondents' contention is, first, that the Commissioner's order was intended to dispense with the necessity for any further application for sanction, a view adopted by the learned Subordinate Judge, and, secondly, that in any case the necessity for applying for sanction was waived and that the appellants are now debarred from raising this plea. We are unable to accept the interpretation placed on the Commissioner's order by the lower Court. All that is meant by the concluding sentence is that the refusal was not necessarily permanent and that sanction might be granted in future if the judgment-debtor took no steps to satisfy the decree. We have frequently had to deal with, and have ourselves passed orders in, somewhat similar form, and we are quite clear that the order was not intended to authorise the decree-holder to sell the property at his own pleasure whenever he might think it convenient to do so. It is also clear from their own subsequent conduct that the parties themselves did not regard the order in this light. Clause 3 of the compromise of December 1898 above referred to runs thus:—

"I agree in good faith and give trustworthy assurance that on non-payment of the aforesaid Rs. 250 the decree-holders and the creditors may act on the conditions in clause 2. At that time the Commissioner's order of 22nd August 1898 refusing to sanction sale shall not stand in the way of the sale."

The order is thus distinctly an order refusing sanction and the parties treated it as such in the very compromise which the respondents rely on. If the Commissioner's sanction was a mere formality, the parties were at liberty to dispense with it. If on the other hand such sanction was an essential preliminary to a legal sale being held, it is clear that no act of the parties could dispense with the necessity for it. The latter is the view taken in Sheikh Abdul Ghafur v. Raghubar Singh (7). That section 20 applies to sales in execution of a mortgage decree was decided as far back as 1898: Syed Fida Husain v. Kailasa (8). It is contended, however, that having caused the decree-holder to believe that he was entitled to get the property sold without sanction, they are now estopped from pleading want of sanction as invalidating the proceedings. This plea equally fails. There was no representation deceiving the opposite party and thereby causing him to alter his position for the worse. A mere promise does not constitute an estoppel. What the parties did was to enter into an agreement to dispense with a sanction which under the provisions of section 20 of the Oudh Laws Act could not be dispensed with. Such an agreement is forbidden by section 23 of the Contract Act as intended to defeat the provisions of section 20 of the Oudh Laws Act. If indeed we could hold that the requirement of sanction under that section was inserted purely in the interest of the debtor, it would be possible to hold that he had power to waive it. That, however, is not the view which has prevailed, and even apart from authority it was probably quite as much in the public interest as in that of the individual debtor that the restraint on the sale of land in execution of decree was enacted.

It is admitted that prior to the sale of the property no notice under section 248 of the Code of 1882, to show cause why the decree should not be executed, was issued to the judgment debtors. The first application for execution was that dated 21st May 1898, on which Mr. Fraser's order was passed and which resulted in the compromise of 12th December 1898, already discussed. Farukh Muhammad Taki Ali, the original judgment debtor, died on 11th July 1900. On 26th October 1900 the respondents-decree-holders applied to have the names of his widow and children brought on the record as his legal representatives under section 234 of the old Code. On the same date a separate application was made under section 256 of the Code for the appointment of a guardian ad litem of the minor judgment-debtors, the present plaintiffs. Originally their mother Musammata Taqiya Begam was named as guardian of the female plaintiffs and his elder brother Muhammad Ali Mirza as the guardian of Kazim Ali. The application contained a statement duly verified that the proposed guardians had no interest adverse to that of the minors. Muhammad Ali Mirza declined to act as his brother's guardian, and ultimately Musammata Taqiya Begam agreed to act as the guardian ad litem of all the plaintiffs and was formally appointed by an order which runs—

"Taqiya Begam is appointed guardian of the minors Kazim Ali, Jawwadi Begam, Zakia Begam, Mehdi Begam and Hadiya Begam."

The application under section 234 was, however, ultimately dismissed as premature on the ground that no execution was applied for, the judgment debtors having regularly paid the instalments due from them under the compromise of 1898. Section 234, it may be noted, did not provide for an application to bring on the record the representatives of a deceased judgment-debtor, but for executing a decree against the legal representatives where the judgment-debtor had died after the passing of the decree but before it was fully satisfied. The appellants' argument is that because the application under section 234 was ultimately dismissed, the appointment of Musammata Taqiya Begam as guardian ad litem of the plaintiffs should be treated as being only for the purpose of deciding whether that application should be allowed or not and though she was treated as their guardian ad litem in all the subsequent proceedings, the plaintiffs should be deemed to have been unrepresented. This is to take much too narrow a view. Section 456 provides for the appointment of a guardian "for the suit", and when once such a guardian had been duly appointed and had accepted the office, she was fully entitled to represent them in connection with all the subsequent proceedings which took place in the course of the execution of the decree.

KANIZ MEHDI BEGAM V. MIRZA RASUL BEG.

This disposes of the question of non-representation.

The next application for execution was made on 3rd November 1902. The decree-holders in their application stated the previous history of the case, and actually inserted a prayer for the issue of a notice under section 248. They asked for execution by sale of the property. This was more than a year after the disposal of the previous application for execution, and both on this account and because it was the first application for execution against the legal representatives notice under section 248 should have been issued. In fact no such notice was issued. The decree-holders gave in their application a summary of the previous proceedings in connection with the execution of the decree. The Court, however, merely asked the office to report whether sanction to the sale by the Commissioner had been received or not. The office put up a report drawing attention to Mr. Fraser's order of 22nd August 1898 and the Court, being apparently satisfied with this, issued a sale proclamation, with the result that the property was put up to sale and purchased by the decree-holder on 23rd December 1902. In all these proceedings the minors were duly represented by their mother Musammât Taqiya Begam.

It has been strenuously contended on the strength of the decision of the Privy Council in Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (9) that the omission to issue notice under section 248 rendered the sale absolutely null and void. It will be noticed, however, that the decree which was before their Lordships in that case, though based originally on a mortgage, was not a decree for sale under the mortgage but a simple money decree. Now there is a broad distinction to be drawn between a sale under a mortgage decree and an attachment and sale under a simple money decree. A mortgage decree directs the sale of the particular property described in it and the jurisdiction to sell is derived from the decree itself. On the other hand, a simple money decree confers in itself no jurisdiction to sell any property whatever. A valid attachment is necessary before the Court can acquire such power. If, therefore, attachment is made without the necessary notice being given to the judgment-debtors to show cause against it, this is sufficient to invalidate the subsequent sale. But in the case of a mortgage decree which expressly directs the sale of the property, the omission to issue notice, unless it can be shown that the judgment-debtors were prejudiced by it, may be no more than an irregularity which might have entitled the judgment-debtors to apply to set aside under section 311 of the Code of 1882.

For the reasons given above both appeals fail and they are accordingly dismissed with costs.

In Rasul Beg's suit a cross-objection has been filed on the ground that the learned Subordinate Judge wrongly rejected the claim for arrears of rent. It is difficult to follow the learned Subordinate Judge's finding on this point and the learned Advocate for the appellants has been unable to support it. The learned Subordinate Judge, while decreeing the claim for ejectment, dismissed the claim for arrears of rent on the ground that "no arrears of rent as claimed have been proved." The tenancy and the rate of rent having been established, it was for the defendants to show what part, if any, of the rent alleged to be in arrears had been paid up. The defendants did not even allege that the rent in suit had been paid. On the contrary they disputed the sarkhats and denied the existence of a tenancy. Under these circumstances the claim for arrears of rent should have been decreed in full and we allow the cross-objection in Appeal No. 33 of 1916 with costs and modify the decree accordingly. The plaintiff will be entitled to his full costs in the lower Court instead of only to proportionate costs.

Appeals dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT:
FULL BENCH.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 484 OF 1917.

July 30, 1918.

Present:—Sir John Wallis, Kt., Chief Justice,
Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr.
Justice Seshagiri Aiyar.

VITTA TAYARAMMA, BY HER CONSTITUTED ATTORNEY KOPPARAPU
CHINNA VENKATASUBBAYYA

—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

(CHATAKONDU SIVAYYA AND OTHERS,
—DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 TO 3—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Widow—Apostacy and re-marriage thereafter—Forfeiture of first husband's estate—Hindu Widow's Re-marriage Act (XV of 1856), s. 2, scope of—Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850), effect of.

Held, per Wallis, C. J., and Oldfield, J. (Seshagiri Aiyar, J. dissenting).—A Hindu widow, who becomes a Muhammadan and marries a Muhammadan, forfeits, by the re-marriage, her interest in her first husband's estate under the general principles of Hindu Law. [p. 56, cols. 1 & 2; p. 58, col. 2.]

Per Wallis, C. J., Oldfield and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ. (dissenting).—The forfeiture is also entailed by reason of section 2 of Act XV of 1856. [p. 57, col. 1.]

Murugayi v. Viramakali, 1 M. 226; 1 Ind. Jur. 234; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 149, followed.

Karnam Chowdappa v. Karnam Narasamma, 44 Ind. Cas. 299; 23 M. L. T. 81; 7 L. W. 411; (1918) M. W. N. 274, overruled.

Per Wallis, C. J.—Act XXI of 1850, though it relieved the widow of a Hindu from forfeiture of her widow's estate on her abjuration of Hinduism, did not enlarge the nature of that estate, so as to relieve her from forfeiture in the event of her renouncing her status of widow by re-marriage. [p. 57, col. 1.]

The words "any widow,....upon her re-marriage," in section 2 of Act XV of 1856 are wide enough to cover the case of any widow of a Hindu re-marrying, whether or not her marriage would otherwise be prohibited by any custom or interpretation of Hindu Law and whether the re-marriage was to a Hindu or to a member of another religion. [p. 57, col. 1.]

Per Oldfield, J.—Act XV of 1856 is not applicable to cases of re-marriage after apostacy, and the forfeiture is entailed only by reason of the incompatibility between the renunciation of a widow's status and the retention of a widow's estate. [p. 58, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The rule of Hindu Law that a widow, who re-marries and is thus not true to the bed of her deceased husband, cannot inherit to his estate can be applied only when she is within the pale of Hindu Law. Her re-marriage after apostacy cannot divest her of the right to inherit which subsisted to her at the date of her conversion to another religion. [p. 59, col. 1.]

of the District Munsif, Proddatur, in Original Suit No. 574 of 1913.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on 20th February 1918, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance and the material papers in the suit, and upon hearing the arguments of Messrs. M. O. Parthasarathy Aiyangar and M. O. Tirumalachariar, for the Appellant, and of Mr. T. V. Subba Rao, for Respondent No. 1, and the other respondents not appearing in person or by Pleader and the case having stood over for consideration till the 28th February 1918, the Court (Phillips and Krishnan, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

PHILLIPS, J.—In this case the sole question for decision is whether a Hindu widow, who becomes a Muhammadan and is then married to a Muhammadan, forfeits by her re-marriage her right to her first husband's estate. There is no reported decision of this Court directly in point and the views held by the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts are conflicting. In Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (1) a Bench of five Judges of the Calcutta High Court (one dissenting) answered the question in the affirmative, by reason of section 2 of the Hindu Widow's Re-marriage Act (XV of 1856), whereas the decisions of the Allahabad High Court are to the contrary effect [vide Abdul Aziz Khan v. Nirma (2)], on the ground that section 2 of Act XV of 1856 is applicable only to Hindu widows as such and is not applicable to Hindu widows who have ceased to be Hindu. It has also been held in Allahabad that section 2 of Act XV of 1856 does not apply to the re-marriage of Hindu widows, who are permitted by the rules of their caste to re-marry [in Gajadhar v. Kaunsilla (3) and in Mula v. Partab (4)]. In the latter case the Judges had hesitation in accepting the view, but followed the uniform course of decisions in their Court. Upon this latter point, this Court has taken a different view, and so long ago as 1877 it was held in Murugayi v. Viramakali (5) that a widow of the Maraver caste, in which caste re-marriage is allowed, who has re-married, has no claim to the property of her first husband. This decision was based not on section 2 of Act XV of 1856, but upon the general principles of Hindu Law. The principle relied on in that case was that a widow takes the life-interest of her deceased husband upon the fiction that she is a surviving portion of her husband. This decision was followed by Sundara Aiyar, J., in Doraisawmy Thevan, In re (6), but he relied upon Act XV of 1856, and the same view was held in Rasul Jehan Begum v. Ram Surun Singh (7) and in Vithu v. Govindu (8).

In a recent case in this Court (Second Appeal No. 510 of 1916), Karnam Chowdappa v. Karnam Narasamma (9), Seshagiri Aiyar and Napier, JJ., have followed the decision in Abdul Aziz Khan v. Nirma (2) and declined to follow Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (1), as being opposed to the ruling of the Privy Council in Moniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani (10) that a widow does not forfeit her estate by reason of subsequent unchastity. If, however, the principle of Hindu Law relied on in Murugayi v. Viramakali (5) is to be applied, i.e., that a widow continues to be a surviving portion of her husband, her re-marriage, by which she becomes a portion of her new husband, does far more to remove the fiction than mere unchastity. The question of whether a widow, who had been degraded or outcasted on account of unchastity, forfeits her interest was left undecided. The decisions in Murugayi v. Viramakali (5) and subsequent cases do not appear to have been referred to in Second Appeal No. 1510 of 1916 [Karnam Chowdappa v. Karnam Narasamma (9)], which was apparently decided solely on the construction of Act XV of 1856, and, therefore, I think it is advisable that the general question before us should be referred to a Full Bench of this Court for decision. I would like to add with respect that it appears to me that even under section 2 of Act XV of 1856 a Hindu widow who re-marries as a Muhammadan loses her rights to her first husband's property. There is nothing in section 2 which restricts its provisions to the re-marriage of Hindu widows as such, and I can see no reason for importing these words into the section merely because the Act as a whole deals with re-marriage of Hindu widows. While the Act as a whole is intended to legalise widow re-marriages, section 2 specifically provides that re-marriage, though legal, shall entail a certain disability, and this disability is not in terms restricted to a re-marriage contracted while still a Hindu. But for the widow's conversion to Muhammadanism, her re-marriage would entail forfeiture and there is nothing in the Act to suggest that such conversion is to remove her disability. If it were not for the decision in Second Appeal No. 1510 of 1916 [Karnam Chowdappa v. Karnam Narasamma (9)] I would, with all respect, follow the decision of the Calcutta High Court; but in view of that decision of this Court, I would refer the following question to a Full Bench:—

"Does a Hindu widow, who becomes a Muhammadan and marries a Muhammadan, by her re-marriage forfeit her interest in her first husband's estate?"

KRISHNAN, J.—In the suit from which this second appeal arises, plaintiff sued for a declaration of his title to a house and for the recovery of its possession. The house originally belonged to one Pullayya, a Kapu by caste, and on his death his widow, the 5th defendant, inherited a widow's estate in it under the Hindu Law. Some 10 years before suit she became a Muhammadan and soon after, married a Muhammadan husband in the nikka form. It may be mentioned here that Kapus do not allow re-marriage of widows in their caste; but the 5th defendant married a Muhammadan. Plaintiff's title is based on a sale-deed executed to him by the 4th and the 5th defendants. The 4th defendant was the sole next reversioner of Pullayya at the time of plaintiff's sale, but at the time the 5th defendant remarried, he and his brother, the father of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, now deceased, were the next reversioners equally entitled. The contesting defendants claim under defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The question, therefore, arises whether by her re-marriage the 5th defendant forfeited her rights in her first husband's property; for if she did, the plaintiff has got only the 4th defendant's half share in the property; otherwise he will be entitled to at least a life-estate in the whole property and his suit in ejectment must be decreed in full. The lower Courts held that the 5th defendant's re-marriage had worked a forfeiture and gave a decree only for half the property; plaintiff has appealed to us and has contended that there was no such forfeiture.

The point for decision is thus, as stated by my learned brother, 'whether a Hindu widow who becomes a Muhammadan and contracts a valid marriage according to Muhammadan rites forfeits her rights in her Hindu husband's estate?' It is conceded that her conversion did not per se affect her rights injuriously as they were saved by Act XXI of 1850. But it is argued for the respondents that a forfeiture was caused either by section 2 of Act XV of 1856 or if that did not apply, by the ordinary Hindu Law.

The applicability of section 2 may be considered first. In doing so, it must be borne in mind that there are two different classes of widows with reference to whom the question has been considered in the decided cases—the one class consisting of Hindu widows who belong to castes which permit re-marriage of widows in the caste itself, the other class consisting of widows who originally belonged to a caste which did not permit such re-marriage, but who subsequently obtained the right of re-marriage by conversion to a different religion. The cases of these two classes do not seem to be parallel and different considerations apply. The widows of the 2nd class could have re-married only under the Act so long as they remained Hindus, but they could no longer do so after their change of religion; whereas the widows of the 1st class need not, and usually do not, take advantage of the Act to justify their re-marriage at any time though there is nothing to prevent them from doing so. Judicial opinion has differed as to whether when the latter class re-marries under a caste custom, the Act and particularly section 2 thereof apply to them at all; vide Har Saran Das v. Nandi (11), Ranjit v. Radha Kani (12), Gajadhar v. Kaunsilla (3) and Mula v. Partab (4) holding that they do not apply and Vithu v. Govinda (8) and Duraisawmy Thevan, In re (6) to the contrary. This question need not, however, be decided in the present case as it is one of a widow of the second class. The above authorities have thus no direct bearing on the case except in so far as they construe the language of section 2.

In the case before us we have to consider whether section 2 applies to the case of widows of the second class re-marrying according to their new religion and if so, whether we should adopt a strictly literal construction of the section or a limited one confining it to cases of re-marriage under the Act. The authorities bearing on the point are (1) a Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (1), where a majority of Judges held that section 2 applied and the subsequent marriage caused a forfeiture, (2) a decision of a Bench in Allahabad in Abdul Aziz Khan v. Nirma (2) and (3) a decision of a Bench of our own Court in Second Appeal No. 151C of 1916 [Karnam Chowdappa v. Karnam Narasamma (9)] (not yet reported), both of which held that section 2 did not apply. After a careful consideration I am inclined to follow the latter view.

It seems to me that having regard to the scope and object of the Act as stated in the preamble and seeing that it is a purely enabling Act, its provisions should not be applied to affect the property of persons who do not and could not take advantage of it. The 5th defendant having remained as a Muhammadan had nothing to do with the Act. But it is argued that, though this may be so, the language of section 2 is wide enough to make it applicable independent of the Act itself. Ordinarily the provisions of an Act must be construed with reference to its scope and object. We must, therefore, see whether the language of section 2 is clear enough to justify a departure from this rule. If we turn to the section it speaks of forfeiture on "re-marriage." Does it mean re-marriage in any form whatever or only re-marriage under the Act? I am inclined to think it is the latter. It will be seen from its language that a strictly literal construction of the section will make it applicable even to a Christian or Muhammadan or other non-Hindu widow who was never a Hindu at all, but who happened to inherit by virtue of a Will of her husband or other testamentary disposition a limited interest in his property, without an express permission from him to re-marry. I take it no one will contend that the section should be construed in this very wide manner to include persons who were never Hindus at all. It is clear, therefore, that some limitation must be placed on the words of the section and the only logical way to do it is, it seems to me, to take the scope and object of the Act and construe the section accordingly. We must look to the preamble and to the scheme of the Act generally to see what its scope and object are—See Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, 5th Edition, page 69 et seq. It is clear, as already stated, that the Act is an enabling one intended to remove disabilities of certain persons in the matter of re-marriage and to give them new rights regarding it. A reference to the various sections of the Act shows that the scheme of the Act is that, after authorising re-marriage under section 1, it deals with the conditions and consequences of such re-marriage in the following sections. The word "re-marriage" in section 2 should, therefore, I think, be reasonably read as referring only to a re-marriage under the Act and not to any re-marriage whatsoever.

In the judgment of the Full Bench in Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (1), there is no discussion of the question at all. The learned Chief Justice merely says: "Section 2 includes all widows who are within the scope of the Act, that is to say, all persons who being Hindus become widows." Though this case was followed in Rasul Jehan Begum v. Ram Surun Singh (7), the learned Judges there based the forfeiture on the Hindu Law and not on the Act.

The reasoning in the Full Bench case in Vithu v. Govinda (8) has, no doubt, a bearing on this part of the case, though that case itself is one relating to the first class of widows. Mr. Justice Ranade says that section 2 should be construed literally, because "so far as the section is concerned, the law has only declared what was an universal practice, and this fact must have been present to the mind of the Legislature and explains the omission of all qualifying words." With all deference I am unable to follow this method of interpretation, nor am I satisfied that the practice of widows forfeiting their right in their first husband's property on re-marriage is so universal in India as is stated. If there are castes which allow widows to re-marry and keep their estates at the same time, and I am not sure there are not any, I can see no reason to think that the Legislature in enacting Act XV of 1856 intended to interfere with the rights of such widows. If section 2 is taken to cover such cases, we cannot escape the conclusion that such rights are abrogated. I think clearer and more direct language should be required before such an inference can be drawn: With all respect, I am unable to adopt the reasoning of the learned Judge.

As already stated, I am inclined to follow the ruling of our own High Court in Second Appeal No. 1510 of 1916 [Karnam Chowdappa v. Karnam Narasamma (9)] and of the Allahabad Court in Abdul Aziz Khan v. Nirma (2), in so far as they hold that section 2 does not apply to a Hindu widow re-marrying after conversion; but with all respect, I am not prepared to follow them when they hold further that no forfeiture at all was caused by the re-marriage, for I am inclined to think that a forfeiture is caused under the Hindu Law. I shall now consider this question,

VITTA TAYARAMMA v. CHATAKONDU SIVAYYA.

My learned brothers in the above second appeal hold that the decision of the Privy Council in Moniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani (10) is conclusive on the matter, as they treat the widow's re-marriage as amounting at the highest only to "being false to the bed of her husband," and they decided that no forfeiture was, therefore, caused. With all respect I am unable to follow this view. The authorities cited to us are all against it, and they have not been considered by my learned brothers. The case of Murugayi v. Viramakali (5) held on a consideration of the principles of the Hindu Law that in the case of a Maraver widow re-marrying, she forfeited her life-estate, there being no custom to the contrary in the caste. This view was followed by the referring Judges, Wilson and Banerji, JJ., in Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (1), who state their reasons for their view in full and I agree with them and need not re-state those reasons. In fact section 2 of the Act is based upon a recognition by Legislature that a Hindu widow's estate is ordinarily forfeited under the Hindu Law by her re-marriage. This view and the Madras case were both followed by another Bench in Calcutta in Rasul Jehan Begum v. Ram Surun Singh (7). For some reason not apparent, the Allahabad High Court has not considered this position at all. The Bombay decision in Vithu v. Govinda (8), as already pointed out, expressly proceeded on the footing that the usual practice among Hindus was to treat the widow's estate as terminated by re-marriage. The authorities, except the second appeal above referred to, are all in favour of the view I am taking.

I shall now examine the reasons given in Second Appeal No. 1510 of 1916 [Karnam Chowdappa v. Karnam Narasamma (9)] for the view taken in it. The Privy Council case will no doubt be conclusive on the matter if the view that the widow's re-marriage amounts at the highest only to the adoption of a life of unchastity is correct. With all respect I am entirely unable to endorse this view of her position. I think it is wrong to treat the life of a re-married woman as necessarily a life of unchastity and nothing more. There is a clear and broad distinction between unchastity and re-marriage; the former is an uncertain and changeable course of conduct while the latter is a definite legal step by which the woman ceases to be any longer the widow of the deceased. This is pointed out by both Wilson and Banerji, JJ., in Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (1). An observation in Gajadhar v. Kaunsilla (3) may also be referred to. It was suggested that the effect of the re-marriage should be considered from the point of view of the Hindu Law and as that Law does not recognise or sanction the marriage of a Hindu widow with a Muhammadan, such marriage should be treated as having no effect in changing the widow's status. It seems to me that this is an erroneous way of looking at the question. The status of an individual has to be decided with reference to his personal law at the time. There can be no doubt that after her conversion the 5th defendant was governed by the Muhammadan Law as to her marriage—See section 16 of the Civil Courts Act,—and therefore her second marriage was a perfectly valid one. She can, therefore, no longer be treated as a widow. A woman cannot be a married woman for certain purposes and a widow for others. I am, therefore, of opinion that her widowhood was terminated for all purposes and she cannot be treated as an unchaste widow under the Hindu Law.

On this view, the Privy Council case is easily distinguishable, as their Lordships were not dealing in it with a case of re-marriage at all. All that was decided in that case was that chastity was not a necessary condition for the continuance of the widow's estate after it had become vested, but it was not decided that the continuance of widowhood itself was not necessary.

Relying on the observations of Prinsep, J., in Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (1), it was next urged that as the determination of the widow's estate under the Hindu Law on re-marriage is based on the legal fiction that she takes her estate as the surviving half of her husband's body and as conferring spiritual benefits on him by her acts and as this fiction comes to an end on her conversion, it can no longer be relied on to divest her estate. The answer to this seems to me to be that the Hindu widow's estate is by its very nature an estate subject to limitations, one of which is a liability to forfeiture on re-marriage or cessation of widowhood. The condition is inferred from the origin of the estate and is one that attaches itself to the estate from its very commencement. Unless, therefore, the condition is abrogated by some subsequent event, it must continue to attach to the estate in the widow's hands always. Act XXI of 1850 which saved the estate from forfeiture on conversion had no effect on this condition and nothing else has been shown as affecting it. It is, therefore, not necessary to apply the legal fiction at the time of the forfeiture.

It is true, as pointed out by Prinsep, J., in the same case, that there is an anomaly in a widow losing her estate by her re-marriage when she does not do so by leading a notoriously unchaste life. But this anomaly exists equally in the case of marriages under Act XV of 1856 and under the caste custom. The existence of the anomaly does not seem to me to be an argument against forfeiture on re-marriage. Such a forfeiture is consistent with the notions of the Hindus generally.

For the above reasons I am of opinion that the 5th defendant, the widow in this case, lost her rights in the plaint house on her marrying her Muhammadan husband, the forfeiture being caused under the Hindu Law and not by section 2 of Act XV of 1856. The question is an important one on which there has been a considerable difference of opinion, and in fact we are differing from the view in Second Appeal No. 1510 of 1916 [Karnam Chowdappa v. Karnam Narasamma (9)] as to the final result. I, therefore, agree to the Order of Reference to the Full Bench proposed by my learned brother.

The second appeal came on for hearing before the Full Bench on 15th July 1918.

Mr. M. O. Parthasarathy Aiyangar (with him Mr. M. O. Tirumalachari), for the Appellants.—Act XXI of 1850 preserves the rights of inheritance by the apostate. The only question is whether the re-marriage of a Hindu widow after conversion entails a forfeiture of her rights in her husband's estate either under Hindu Law or under section 2 of Act XV of 1856.

Under the general Hindu Law no forfeiture is caused by the widow being false to her husband's bed. A re-marriage, taking it at its highest, amounts only to the adoption of a life of unchastity. Vide Second Appeal No. 1510 of 1916 [Karnam Chowdappa v. Karnam Narasamma (9)]. There is nothing in Hindu Law which penalises the widow in this regard. The forfeiture may follow on the re-marriage only when the widow is within the pale of Hindu Law. Her conversion causes a change in the law by which she is governed. A Hindu widow who embraces Muhammadanism is no longer subject to Hindu Law.

Section 2 of Act XV of 1856 is an enabling section and should be liberally construed. The Act should not be applied to persons who could not take advantage of it. The word 're-marriage' in the section could only refer to cases of re-marriage under the Act and not to all forms of re-marriage. It could not entail the forfeiture penalty to persons who are not Hindus at the time of the re-marriage. Vide Abdul Aziz Khan v. Nirma (2) and Karnam Chowdappa v. Karnam Narasamma (9).

Mr. T. V. Subbu Row, for the Respondents.—There is no analogy between unchastity and re-marriage. The latter is a definite act whereby the person re-marrying ceases to be the widow of the deceased. The widowhood terminates on the second marriage and the right to inherit also lapses.

Act XXI of 1850 cannot be invoked in aid of the continuance of the widow's estate after apostasy and re-marriage with a person of her new faith. That Act relieves the Hindu widow from forfeiture of her widow's estate on her renouncing the Hindu religion. It does not enlarge that estate or prevent forfeiture when she renounces her status as a widow.

Section 2 of Act XV of 1856 applies to the case. The word 'any widow' is wide enough to cover cases of convert widows. The section is declaratory and it would be incongruous that re-marriages by Hindu widows to persons of other religions should be held to be outside the scope of the section.

OPINION.

WALLIS, C. J.—I agree with the conclusion of Krishnan, J., in his

VIITA TAYARAMMA v. GHATAKONDU SIVAYYA.

Order of Reference that, independently of section 2 of Act XV of 1856, the widow of a Hindu forfeits her husband's estate on re-marriage. This was, in my opinion, decided by this Court in Murugayi v. Viramakali (5), a decision which, as I shall show, has been repeatedly approved in this and other High Courts. That decision did not, as was contended before us, proceed on any proof of a custom of forfeiture on re-marriage in the particular caste, but on general principles of Hindu Law, though in support of its conclusion the Court referred, as the Bombay Court did in a later case, to the fact that the extensive enquiry, the results of which are recorded in Steele's Hindu Castes, showed that among the very numerous classes of Hindus who practised re-marriage in the Deccan such a forfeiture was an invariable incident of re-marriage. Following and relying on the decision of this Court, Wilson and Banerji, JJ., [Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (1)] in their Orders of Reference, to which they adhered in their subsequent judgments, expressed the opinion that section 2 of Act XV of 1856 was merely declaratory, and the same view was expressed in Rasul Jehan Begum v. Ram Surun Singh (7) and by Ranade, J., delivering the judgment of the Full Bench of the Bombay Court in Vithu v. Govinda (8). In Har Saran Das v. Nandi (11), which was followed in Ranjit v. Badha Rani (12), it was held that a widow, who according to the custom of her caste was entitled to re-marry, did not forfeit her husband's estate on re-marriage on the ground that the case was not governed by section 2 of Act XV of 1856. The contention that the estate was liable to forfeiture independently of the section was not raised in those cases. When it was raised by Pandit Sundar Lal in Gajadhar v. Kaunsilla (3), Stanley, C. J., and Banerji, J., were inclined to accept it but for the earlier decisions, as to which they again expressed their doubts in Mula v. Partab (4), and Abdul Aziz Khan v. Nirma (2) only followed the earlier decisions without comment. The decision in Murugayi v. Viramakali (5) has, therefore, been approved by the Calcutta and Bombay Courts, and would have been approved by Stanley, C. J., and Banerji, J., in Allahabad but for the earlier decisions of that Court. I think we should be very slow to interfere with a decision which has stood so long and is supported by so much authority, and with great respect I cannot agree with the conclusion of a Bench of this Court in Second Appeal No. 1510 of 1916 [Karnam Chowdappa v. Karnam Narasamma (9)] that it must be considered to have been overruled by the decision of the Privy Council in Moniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani (10) that a Hindu widow does not forfeit her widow's estate by reason of unchastity committed after succeeding to the estate. In Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (1) that contention was overruled by Wilson and Banerji, JJ., with whom I respectfully agree. No question of re-marriage was raised before the Privy Council and, as observed by Wilson, J., there is a very broad distinction between misconduct on the part of a widow as a widow, and her ceasing to be a widow. In this state of the authorities I think the decision in Murugayi v. Viramakali (5) ought not to be overruled by this Court.

Considering the question apart from authority, I am of the same opinion. In his principles of the Hindu Law, page 173 (1st Edition), Mr. Ghose cites a text of Manu, IX, 191, "But if two (sons) begotten by two (different men) contend for the property (in the hands) of their mother, each shall take, to the exclusion of the other, what belonged to his father." And he also cites another text to the same effect attributed to Vishnu but not to be found in the recension that has come down to us. These texts can hardly refer to the estate which the widow took only in default of male issue. But whatever may have been the rule in archaic times when re-marriage was permitted, I think, considering the ideas which in later Hinduism underlay the prohibition of widow re-marriage as far as possible and the encouragement of Sati, that the retention by a widow of her deceased husband's estate is altogether incompatible with her renunciation of her status as his widow; and I respectfully agree with the opinion of the Bombay High Court in Vithu v. Govinda (8) that the invariable rule among so many castes in the Deccan that re-marriage, when permitted, entailed the forfeiture of the first husband's estate, is merely an illustration of that essential incompatibility which was again recognised by the Legislature when it enacted Act XV of 1856. As regards Act XXI of 1850 I agree with the opinion of Wilson, J., in Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (1) that, though that Act relieved the widow of a Hindu from forfeiture of her widow's estate on her abjuration of Hinduism, it did not enlarge the nature of that estate, so as to relieve her from forfeiture in the event of her renouncing her status of widow by re-marriage.

The construction of section 2 of Act XV of 1856 is not free from difficulty and has occasioned much difference of opinion, but, on the whole, I hesitate to differ from the liberal construction put upon the section by the Full Benches of the Calcutta and the Bombay Courts. The words "any widow, ... upon her re-marriage" in section 2 are, I am inclined to think, wide enough to cover the case of any widow of a Hindu re-marrying, whether or not her marriage would otherwise be prohibited by any custom or interpretation of Hindu Law, and whether the re-marriage was to a Hindu or to a member of another religion. As observed by Wilson, J., the Legislature was well aware of the existence of such re-marriages by the widows of Hindus, and must, I think, have considered that the case for enforcing the forfeiture on re-marriage was in the first case as strong as, and in the second case much stronger than, in the case for enforcing it as regards the re-marriages which were legalized by section 1. The words "any widow" in section 2 are certainly wider than was necessary, if it was intended to confine the operation of the section to the last mentioned class of marriages only. Having regard to the generality of the language, the fact that the section was in substance though not in form declaratory, and the incongruity which would result from holding re-marriages by the widows of Hindus to persons of another religion to be outside its scope, I think the more extensive and beneficial construction should be adopted. On both grounds, therefore, I would answer the question in the affirmative.

OLDFIELD, J.—We have been asked to answer the question referred in the affirmative (1) with reference to section 2, Act XV of 1856, and (2) with reference only to Hindu Law.

I regret that I cannot concur in the judgment just delivered and adopt the first of these grounds of decision. The section is worded generally as dealing with the rights and interests of "any widow". One construction of this expression, that it includes widows of whatever nationality or creed, has not been pressed and is excluded alike by the language of the preamble of the Act, to which I return, and the incongruity of the results, which it would involve. We have then to assume that the widows in question were originally Hindu widows and to choose between the contentions that the section relates only to those who re-marry as such or that it deals also with re-marriages after apostasy, solemnized by the rites of other creeds.

It would follow from the latter construction that the Legislature intended to deal in Act XV of 1856 with the problem, not only of Hindu widow re-marriage, but also of disability due to "renunciation of or exclusion from the communion of any religion", with which it had dealt recently in Act XXI of 1850. Yet the later Act contains no reference, express or implied, to the earlier, although the former declares and the latter exempts from forfeiture and although re-marriage, the event contemplated in the one, would in many cases be connected closely with the renunciation or exclusion dealt with in the other. So also the preamble to Act XV of 1856, which is full, refers only to Hindu widows, to the advisability of enabling Hindus, who may be so minded, to adopt the custom of re-marriage, and to the justice of relieving such Hindus and removing obstacles to the re-marriage of Hindu widows; and the references to Hindus in sections 1, 3 and 6 are clear, the last, in which Hindu ceremonies are prescribed, being particularly unambiguous. The wider construction, for which plaintiff contends, has in fact been based on no explicit extension of the subject-matter of the Act to widows in the other sections which no doubt include section 2, and only on the general references in them. In the circumstances, these references must, in my opinion, be read as qualified by the context. The conjecture of Wilson, J., in Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (1) that they were intended to apply to the class of widows, who might change their faith, seems to me

VITTA TAYARAMMA v. CHATAKONDU SIVAYYA.

(with all respect) unwarranted, since, as the learned Judge observes, the Legislature knew, not only of the existence of such widows, but also that they could already marry again without its assistance; and there is no reason for the assumption that it intended to deal with their position in an enactment passed statdly to give such assistance to widows, who required it. I am, therefore, constrained to hold that the Act is inapplicable to the present case and to turn to the general law as a ground of decision.

The Hindu Law is, as this and other High Courts have held since Murugayi v. Viramakali (5), that a widow's re-marriage entails forfeiture of her husband's estate. And I respectfully agree with the learned Chief Justice that there is no reason for departure from this long current of authority. But those cases dealt with re-marriage by the widow as a Hindu; and it is argued that a re-marriage, even after the widow's conversion, with the ceremonies of her new faith must be regarded, as it would be by Hindu Law, as no marriage and the widow's conduct as mere unchastity, which with reference to Moniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani (10) entails no forfeiture. This view has been taken lately by a Bench of this Court in Second Appeal No. 1510 of 1916 [Karnam Chowdappa v. Karnam Narasamma (9)] and is regarded by Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in his judgment, which I have had the advantage of reading, as consistent with the decision in Sundari Letani v. Pitambari Letani (13). But with all respect, I cannot follow this application of the authorities. The last cited dealt with a case of real unchastity, since the person concerned was not a widow, but had gone through a Muhammadan ceremony of marriage after being deserted, not divorced, by her Hindu husband, who was still alive. And in Moniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani (10) there was no question of a re-marriage, which could on any view be regarded as legal, but only of a temporary illicit connection. The judgment is based on the ancient texts and considerations of convenience. But the former were not dealing, and in the state of contemporary society could have no occasion to deal, with non-Hindu re-marriages, and the latter, based on the insecurity of titles created by the widow, if they could be disturbed on proof of immorality, which is essentially secret and which the reversioners would be interested to promote, are irrelevant, when the question is of a connection, contracted publicly and authorized by the general law. I need offer no general opinion at present regarding the effect of the marriage of a Hindu with a non-Hindu woman or the position of their issue. In the case before us, authority being wanting, it is sufficient for me to express my respectful concurrence in the ground of decision proposed by the learned Chief Justice, the incompatibility between renunciation of a widow's status and retention of a widow's estate; and I do so the more willingly, because I can thus avoid the conclusion that a marriage is invalid for one purpose, although it is valid for all others.

I would answer the question in the affirmative.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I regret I am unable to agree with the conclusion of the learned Chief Justice and Oldfield, J. I do not wish to add much to the judgment of myself and of Mr. Justice Napier in Second Appeal No. 1510 of 1916 [Karnam Chowdappa v. Karnam Narasamma (9)], on the question whether section 2 of Act XV of 1855 would deprive a Hindu widow, embracing Muhammadanism and afterwards marrying a Muhammadan, of the estate which she inherited from her Hindu husband. I agree generally with Oldfield, J., on this question. The belief that a Hindu widow adds insult to the injury to the memory of her deceased husband by apostasy first and by subsequent marriage with a person belonging to a different faith, is not a ground for reading into section 2 of Act XV of 1856 words which are not to be found there. The Act was intended to give relief to a certain class of people and not to penalise others; and Courts are not at liberty to supply a defect of this kind by indirect legislation. I, therefore, adhere to the view that I took in Second Appeal No. 1510 of 1916 [Karnam Chowdappa v. Karnam Narasamma (9)] on this question.

On the question of the applicability of Hindu Law, I wish to make a few observations in addition to what I stated in the second appeal already referred to, (13) 32 C. 871; 2 C. L. J. 97; 9 C. W. N. 1003.

VITTA TAYARAMMA v. CHATAKONDU SIVAYYA.

It is said that the Hindu Law does not countenance inheritance by a person who has not been true to the bed of her deceased husband. I do not dissent from this view so long as it can be said that the party against whom this rule of Hindu Law is to be applied is within the pale of that Law. There is a great deal to be said for the position taken up by Mr. Justice Banerji in Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (1) on the question of Hindu Law. But it need scarcely be added that the Hindu widow who has embraced Muhammadanism and has married a Muhammadan is not subject to Hindu Law. In Sundari Letani v. Pitambari Letani (13), the Court had to consider the case of a Hindu daughter who had become a Muhammadan and had subsequently married a Muhammadan. The point was whether her children were legitimate and could inherit to the estate of their Hindu grandfather: "The woman was abandoned but not divorced by her husband." Her position was thus stated by the learned Judges: "She is in the position of an unchaste daughter who could not inherit according to Hindu Law." I think the same principle is applicable to the widow in the present case.

There are three incidents in the life of this woman. The first was when she inherited the estate of her husband after his death. In the Order of Reference, Mr. Justice Krishnan says that section 2 of Act XV of 1855 is based upon a recognition by Legislature that a Hindu widow's estate is ordinarily forfeited under the Hindu Law by her re-marriage. Even if I assent to this view, I fail to see how this conclusion touches a re-marriage while the widow has become a Muhammadan convert. It was contended that the right of a Hindu widow to inherit her husband's property is dependent upon a text of Brahaspati to this effect:—"He who has left a widow surviving him has got the half of his body verily alive, and when half of his body is alive, who else shall take his property?" The metaphor is undoubtedly picturesque. But it would not be safe to deduce principles of law by parity of reasoning from such a figure of speech. Granting that the reason of a widow inheriting to her deceased husband in preference to divided members of the co-parcenary is based solely on this principle, it can only apply to a state of things which came into existence on the death of her husband. At that moment either by reason of this figure of speech or by reason of the more prosaic statement of the law contained in Yagnyavalkya Smriti which is to the following effect:—"Wife (widow), daughter, father, mother, brothers, their sons Gotraja (of the same family), Bandhus, disciples and Brahmacharins of the same school, each succeeding one is heir in the absence of the person immediately preceding him in the order of enumeration,—this is the law in respect of the inheritance to the property of a sonless deceased person of whatever caste", the widow inherited the estate. The second stage in her life was her conversion to Muhammadanism, which is found to have been subsequent to the death of her husband. If the Hindu Law had not been legislated upon, there could hardly be any doubt that conversion to a different faith would have entailed forfeiture of the estate inherited by the woman. But Act XXI of 1850, which was designed to preserve the rights of persons who exercised their liberty of conscience in entering the fold of another religion, maintained the rights of the widow to continue in possession of her deceased husband's property. Section 1 distinctly says: "So much of any law or usage within the territories of the East India Company as inflicts on any person forfeiture of rights or property or may be held in any way to impair or affect any right of inheritance by reason of his or her renouncing or having been excluded from the communion of any religion ceases to be enforced as law in the Courts of the East India Company". So under this Act the widow who had embraced Muhammadanism could not be deprived of the rights which she possessed prior to her conversion. Her inheritance subsisted. The third stage in her career was her marrying a Muhammadan. I fail to see how this step can deprive her of what she obtained under the Hindu Law and what the Legislature preserved to her under Act XXI of 1850. I am unable to find anything in the Hindu Law or in Act XXI of 1850 which can have this effect. It is hardly necessary to refer to cases in which it has been held that under the Hindu

Law properties once vested in a male or a female cannot be divested by reason of the fact that if the subsequent state of life had existed at the time of the devolution of interest he or she would not have inherited the property. The well-known case of Moniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani (10) laid down that principle in unequivocal terms. One sentence from the judgment may be quoted as bearing upon conversion: "The widow has never been degraded or deprived of caste. If she had been, the case might have been different, subject to the question as to the construction of Act XXI of 1850; for upon degradation from caste, before that Act, a Hindu, whether male or female, was considered as dead by the Hindu Law, so much so that libations were directed to be offered to his manes as though he were naturally dead." Following this decision all the High Courts have held that property once vested, under similar circumstances, cannot be divested. In Abilakh Bhagat v. Bhekhi Mahto (14), which was a case of a person becoming insane after inheritance had vested in him, Mr. Justice Ghose said that the principle of Moniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani (10) was applicable to that case. In Sanku v. Putamma (15) the same principle was followed. Deo Kishen v. Budh Pratash (16) is also to the same effect. It was a decision of five Judges and they affirm the proposition that under Hindu Law subsequent conduct does not put an end to the rights once properly acquired. Murli Singli v. Jai Singh (17) follows this ruling. Much reliance was placed in the argument before us on Murugayi v. Viramakali (5). The judgment is based upon custom. It was the case of a person who was within the pale of Hinduism. I fail to see how that case affects the present question. I may draw attention to the observations of Mr. Ghose in his book on Hindu Law, wherein he says that Manu does not lay down that re-marriage while still a Hindu would deprive a Hindu widow of the inheritance once vested in her. Although the principle of stare decisis must be respected, I am not satisfied that in the present case we would be violating the rule of law laid down in Murugayi v. Viramakali (5) by holding that the widow marrying a Muhammadan does not forfeit the estate which came to her from her Hindu husband. Moreover cases of this description are of rare occurrence, and when a very important principle relating to the applicability of Hindu Law is debated, I fail to see how a decision, passed forty years ago on a different set of circumstances, can be regarded as binding authority with reference to facts of a totally different character. For all these reasons, in my opinion, the answer to the question must be in the negative.

Answered in the affirmative.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 19, 25—Father, whether can be appointed guardian—"Guardian", meaning of—"Custody", what is—Welfare of minor—Enquiry, duty of, whether can be delegated by Court.

A Court has no power under the Guardians and Wards Act to appoint a father the guardian of the person of his children, and where such appointment is made, the order of appointment is without jurisdiction. [p. 61, col. 2.]

The expression "guardian", as used in section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act, is not confined to statutory guardians appointed under the Act, but includes any person having the care of the person of a minor or of his property or of both. Such a person need not necessarily be the de facto guardian of the minor. [p. 61, col. 2; p. 62, col. 1.]

The "custody" referred to in section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act includes both actual and constructive custody. [p. 62, col. 1.]

The duty of inquiry under that section is cast upon the Court and cannot be delegated. [p. 62, col. 2.]

A father may in his discretion entrust the custody and education of his children to another but by doing so, he does not cease to be his children's guardian that being an office which in his lifetime he cannot delegate to a third person. [p. 62, col. 1.]

MUSHAF HUSAIN v. MOHAMMAD JAWAD.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge of Rae Bareilly, which purports to have been made under section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890).

The facts are as follows:—

Syed Mushaf Husain, the appellant, had a daughter who was married to the respondent, Syed Mohammad Jawad.

Three male children were born of this marriage, and it seems to be the fact that since the time of their birth they have been living with their maternal grandfather.

Some time ago Syed Mohammad Jawad applied to the Court under the Guardians and Wards Act to be appointed guardian of the person and property of his minor sons. This application was opposed by the maternal grandfather. The result was that Mohammad Jawad was appointed the personal guardian of the children; the grandfather was appointed guardian of their property.

The application out of which the present proceedings have arisen was then made by Mohammad Jawad under section 25 of the Act: he asked for an order directing that the minors should be made over to his custody.

The application was resisted on the ground that Mohammad Jawad had no authority under the Act to make it. The District Judge has decided in favour of the applicant and it is against his order directing that the minors should be transferred to their father's custody that this appeal has been filed.

It is argued here, in the first place, that Mohammad Jawad is not the "guardian" of his children within the meaning of that expression as defined in the Act [section 4, clause (2)]. This objection was raised in the Court below, but was overruled on the ground that the Court had already appointed Mohammad Jawad to be the guardian of the persons of his minor sons, that the order of appointment had become final and could no longer be called in question.

It is not denied here that such an order was made, but the contention is that it was made without jurisdiction. Section 19, clause (b), of the Act is referred to in support of this argument, and to me it appears that the language of the clause does sustain the case put for the appellant. It lays down that, subject to the special provisions of the Act relating to European British subjects, the Court has no authority to appoint and declare a guardian of the person of a minor whose father is living and is not in the opinion of the Court unfit to be guardian of the person of the minor. This does not mean that where the father is a fit person the Court has power to appoint him to be the guardian. There is no necessity for doing so, the fact being that under the personal law the father is generally the authorized guardian of his minor children. It is admitted in the present case that under the Muhammadan (Shia) Law which governs the relations between Mohammad Jawad and his minor sons, he is their natural and lawful guardian.

This view of the law is laid down in a ruling of the Judicial Committee reported as Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (1), where it was held that the Act does not authorize the Court to appoint the father of a minor to be the guardian of his person.

The learned Judge of the Court below was wrong, therefore, in thinking that the order appointing Jawad to be the personal guardian of his minor sons could not be called in question; as a matter of law the order is inoperative, having been made without jurisdiction.

This, however, does not dispose of the question whether the father was legally competent to apply to the Court under section 25 of the Act, for having regard to the language of the definition clause such an application may be made by a "guardian", that is, "a person having the care of the person of a minor or of his property, or of both his person and property." Such a person need not necessarily be a statutory guardian appointed under the Act.

The appellant, however, maintains that Jawad is not such a "guardian" on the ground that he has never had the actual custody of the minor children. In other words, the case is that the "guardian" referred to in the Act must be at least a de facto guardian.

I am not disposed to assent to this proposition, for the definition does not, in my opinion, justify the notion that the "guardian" must be a person having actual custody of the minor. The word used in the definition is "care" and not "custody"; as their Lordships point out in the Madras case cited above [Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (1)], a father may in his discretion entrust the custody and education of his children to another but by doing so he does not cease to be his children's guardian, that being an office which in his lifetime he cannot delegate to a third person. It cannot, therefore, be argued that Muhammad Jawad, the father of these three children, is not the guardian of their persons merely because the actual custody of them is with their maternal grandfather. I hold accordingly that as their guardian Jawad was legally competent to present the application under section 25.

There remains, however, a more difficult question, and that is whether in the circumstances disclosed Muhammad Jawad had lawful grounds for asking the Court to make an order in his favour under this section.

According to the language of the enactment such an order can only be made "if a ward leaves or is removed from the custody of a guardian of his person".

Here it is pointed out that the minors have never since the time of their birth been in the custody of their father, and so it is argued that there can be no case of their having "left" or "been removed from" such custody.

A case very similar to the present one came before the Madras High Court a little while ago [Of. Mohideen Ibrahim Nachi v. Mahomed Ibrahim Sahib (2)]. There as here the applicant under section 25 had never had the actual custody of his minor son. The language of the section was discussed at length in the judgment and it was held that the word "custody" as used in section 25 ought to be held to include both actual and constructive custody. It was admitted that this interpretation could only be arrived at by some straining of the language, but it was considered that it was justified because it would serve to carry out the intention of the Legislature in framing the Act.

It certainly would be strange if we were to take it that the law, while it provides for and insists upon the due discharge by a guardian of his duties towards his wards, should deny him the means of doing those duties, and I agree that for the purpose of enabling the guardian to do his duty by the ward it should be assumed that the Court can make an order for the delivery to him of custody of his ward, even if it is the case that he has not previously had the ward in his actual keeping. And this can only be done by adopting the liberal interpretation of the term "custody" accepted by the Madras Court.

There remains only one other matter. Even if Mohammad Jawad is entitled to make the application under section 25, and if he has a lawful occasion for applying, no order can properly be made unless the Court is satisfied that it will be for the welfare of the ward to return to his guardian's custody, and the Court must arrive at this conclusion after a judicial investigation. It is not made to appear that any due inquiry has been made upon this point. I was informed in the course of arguments that either during the present proceedings or in connection with the earlier proceedings which resulted in Jawad's being appointed the personal guardian of the minors, there was some inquiry and report by a Tahsildar. All that need be said on this score is that the duty of inquiry under section 25 is cast upon the Court and cannot be delegated.

In order to enable me to come to a right decision it is necessary for me to remand the following issue for determination by the District Judge:—

"Is it for the welfare of the minors that they should be delivered over to the custody of their father and guardian, Syed Mohammad Jawad?"

The Judge will receive any evidence which the parties may desire to produce and will return his finding within six weeks from the date of his receiving this order of remand. Fifteen days, to count

ABDUL RAHIM MAHOMED NARMA

AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

versus

THE MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONER FOR THE CITY OF BOMBAY AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS.

City of Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888), ss. 297, 299, 301—Preservation of regular line in public street—Commissioner, powers of, exercise of—Acquisition of land—Compensation, calculation of, mode of.

There is nothing in the City of Bombay Municipal Act which prescribes the frame of mind in which the Municipal Commissioner is to exercise the powers given by section 297 of the Act, or which restricts the objects for which he is to exercise them to the mere regulation of the street in question or to the creation or preservation of a regular line in it. "Preservation of Regular Line in Public Streets," the heading to the group of sections beginning with section 297, does not limit the exercise of the powers given by the express words of the Act. [p. 68, cols. 1 & 2.]

For the purpose of building a bridge in order to carry a street over a railway line the Municipal Commissioner wished to acquire additional land on a side of the street, and so he first prescribed a regular line of the street under section 297 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act and then under section 299 acquired a part of the appellant's land which fell within the line:

Held, that the exercise of the powers was within the terms of the Act and that the appellant was entitled to compensation for the land acquired under section 301 of the Act, and not under the Land Acquisition Act. [p. 68, col. 1.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Bombay (Scott, C. J., and Chandavarkar, J.), dated the 9th August 1912, affirming with slight variations a judgment and decree of Beaman, J., dated the 7th October 1911.

FACTS of the case fully appear from the following judgment of the High Court:—

"This suit was filed by the plaintiffs against the Municipal Commissioner and the Municipal Corporation on the 5th December 1910 for possession of certain portions of plaintiffs' premises upon the Elphinstone Road, taken possession of by the Municipal Commissioner on the 7th July 1909, the Commissioner purporting to take them under the powers contained in section 299 of the Municipal Act of 1888, as amended by the Act of 1905. That section provides that if any land not vesting in the Corporation, whether open or enclosed, lies within the regular line of a public street, and is not occupied by a building, the Commissioner may, after giving to the owner of the land not less than 4 clear days' written notice of his intention to do so, take possession on behalf of the Corporation of the said land, which shall henceforth be deemed a part of the street. Section 301 provides that compensation should be paid by the Commissioner to the owner for any land acquired for a public street under section 299. A regular line of a public street could be prescribed under the Act of 1888 as originally framed by the Commissioner, and after it had been prescribed no portion of any building abutting on the street could after such a line had been prescribed be constructed within the regular line.

One of the plaintiffs, who are co-owners of the land taken up, sent in a building application in December 1902 for permission to build a three-storeyed chawl with certain shops on the basement on the road frontage owned by the applicant and his brothers on the north side of the Elphinstone Road. On the 6th of March 1903, in reply to his application, he was informed that the building could not be permitted on the whole of the land as 50 feet of the land had been taken into the regular line of the street. Then, on the 25th of May 1909, the plaintiff received from the Municipal Commissioner a notice under section 299, saying that 20 feet only were required for the purposes of the street. This was in consequence of action having been taken by the Municipal authorities for laying down a fresh regular line of the street, on the assumption that no regular line had already been laid down. We have not got the whole of the Municipal correspondence upon the point, but it appears that on the 13th March 1909 the Executive Engineer, in continuation of his letter of the 5th March, forwarded to the Commissioner a plan showing in red the new proposed regular lines of the street at Elphinstone Road, Parel, along which a proposed overbridge was to be constructed. That was the regular line which showed that only 20 feet of the plaintiffs' property was within the regular line of the street. On the 1st July 1909 one of the plaintiffs wrote to the Municipal Commissioner drawing attention to the regular line proposed in 1903 and to the papers relating to the previous building proposal. Upon investigation it then appeared to the Municipal authorities that the fixing of the regular line in March 1909 was not the fixing of an original regular line but the fixing of a new regular line in substitution of a previous line. Now, the power of the Municipal Commissioner to fix a new line in substitution of a previous line was conferred upon him by the City of Bombay Municipal Amendment Act of 1905, which provided that he might from time to time, but subject in each case to his receiving the authority of the Corporation in that behalf, prescribe a fresh line in substitution for any line so prescribed or for any part thereof, provided that such authority shall not be accorded except upon certain conditions. Notwithstanding the letter of the 1st July, however, which put the Municipal Commissioner on inquiry as to the legality of the new line which he prescribed, possession was taken of the plaintiffs' land under section 299 on the footing of the land so taken possession of falling within the regular line prescribed in 1909. It appears that it was not until after that date that any resolution of the Corporation was obtained authorising the Commissioner to prescribe a regular line in substitution of the regular line of 1903. The resolution of the Corporation giving that authority is dated the 11th of October 1909. The plaintiff contends that no regular line of the street on the Elphinstone Road has been or was ever prescribed as required by law under the City of Bombay Municipal Act in 1903, and that the action of the Commissioner subsequent thereto at various times in purporting to prescribe a regular line of the street was ultra vires and illegal. The defendants contend that the regular line of the street is the line prescribed subsequent to the passing of the resolution of the 11th October 1909.

The first point for consideration is whether the line prescribed in 1903 was lawfully prescribed. Now, the facts relating to it are to be found in Exhibit E. On the 21st January 1903 the Executive Engineer of the Municipality forwarded the building application already referred to to the Commissioner, stating that the plan showed that it was proposed to construct a large three storeyed chawl with privies and store rooms on the Elphinstone Road; that as the Commissioner was aware, the lines of an overbridge over the two railways, as already sanctioned by Government at the recommendation of the Overbridge Committee, were at a short distance north of the Elphinstone Road; that the matter of the overbridges over the two railways had been discussed by the Municipal Commissioner and the officials of the Railway Companies and the question as regards the overbridge near Elphinstone Road, as it then stood, was to construct an overbridge the lines of which would pass through the ground on which the chawls were proposed to be constructed; and the Municipal Executive Engineer asked to be informed whether the proposal of the building applicant could be accepted until the question of the overbridge could be settled. Upon that the Municipal Commissioner Mr. Harvey gave orders that the proposed construction should be stopped and proposals for new lines be sent up as soon as possible. The Executive Engineer then sent up proposals for new lines of road and the Commissioner on the 4th March sanctioned those proposals.

Now, it is contended that the Commissioner could only prescribe a regular line of the street under the Unamended Act of 1888 in a case where it was necessary to prescribe a regular line and that if the only object of prescribing the line was to acquire land for the purposes of a street in a manner other than that prescribed in section 286, the prescribing of the line was unlawful and did not give power to the Commissioner to acquire land under section 299; and for this the decision of this Court in Essa Jacob Haji Jamal v. Municipal Commissioner of Bombay (1). was cited as an authority. That was a case in which the Commissioner had prescribed a regular line for a street at a subsequent date in order to widen the street and throw it back beyond the line already prescribed. He prescribed a fresh line having no express authority so to do; and it was stated by the Chief Justice in his judgment that there could be no question of there being any necessity to prescribe a regular line at the time when the second line was prescribed, because ex concessis a regular line had been prescribed at an earlier date.

Now, in the present case the circumstances were entirely different. As the letter of the Executive Engineer showed, the lines of the overbridge, which had been settled in consultation between the officials of the Railway Companies and the Commissioner, would bring the bridge across the existing northern edge of the street and break into it, and, therefore, put an end to its regularity as an existing street. Then the Commissioner having ordered that proposals for new lines should be sent up, the Executive Engineer proposed a line giving a regular and continuous line of street so far as the bridge extended 50 feet further back on the north side. This proposal was accepted by the Commissioner and as a result a regular line was provided for to meet the time when the overbridge should be built, which would break into the existing line of the street. This, it appears to us, was entirely in accordance with the powers of the Commissioner under the unamended section 297 and we have no reason to suppose that the Commissioner was actuated by improper and indirect motives in the matter. To show that the result of laying down a regular line would be to enable the Commissioner to enter upon vacant land within that line under section 299 does not show that the Commissioner was not also actuated by the necessity of laying down a regular line for the street and the existence of the incidental result does not vitiate the legality of his action.

The first point taken by the plaintiff's Counsel in this appeal is that the line of 1903 being illegal, the refusal of the Commissioner to allow the applicant to build was also illegal and, therefore, damages are claimable in consequence of the plaintiff being unable to build from 1903 up to the date of suit. This claim falls to the ground with our decision that the prescription of the line in 1903 was within the powers of the Commissioner.

Then, it was contended that because the object of acquiring the land under section 299 was to provide ground for the erection of the foundations of the bridge, the acquisition was unlawful, because there was section 296 of the Act which provided the manner in which the Commissioner might acquire the land. Now, that section gives the Commissioner power to acquire land, whether vacant or with buildings upon it; whereas section 299 only gives him power to acquire vacant land falling within the regular line of the street. Provided he had a regular line and vacant land falling within that line, it was quite unnecessary for him to resort to the powers given under section 296 of the Act; and granting the legality of the prescription of the line, the powers under section 299 lawfully followed. The question, however, although it was argued in connection with the line of 1903, did not really arise until after the prescription of the line in 1909.

There is no dispute that the new line prescribed in 1909 without the sanction of the Corporation was unlawfully prescribed and, therefore, the possession by the Commissioner before the prescription of the last line with the sanction of the Corporation was unlawful. In respect of that unlawful possession, damages are claimed by the plaintiff, and the Advocate-General on behalf of the Municipal Commissioner has agreed to pay 6 per. cent. on the compensation which may be fixed as the value of the land as from the 7th July 1909, the date of the acquisition, and this has been agreed to by Counsel for the plaintiff. It might perhaps be contended that the acquisition on the 7th July was a lawful acquisition on the footing of the line of 1903 being the then existing line of the street, but that point has not been taken as the question of damages is a small one and the Corporation through their Counsel have agreed to pay compensation.

(1) 25 B. 107; 2 Bom. L. R. 810.

Then, the fresh line which was prescribed subsequent to October 1903 is a line prescribed in accordance with the provisions of section 297 (b) of the Amended Municipal Act, and if the first line of 1903 was, as we have held, a lawfully prescribed line, it follows, we think, that the Municipal Commissioner could substitute a fresh line for it if the effect of that line would be to provide a new regular line for the street. There is no question that the Commissioner prescribed a fresh regular line and the effect of that was to give 30 feet more of his property to the plaintiff than he would have on the original line of 1903.

It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that having prescribed a line 50 feet from the north of the existing Elphinstone Road, the Municipality were estopped from acquiring less than 50 feet under section 299, but section 299 does not compel the Commissioner to acquire land as soon as a regular line of the street has been laid down. He may acquire whenever he thinks fit on giving not less than 7 clear days' notice under the section. The estoppel apparently, it is contended, arises owing to the plaintiff being prevented from building from 1903 up to the present time, but that prevention arises from the statutory provision that no person shall construct any portion of the building within the regular line of the street.

The last point taken was that the Municipal Act does not give power to the Municipal Commissioner so as to cause a nuisance. Now with regard to that the plaintiff merely says that the construction of the overbridge approaches and retaining walls thereto on the Elphinstone Road is in opposition to the plaintiff's rights of property and easements on the road and will irreparably damage plaintiff's land and is ultra vires and illegal of the defendants, and the plaintiffs say that the construction of the overbridge approaches and retaining walls thereto on only the central strip of the street will make the street in front of the plaintiffs' land of three different levels and is ultra vires, illegal and unreasonable of the defendants. It is admitted that the Municipal Commissioner has power under section 295 to agree with the Railway Company for the building and maintenance of the overbridge, and it has not been shown that the plaintiff has any easements upon the road which will be interfered with by the overbridge. It may be very unpleasant for him to have a wall 30 feet high opposite to his property, but if that wall will not interfere with his ancient lights or any other easements, he has no cause of action with regard to it. For these reasons, we think that this point also fails. The plaintiffs to pay $\frac{1}{4}$ of the costs of the Municipality throughout."

Mr. De Gruyther, K. O., Sir W. Garth and Mr. J. M. Parikh, for the Appellants, contended that on the evidence in the case the mode of prescribing by the respondents of the alleged "regular lines of the street" both in 1903 and in 1907 was ultra vires and illegal and that the land required for the purposes for which the appellants required could only be legally acquired, if not by agreement, under the Land Acquisition Act. Reference was made to the case of Essa Jacob Haji Jamal v. Municipal Commissioner of Bombay (1) and the Bombay Municipal Act (Bombay Act III of 1888 as amended by Bombay Act V of 1905), sections 87, 90, 91, 286, 289, 295, 296, 297, (amended in 1905), 299 and 301, subsection (1). The land was wanted for widening the street in order to construct an overbridge, and not for the purpose of preserving the regular line of the street, and to acquire the land the respondents were not entitled to proceed under the Municipal Act. The construction of the overbridge on it was not using it as a public street. The English cases referred to were Galloway v. London Corporation (2) and Gard v. Sewers Commissioners (3).

The steps taken by the respondents were unnecessary and the object only afterwards appeared to be the building of a bridge over the street, the whole question being whether what the respondents did was done for the purpose of preserving the regular line of the street. If, as contended, the action of the respondents was ultra vires and illegal, the appellants were entitled to the relief claimed in the plaint. But even if it was legal and valid they were bound to take the whole of the land included in the original line of 1903, and to pay damages for the period during which the land remained vacant and useless owing to the prescription of the line.

Messrs. P. O. Lawrence and A. M. Dunne, K. O., for the Respondents, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SUMNER.—By the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1858, section 289, the Municipal Commissioner for the City of Bombay has under his control all public streets within the city, and may from time to time widen, extend, or otherwise improve any such street, or cause the soil thereof to be raised, lowered, or altered, subject to the sanction of the Corporation in certain events. By section 297 he may prescribe a line on each side of any public street, and subject to receiving the necessary authority, may from time to time prescribe a fresh line in substitution therefor, and the line so prescribed shall be called "the regular line of the street." If the line is so drawn that any land not vesting in the Corporation falls within it, the Commissioner may, by section 299, take possession of it on the Corporation's behalf, which has the effect of acquiring it for the Corporation, and thereupon the land so acquired shall thenceforward be deemed a part of the public street, and the former owner will be entitled to receive certain compensation as prescribed by section 301. The Commissioner further has power, under section 296, to acquire any land required for the purpose of widening, extending or otherwise improving any public street, subject among other things to the payment of compensation in accordance with the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. The only question in this appeal is whether the compensation to be paid for certain land of the appellants, which the Commissioner has acquired, is to be calculated according to the provisions of section 301 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act or according to those of the Land Acquisition Act.

Elphinstone Road, which is within the area of the Municipal Corporation of Bombay, intersects at right angles and by level-crossings two railway lines, which run parallel with and close to one another at Parel station, namely, the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway and the Great Indian Peninsula Railway. The appellants were the owners of a plot of land fronting the road and lying in the north-east angle between the road and the railways. In 1909 the Commissioner prescribed a line on the north side of the road as the regular line of the street, which was so drawn that part of the appellants' land, namely, the front part, fell within it, and he duly gave notices and took possession of this land in order that, within section 299, this part of the appellants' land might thus be acquired by the Corporation, and might thenceforward be deemed part of Elphinstone Road. In point of fact, the line so prescribed was in substitution for an earlier prescribed line, but, in the view of their Lordships, nothing now turns on this.

That the Commissioner meant to prescribe the regular line of the street under section 297, and that in form he purported to do so, and in fact actually did so, there can be no manner of doubt. The whole object of what he was doing depended on its being an exercise of the powers given by this section. Equally little is there any doubt why he did so. Even if he concerned himself to some extent with prescribing a regular line, simply in lieu of the somewhat irregular line which previously bounded Elphinstone Road on the north, his main object at any rate was a different one, and he has never made any secret of it. Whether what he did was in the circumstances within the Act or without it, whether or not the exercise of his powers was a harsh application of the section, unforeseen by those who framed it, their Lordships think it quite clear that he acted in good faith, for the benefit, as he supposed, of the Corporation which he represented, and, as he conceived, in the discharge of his duty. Sooner or later, Elphinstone Road must have been carried over these two railways by a bridge. A double level-crossing could not be indefinitely maintained there. Such a bridge involved approaches of considerable length and height, and the embankment with its retaining walls and the provision of access to land adjoining it would require a site considerably wider than the existing width of Elphinstone Road. For this purpose the Commissioner wished to acquire additional land, and to do so on the cheapest possible terms, and so he first of all prescribed a line and then took possession of the part of the appellants' land which fell within that line. Thus he avoided having to proceed under the Land Acquisition Act.

The appellants' whole contention is that this exercise of the Commissioner's power was good or bad according as he acted with a single eye to the creation and preservation of a regular boundary to Elphinstone Road as an end in itself, or with the ulterior object of extending the road in order to be able to raise it by an incline to the level of the necessary overbridge.

The contention must stand or fall on the construction of the Bombay Act. There is no word in the Act which prescribes the frame of mind in which the Commissioner is to exercise the powers given by section 297, or which restricts the objects for which he is to exercise them to the mere regulation of the street in question or to the creation or preservation of a regular line in it. Even if it were proved, as it is not, that the creation and preservation of a regular line on the north side of the road was no part of the Commissioner's object, though it certainly was an incidental result of his scheme, their Lordships can find nothing in the Act which either entitles the appellants to investigate his motives or has the effect of invalidating his action on account of the purpose, with which in fact he prescribed the regular line of the street in 1909.

Cases in which it has been held that powers conferred only for a statutory purpose cannot be validly exercised for a different purpose are not in point. Such an exercise of the powers is outside the Act which confers them. Here the exercise of the powers was within the Act, for it was in strict conformity with the terms of the Act. "Preservation of Regular Line in Public Streets" is the heading to the group of sections beginning with section 297, but this cannot be pressed into a constructive limitation upon the exercise of the powers given by the express words of the Act. The preservation of the line of the street is not laid down as the definite and sole object for which the power is to be exercised. It may be the immediate effect of that exercise, but certainly it is not more. The case was very fully and cogently dealt with by the learned Chief Justice of Bombay in the High Court of Bombay, and their Lordships think it unnecessary to discuss the matter further. They will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Mr. M. K. Rangachariar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This case turns solely on the meaning to be given to the word "purports" in section 73 of the Indian Evidence Act. Different views have been taken by Jenkins, C. J., in Barindra Kumar v. Emperor (1), and by Chandavarkar and Batchelor, JJ., in Emperor v. Ganpat Balakrishna (2). We are inclined to agree with the latter. We do not discern any object in limiting the scope of the section to documents which are signed or contain some intrinsic statement of the identity of the writer: and apparently in English Law all that is necessary to render proof by comparison admissible is a dispute as to the writing (vide Stephen's Digest on the Law of Evidence, Article 52, Taylor's Law of Evidence, 10th Edition, page 1340, and Phipson, the 5th Edition, pages 93 and 94).

In the second portion of the section under construction the word used is "alleged", and as from the context it is clear that no contradiction between the two words could have been intended, the impression left on the mind is that the two must have been used to express the same idea.

In our opinion, the Subordinate Judge was entitled, in the circumstances, to compare the handwriting of Exhibits B and D and that being so, there was no ground for interfering with his decree.

We must, therefore, set aside the order of the learned Judge and restore the decree of the Small Cause Court. Appellant will get his costs throughout.

A usufructuary mortgagee of under-proprietary plots is, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary entered in the mortgage-deed, bound, under the provisions of section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act, to pay to the superior proprietor the rent due in respect of those plots, and is, therefore, not entitled to recover it by way of contribution from the mortgagor under the provisions of section 69 of the Contract Act.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is up for admission under Order XLI, rule 11, of the Code of Civil Procedure. It arose out of a suit which was framed as a suit for contribution, and a plea is taken in the memorandum of appeal that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover under the provisions of section 69 of the Contract Act. The facts, however, appear to me to render an argument of this kind quite impossible. It is admitted that the plaintiffs-appellants are the mortgagees with possession of certain plots of under-proprietary tenure. The defendants-respondents were the mortgagors. The superior proprietor had to bring a suit for arrears of rent due in respect of these plots. A decree was obtained. The present plaintiffs-appellants objected to the execution of the decree but being unsuccessful, they had in the last resort to pay up the arrears in order to protect the mortgaged property. Obviously, however, they have no claim against the mortgagors in respect of the rents so paid. Under the provisions of section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act the mortgagees in possession were, in my opinion, liable to pay the under-proprietary rent of the holding. It is admitted before me that in the mortgage-deed there is no contract to the contrary. Consequently the primary liability for the rent of the plots in question lay upon the plaintiffs-appellants; and in these circumstances it is not possible for them to set up a case under section 69 of the Contract Act. Relief under that section can be granted only where one person is interested in the payment of money which another person is bound by law to pay, but here the defendants-respondents were not bound by law to pay the arrears of rent. That obligation rested upon the plaintiffs themselves. The learned Subordinate Judge is hardly right in saying that the plaintiffs were guilty of contributory negligence.

The case is not one of contributory negligence. The whole responsibility for the payment of these rents lies upon the plaintiffs and they are not, therefore, entitled to seek any contribution from the defendants-mortgagors.

The appeal is dismissed.

Mr. S. Ramdas, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. S. Kotwal, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this second appeal arises was brought to recover possession of 1 acre 13½ gunthas of land, which the plaintiff alleged to be at the eastern end of that portion of Survey No. 83 which he bought from one Saru (P. W. No. 2) by a sale-deed (Exhibit P-2) on the 22nd November 1906.

On Exhibit P-2 the total area of the field appears as 23 acres 33 gunthas, but in the Record of Rights recently drawn up the figure is 29 acres 5 gunthas, of which 12 acres 17 gunthas are shown as in the plaintiff's and 16 acres 17 gunthas in the defendant Laxmi Narayan's possession.

The field was originally the property of Shrawan and Dawan. Dawan was succeeded by his daughter Saru (P. W. No. 2) and Shrawan by a female heir named Bhimi.

Saru and Bhimi partitioned the field sometime before 1902 and Bhimi sold her share to one Mahimaji, who on the 13th May 1902 conveyed it to the defendant Laxmi Narayan.

The allegation in the plaint is that in the month of July 1914 the 2nd defendant Nago Rao, who held under the defendant Laxmi Narayan, destroyed the plaintiff's crops standing on the strip of land in dispute and cultivated the land himself thus wrongfully ejecting the plaintiff.

Nago Rao put in no appearance except as a witness, for his co-defendant Laxmi Narayan pleaded that ever since his purchase he has been in possession of the land which he now holds.

The Courts below have concurred in finding that the allegation in the plaint is not proved. Laying the burden on the plaintiff to show that he had been in possession of the strip claimed within the last 12 years, they found that no such possession was made out. The lower Appellate Court has further come to the conclusion that the defendant has been in possession of the land in dispute ever since he purchased his part of No 83 in 1902 and that it belongs to that part. That the field was not divided into two exactly equal parts in stated by Mohammad Bekar D. W. No. 3; who owns one of the adjoining fields.

The claim of the plaintiff having been dismissed, he has preferred this second appeal and the only point pressed in his behalf is that inasmuch as his sale deed gives the area of the entire field as 28 acres 33 gunthas and conveys half of it (i.e.) 14 acres 16½ gunthas, the burden should have been laid upon the defendant to show that he is entitled to hold more than half of the total area. No authority is cited for this proposition, which is opposed to the well settled rule that where the plaintiff seeks to recover possession as upon dispossession, the burden is on him to prove possession at some time within 12 years before the commencement of the suit. In all actions for ejectment the plaintiff must recover by the strength of his own title not by the weakness of his adversary's, as laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neoghi (1) and again in Basant Singh v. Mahabir Pershad (2). That the appellant's case is really rested on nothing better than the discrepancy between the areas in actual possession of the parties respectively appears from his own deposition as P. W. No. 7, where he admitted that though the alleged encroachment took place before the Record of Rights was prepared, he took no steps to bring his claim to the notice of the officers who made the preliminary enquiry. It is common ground that the road to Amraoti passes through the south eastern corner of the defendant's portion, and quite possibly this furnished a reason for dividing the field unequally at partition. However this may be, the contention of the appellant is without foundation in law. His appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. In the lower Courts costs will be paid as already ordered.

Appeal dismissed.

PETITIONERS NOS. 1 AND 2—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13, scope of—Mortgage decree—Final decree passed ex parte, application to set aside, maintainability of.

A final decree passed ex parte in a mortgage suit is a 'decree' within the meaning of Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code, and an application to set it aside is, therefore, maintainable under the rule. [p. 72, cols. 1 & 2.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruturaipundi, dated the 27th November 1916, in Interlocutory Appeal No. 1314 of 1916 in Original Suit No. 150 of 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri and S. Visanatha Aiyar, for the Petitioner.—Order IX, rule 13, contemplates only the first decree passed in a suit. The rule contemplates cases where summons is issued to the defendant. Proceedings leading up to the final decree in a mortgage suit are separate and what is served on the defendant is not a summons but a notice.

Mr. S. Muthiah' Mullick for Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The final decree is as much a decree as the preliminary decree. There is no reason for limiting or narrowing the scope of Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code. The terms of the section are general and comprehensive. There must be a remedy to the party against whom the final decree is passed ex parte in a mortgage suit.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner obtained a preliminary mortgage decree for the sale of certain property and an application was then made for the passing of the final decree. At the hearing of this application the respondent did not appear and the final decree was passed in his absence. Subsequently he made an application under Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code, to set aside the final decree, which he alleged was passed ex parte. The District Munsif acceded to that application and the petitioner now has applied to us in revision to set aside the order, firstly, on the ground that it is not a case to which Order IX, rule 13, applies.

The point raised seems to be one of first impression and its decision depends on the interpretation of Order IX, rule 13. It says: "In any case in which a decree is passed ex parte against a defendant, he may apply to the Court by which the decree was passed for an order to set it aside." Now there is nothing in the language of that rule which compels us to limit the word 'decree' to the preliminary decree in a case where the law contemplates preliminary and final decrees. It cannot be denied that a final decree is as much a decree within the meaning of the law as a preliminary decree. The Code provides certain procedure to be followed in the proceedings for a final decree; an application has to be made by the preliminary decree-holder and notice has to be given to the judgment-debtor to show cause why such a decree should not be passed. We do not see any good ground, nor has any been suggested to us, why a final decree like this should not be treated as a 'decree' within the meaning of Order IX, rule 13, if it has been passed ex parte within the meaning of the law. In such cases, the proceedings commencing from the preliminary decree must be treated as separate proceedings and if those proceedings are terminated by a decree which has been passed ex parte we do not see, so far as the language of the rule or of any other provisions of the Code that have been brought to our notice are concerned, why the procedure set down for setting aside ex parte decrees should not apply. Our attention has been drawn to the fact that rule 13 contemplates cases in which the summons has not been duly served, and the contention is that in proceedings for final decree in a mortgage suit what is served is not a summons but a notice. We do not think that there is really any substantial distinction to be based on a ground like this, and we are of opinion that the ends of justice require that we should not unduly narrow the scope of rule 13, Order IX. It is of importance that the proceedings for a final decree should be had with due regard to the procedure laid down for the purpose and that if a final decree is passed ex parte in the absence of the defendant, he should be given an opportunity of having that decree set aside by a proper application if he was prevented from appearing for sufficient cause.

The next contention raised is that the application was made after the time limited had expired, but that is not a question of jurisdiction in which we can interfere with the order in revision. The petition, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, construction of—Waste land—Lease granted by lambardar without consulting co-sharers, validity of—Remedy.

A clause in a village wajib-ul-arz recognizing the general power of the lambardar to create tenancies in respect of village waste land, but providing at the same time that he should consult the other co-sharers before granting a lease, will not avail a co-sharer for the purpose of avoiding any lease of waste land which may have been created by his representative, the lambardar, without consulting him. [p. 73, col. 1.]

The co-sharer's remedy, if any, in such cases lies in an action for damages against the lambardar or his removal from office or for partition. [p. 73, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Court of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 19th February 1912, in Appeal No. 184 of 1901.

JUDGMENT.—The judgment of the lower Appellate Court is clearly wrong. Certain land which lay fallow in 1906 was in that year leased to the defendant by the Lambardar. Four years later the plaintiffs, who are co-proprietors of the land, bring the present suit whereby they seek to repudiate the tenancy, on the ground that their consent thereto was not obtained by the Lambardar as required by the Nimar Wajib-ul-arz. It is a question whether the Hoshangabad or Nimar Wajib-ul-arz is applicable, because the case comes from the Hoshangabad Taluqa which has only recently been transferred from the Hoshangabad to the Nimar District. But the question is quite immaterial because, assuming that the Nimar Wajib-ul-arz on which the plaintiffs rely is applicable, the suit must still fail. The 1st Court rightly dismissed the suit but the District Judge, ignoring the previous decisions of this Court and upon an entirely mistaken interpretation of the Wajib-ul-arz, reversed that decision and gave the plaintiffs, qua landlords, joint possession with the defendants, qua tenants, over the land in dispute, declaring their share to be one-half.

The Nimar Wajib-ul-arz, while recognising the general power and responsibility of the Lambardar to create tenancies, provides that in letting waste lands he should consult the wishes (or take the advice) of his co-sharers.

I have held in more than one case, though I cannot now lay my hand on any of them, that this clause will not avail a co-sharer for the purpose of avoiding any lease of waste land which may have been created by his representative, the Lambardar, without consulting him, and that his remedy, if any, lies in action against the Lambardar for damages, for his removal from office, or by claiming partition. But the same view was laid down so far back as 1901 by Ismay, J. C., in Kesho Rao v. Nana (Second Appeal No. 228 of 1901) decided on the 17th September 1901 with reference to a similar clause in the Wardha Wajib-ul-arz. The learned Judicial Commissioner wrote: "What I imagine the clause in the Wajib-ul-arz to mean is that if a Lambardar persists in ignoring the wishes of his co-proprietors, he renders himself liable on their application to be removed from office. But the co-sharers certainly could not claim to avoid a bona fide lease merely on the ground that their wishes were not consulted before it was given."

In the present case there is the further element against the plaintiff of a delay of 4 years (for which personally they have received their share of the rent) before bringing the suit.

The appeal is allowed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed, and the plaintiffs' suit is dismissed with costs on them throughout.

Appeal allowed.

RESPONDENT.

Custom—Immoral custom, whether enforceable—Succession—Kanjars—Presumption of marriage.

An immoral custom has no legal force. [p. 74, col. 2.]

A custom by which a brothel-keeper succeeds to the property left by a nauchi, or slave kept for the purpose of prostitution, is immoral and has no legal effect, for, if recognised, it would have the effect of encouraging brothel-keeping. [p. 74, col. 2.]

The general presumption in favour of marriage, which prevails in the case of ordinary people, does not hold good in the case of kanjars, who must prove the fact of marriage by very clear evidence. [p. 74, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 16th January 1913, dismissing plaintiff's claim.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain and Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In February 1908 Musammatt Jhandi, a prostitute, mortgaged the property in dispute to the defendant in this case, and the plaintiff who is a brothel-keeper claims possession of the property on the ground that Musammatt Jhandi had no power to make the mortgage and that she made it without necessity. In the alternative he claims to pre-empt.

The learned District Judge has dismissed plaintiff's claim with costs, holding that no right of pre-emption accrues in respect of the mortgage, that the property in dispute was originally acquired by one Musammatt Matti and by her transferred to Musammatt Jhandi. Further that plaintiff has not established that he is a legitimate descendant of Rahman through whom the plaintiff claims to succeed; that Musammāt Jhandi acquired an absolute interest in the property either by gift or by succession; that even on plaintiff's own showing Musammāt Jhandi had power to mortgage for necessity; and that consideration and necessity for the mortgage had been fully established.

The appellant in this case states that he has been unable to secure the services of Counsel, and we have, therefore, been obliged to call upon the Counsel for the respondent to take us through the record; and after consideration of the evidence in the case, we have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff's suit must fail.

To deal first with the question of necessity, however, we are unable to agree with the learned District Judge that Musammāt Jhandi had necessity to mortgage the property in suit for the large sum of Rs. 8,000. She was, no doubt, a very old woman and admittedly for many years past had abandoned the trade of prostitution, but we can find nothing to prove the necessity for the loan of Rs. 3,000 which she is said to have obtained on a promissory note from one Mehr Jhandu, which promissory note is said to have been liquidated out of the mortgage-money.

The property in dispute is situate on a plot of land which was taken in mortgage by Musammāt Matti, the daughter of Musammāt Fatti, whose relationship with the plaintiff will be found from a glance at the genealogical tree propounded by the plaintiff which is printed in the body of the lower Court's judgment. From that genealogical tree it will appear that Rahman had two wives, but bearing in mind that Rahman was a kanjar, we hold it necessary for the plaintiff to prove that Musammāt Rahmati was indeed the legal wife of Rahman, and in view of the fact that the general presumptions which obtain in the case of ordinary people do not hold good in the case of kanjars, who are prostitutes and bullies, we are unable to hold it proved that the plaintiff is the legitimate great-grandson of Rahman. Consequently his claim to succeed as a relative of Musammāt Matti falls to the ground,

The plaintiff has advanced another ground why he should succeed. In that he alleges that on the death of Musammāt Matti, Musammāt Mamo, a nauchi, or slave kept for the purpose of prostitution, was allowed to remain in possession of the property in suit, and that he as a brothel-keeper is by custom entitled to succeed to the property left by the deceased nauchi. This custom has not been proved, but the matter need not delay us, for such a custom, even if proved, could have no legal effect, for, if recognized as binding, it would have the effect of encouraging brothel-keeping. Such a custom by reason of its immorality would have no legal force.

In 1879 Musammāt Mamo executed a Will by which she left the whole haveli to Musammāt Jhandi. Thereupon a dispute arose between her and one Pir Bakhsh, a brother of the plaintiff, and the matter was referred to arbitration but to that arbitration the plaintiff was no party. The award given by the arbitrators apparently conferred upon Musammāt Mamo a life-interest in the property plus a right to mortgage it, should she be driven thereto by poverty. However that may be, Musammāt Jhandi on the death of Musammāt Mamo in 1879-1880 took possession of that part of the haveli which is now in suit and has since that date been in possession of the same. Disputes between the plaintiff and Musammāt Jhandi regarding the property started shortly after Musammāt Mamo's death and the plaintiff admits that she has been mortgaging the property at various times, but he asserts in one breath that the mortgages were effected by her by stealth and in the next that sometimes he gave her permission to mortgage and sometimes he did not.

In 1899, 1904 and 1906 Musammāt Jhandi mortgaged the property of which she was in possession to different persons and the plaintiff admits that he consented to the mortgage of 1899. In all these mortgages Musammāt Jhandi asserted that the property mortgaged was her own absolute property, and we see no reason to doubt that she had been in possession of the property in suit claiming it as her own since the death of Musammāt Mamo in 1879.

CHIRONJI KASAR v. PUNAM CHAND.

With reference to ground No. 2 of the appeal, the property in dispute and that possessed by Musammāt Jhandi consists of not two kothris but of two blocks of buildings, and the expression used by the Court below is incorrect, but there is no doubt that the Court was referring to the two properties, one of which is a block of buildings or collection of kothris, in suit.

The Court below is again in error in stating that before the award Mamo had gifted her interest to Jhandi, whose title was perfected before the issue of the award.

No gift was made to Jhandi by Mamo, but by a Will dated 20th January 1879 (page 17 of the paper-book) Mamo bequeathed the property in her possession to Jhandi.

It is true that in the reference to arbitration dated 26th May 1879 the devise is called a gift, but that is a mere looseness of expression which cannot affect the real nature of the transaction, and in it is stated that the gift has been revoked.

A gift followed by delivery could not be revoked but a bequest could. But it is clear that whatever limitation on Jhandi's right was placed by the award in favour of the brotherhood, of which plaintiff is the representative, Jhandi has refused to be bound by it. In 1887 her disputes with plaintiff commenced and in 1892 she clearly repudiated any right of plaintiff in the property (page 29 of paper-book), whilst defendant insisted, obviously ignoring the terms of the award, that nauchis had only a right of residence.

In 1899 Jhandi mortgaged the full proprietary right to Musammāt Allah Rakhi and set forth in the deed that she was full owner and the plaintiff was one of the attesting witnesses.

In the face of these facts we must hold that Jhandi ignored the award and had been in adverse possession for over 12 years when the suit was brought, and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 15—Hindu Law—Guardianship—Mother, whether natural guardian after re-marriage—Joint guardians, whether can be appointed.

There is nothing in the Hindu Law which prevents the Sovereign as guardian from appointing more persons than one as guardians of the person of a minor. [p. 76, col. 1.]

Appeal from the order, dated 19th April 1917, passed by the District Judge, Nimar, in Guardian Case No. 74 of 1916.

Mr. Bhawanishanker, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. V. Chitale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent Punam Chand applied under the Guardians and Wards Act to be appointed guardian of the person of his step-sister Musammāt Anandi, a minor of the age of about ten. Shortly after the death of Ganna, father of Punam Chand and Musammāt Anandi, Ganna's widow Musammāt Chironji re-married. The girl has been living with her mother for the last eight years in the house of Ganpat, her step-father. The application was resisted by Musammāt Chironji. Punam Chand, it has been explained to me, does not want to have the girl removed from the custody of her mother but claims to have the right to select a bridegroom for the girl, and in this connection he alleges that there was a betrothal in the lifetime of the father with one Bhagwan. The lower Court in its judgment appears to be under a misapprehension in stating that Bhagwan has been, since married to another girl. This is denied before me, and there is no evidence to establish it. However, the point to decide is whether the half brother or the natural mother who has re-married out of the family has the preferential right to give the girl in marriage. This question has been answered by the lower Court in favour of Punam Chand, but the actual order passed does not appear to me to be a happy one.

THANGATHAMMA v. ARUNACHALLAM CHETTIAR.

The order appoints both Punam Chand and Musammat Chironji to act as the joint guardians of Musammat Anandi, the latter being free to live with either, and directs that a husband for her shall be chosen by the common consent of both, and if they disagree, by the Court. There is no appeal by Punam Chand against the order. I have, therefore, to consider upon Musammat Chironji's appeal whether the order of the lower Court, so far as it recognizes the claims of Punam Chand, is wrong.

Under the cover of an application for the guardianship of the person the parties are really seeking a decision as to the right to give the girl away in marriage. I agree with the lower Court that the mother's natural right to be a preferential guardian of the minor's person is lost by reason of her re-marriage, though she may be appointed by the Court as any stranger. See Ganga Prasad v. Ramasrey Shahu (1). The duty of getting a minor girl married devolves upon the male relations of the family and as the mother has ceased to be in the family by her re-marriage, the preferential right seems to be in Punam Chand. Punam Chand and his father were joint, although there does not appear to be any joint property left so far as the evidence goes. The order of the lower Court, so far as it concedes a right to Musammat Chironji to select a husband for her daughter, might possibly have been successfully impeached by Punam Chand if he had appealed. Musammat Chironji cannot complain of Punam Chand's right declared by the order.

It is urged that the appointment of two persons contravenes the provisions of section 15 of the Guardians and Wards Act. There is nothing in the Hindu Law, so far as I know, which prevents the Sovereign as guardian from appointing more than one person as guardians of the person of a minor. In any case Musammat Chironji is not aggrieved by the order passed by the lower Court. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs. I fix Rs. 10 as Pleadar's fee in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Suretyship, kinds of—Suretyship for payment by father—Sons, liability of—Construction of documents.

There are three kinds of suretyship according to the Mitakshara, for appearance, for assurance and for payment. The surety by way of assurance consists of a general warranty of credit, but a surety for payment is one who says "if he does not pay, then I myself will pay." When a surety for appearance or a surety by way of assurance dies, his sons are under no obligation to pay, but in the case of a surety for payment they are bound to pay. [p. 77, col. 1.]

A Hindu father entered into a suretyship obligation in the following words: "I shall make V. pay the amount due under the said promissory note within two months from this date. In default of payment as aforesaid by the said person within the said time, I shall pay the amount of principal and interest on the said promissory note and get back the said promissory note and the surety bond and the title deeds."

Held, that this was a suretyship for payment (danē) and the surety's son was liable for the obligation created by the said contract. [p. 77, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

A. S. No. 80 OF 1917.

At the hearing of this appeal, two contentions were raised:—

1 that the Varthamanam or guarantee (Exhibit M) alleged to have been written by 5th defendant's husband Audinarayana Pillai was not genuine;

2. that owing to the nature of the transaction which Exhibit M evidences, the heirs of the guarantor are not liable under Hindu Law.

THANGATHAMMA v. ARUNACHALLAM CRITTIAE.

On the first point, we do not find the least reason to doubt the correctness of the learned Subordinate Judge's finding of fact. The circumstance that during Audinarayana's lifetime a notice of demand setting out his liability under the Varthamanam was sent to him and he did not repudiate his liability, tells strongly against the present theory that it is a forgery. It was again mentioned in the subsequent promissory note (Exhibit Q), in a sentence which may have been written after the stamp was affixed but not necessarily after Audinarayana had signed across the stamp.

The attempts made to prove an alibi for the 1st defendant on the day when Exhibit M was executed by means of certain post-cards do not, in our opinion, in the least detract from the genuineness of that document.

The determination of the second point depends upon the application to the facts of this case of the Hindu Law as to the liability of sons of persons who have stood sureties for others.

Verses 53 and 54 of Yajnavalkya run as follows:—

which are translated by Mr. Gharpure in his collections of Hindu law texts thus:—

Suretyship is ordained for appearance, assurance and for payment. The first two, however, should be made to pay in case of default while in the case of the last, even the sons (should be made to pay). Where a surety for appearance or a surety by assurance dies, the sons of such a one must not pay; (but) in the case of a surety for payment, they should pay.

It is argued that the 5th defendant was under Exhibit M a surety for assurance (pratyaye*) and not for payment (dane) and that the fact that the money had already been lent to the debtor when the surety bond was executed is an indication of this. According to the illustration given in the Mitakshara when commenting upon the above verses, the surety by way of assurance consists of a general warranty of credit, but a surety for payment is one who says: "If he does not pay, then I myself will pay." The distinction between these two classes of sureties is further explained in Colebrook's Digest, Volume I, page 164, and that has been discussed fully by Ranade, J., in Tukarambhat v. Gangasam Mulchand Gujar (1). In Rasik Lal Mandal v. Singhaswar Roy (2) it was held that a surety obligation for payment was binding on the son even where the creditor's claim against the principal debtor did not arise out of a loan from the creditor to the debtor.

In Exhibit M the promise which Audinarayana Pillai made was in these words:—"I shall make the said Veera Pillai pay the amount due under the said promissory note within 2 months from this date. In default of payment as aforesaid by the said person within the said time, I shall pay the amount of principal and interest on the said promissory note and get back the said promissory note and the surety bond and the title-deeds."

There could hardly be a more definite promise to pay, if the debtor failed to pay, than this, and, therefore, this falls under the third clause of suretyship, that for payment (dane), and it makes no difference that the money had already been lent to the debtor when the surety executed the bond.

Defendants Nos. 5 and 9 are, therefore, liable to pay out of the family assets in their hands.

The appeal is dismissed with costs of plaintiff and 8th defendant (two sets).

A. S. No. 155 of 1917.

We agree with the Subordinate Judge that Exhibit C covered past as well as future advances. The participle used, as the Subordinate Judge has observed, is without time and is equally applicable to past as well as future borrowings. The fact that a deposit of title-deeds had been taken at the time of the earliest advance of Rs. 2,000 under Exhibit A, shows that it could not have been the intention of the parties to exclude under Exhibit C the money already borrowed on the security.

As regards the other points, we agree with the Subordinate Judge that the sum of Rs. 3,000 was intended to apply to advances of principal and that the property mortgaged was made security under the terms of the document not only Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, rr. 22, 23, scope of—Cross-objection by respondent against co-respondent, whether entertainable—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Estoppel—Hindu Law—Reversionary heirs joining in mortgage by female, whether bound by mortgage—Appeal, second—Question of law raised for first time, whether can be entertained.

Order XLI, rule 22, of the Civil Procedure Code is wide enough to cover a cross-objection by one respondent against another. But a cross-objection by a respondent as against his co-respondent should not be allowed under this rule where the matters sought to be raised by the cross-objection have no relation to or connection with the question raised by the appeal. [p. 81, cols. 1 & 2; p. 82, col. 2.]

A Hindu female in possession of property inherited from her deceased father or mother mortgaged it by a deed which recited legal necessity. Some of her sons joined in the mortgage:

Held, that the sons who joined in the mortgage were estopped from denying that there was legal necessity for the mortgage and that the mortgage and the execution sale consequent thereon were binding on the property in their hands after the death of their mother. [p. 87, col. 2; p. 84, col. 2.]

Per Sanderson, C. J.—Order XLI, rule 33, Civil Procedure Code, gives important and useful powers to a Court of Appeal, which a Court of Appeal would not hesitate to make use of on a proper occasion. [p. 82, col. 1.]

Per Mookerjee, J.—Order XLI, rule 33, Civil Procedure Code, must be cautiously applied, for instance, applied generally in cases where but for recourse to it the ends of justice would be defeated. Thus the rule should not be allowed to be invoked in favour of a litigant so as to enable him to evade the provisions of other Statutes such as the Limitation Act or the Court Fees Act. [p. 82, col. 2.]

When a question of law is raised for the first time in a Court of last resort, upon the construction of a document or upon facts either admitted or proved beyond controversy, it is not only competent but expedient in the interests of justice to entertain the plea. [p. 86, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri, sitting on the Original Side, dated the 7th December 1914.

FACTS of the case appear from the following judgment of CHAUDHURI, J.—This is a suit for partition. The plaintiffs claim a half share in the premises No. 36 Foriapooker Street. Their case is shortly this:—that one Harbhans Neogi had two sons, Shib Chandra Neogi and Chuni Lal Neogi. Shib Chandra and Chuni Lal formed a joint Hindu family and carried on a joint business. 36 Foriapooker Street was purchased by them in the name of the wife of Shib Chandra Neogi named Ramanimoni Dassee. In this property Shib Chandra Neogi was entitled to one half and Chuni Lal to the other half. It appears that there was a mortgage decree against Chuni Lal, dated 10th March 1904. The half share of Chuni Lal in this property was put up for sale under that decree and the same was purchased by Kaminimoni Dassee and one Nistarini Dassee in equal shares. On the 27th July 1910 Nistarini Dassee sold her half share to the 2nd plaintiff, Amrita Lal Sur. The plaintiffs thus claim to be entitled to one-fourth each. The defendants in this action are Shib Chandra Kar and Dulcken. The way that their claims arise may be shortly thus stated. Shib Chandra Neogi died in 1856 leaving him surviving a married daughter, namely, Giribala, and some grandsons by her. Ramanimoni died on the 24th March 1896. After her death Giribala, her husband Harish Chunder Sur and three of their sons who had then attained majority—Satish, Sirish and Suresh Chandra Sur—executed two mortgages of the premises No. 36 Foriapooker Street, dated the 13th February 1901 and the 22nd January 1902, in favour of Tincowrie Halder and Shib Chandra Kar respectively. One of these grandsons, Sirish Chunder Sur, died and thereafter there was a mortgage again of the very same premises executed by Giribala, Harish, Satish and Suresh (and Sarat) and also by Giribala as guardian of her infant sons, Subodh and Sushil. This was dated the 12th January 1903.

SHIB CHANDRA KAR v. DULKEN.

Tincowrie Halidar then filed a suit being Suit No. 278 of 1903, against his mortgagors and Shib Chandra Kar and Nil Kanta as puisne mortgagees, and obtained the usual mortgage decree on the 25th February 1904. This decree was assigned to Shib Chandra Kar on the 25th March 1904. The property covered by the mortgage was sold by the Registrar on the 17th December 1910. Shib Chandra Kar had got his name added as a plaintiff as such assignee and purchased the property on that date. Shib Chandra Kar thus claims to be entitled to the other half share of the premises No. 35 Foriapooker Street, being the share which originally belonged to Shib Chandra Neogi. Giribala died in December 1905, and upon her death Satish, Suresh and Sarat conveyed their 3/5th share of that half which they claimed to be entitled to as the grandsons of Shib Chandra Neogi, to one William O'Brien Hutchison. On the 16th July 1910 Hutchison sold same to Dulken. Dulken thus claims to be entitled to the rights of these persons in the property so far as the share of Shib Chandra Neogi is concerned. He, however, claims the entirety of the premises No. 36 Foriapooker Street under the following circumstances. He alleges in his written statement that after Ramani-moni's death, quarrels arose between Giribala on one side as the married daughter of Shib Chandra Neogi and Chuni Lal on the other. Matters in dispute between them were referred by a deed of arbitration to two arbitrators—one of them being an attorney of this Court. This deed is dated the 8th June 1899. The arbitrators were, amongst other things, to partition the joint family estate and to settle all disputes as regards accounts between them. Dulken alleges that the family property consisted of 36 Foriapooker Street and other parcels of property and that the arbitrators, by consent of the disputants, allotted in the first instance premises No. 127 Cornwallis Street and other properties to Chuni Lal and premises Nos. 22 and 36 Foriapooker Street and 221 Upper Circular Road to Giribala, but the parties changed their mind, and the properties which had originally been allotted to Chuni Lal were allotted to Giribala and vice versa. But the parties again reverted to the original allotment and on the 6th August 1899 the final allotment was made giving 36 Foriapooker Street to Giribala. It is said that upon such allotment Giribala went into possession of 36 Foriapooker Street to the exclusion of Chuni Lal, and Chuni Lal held exclusive possession of 127 Cornwallis Street and the other properties allotted to him as aforesaid to the exclusion of Giribala. Dulken contends that by virtue of the arbitration and allotment and possession Chuni lost his share in 36 Foriapooker Street, and the purchasers of Chuni's share in the said premises have thus got nothing.

I shall first of all deal with this contention so far as it relates to his case against the said purchasers. Now so far as the arbitration is concerned, there was no effective award. One arbitrator refused to sign any award. No award was ever filed or made a decree of Court. It appears also from the proceedings before the arbitrators, which have been put in, that various matters in dispute between the parties remained unadjusted, although at one stage there was an arrangement between them that they were to live in different houses. They appear to have agreed to do so on the basis that there was going to be an effective award by the arbitrators on all matters in dispute between them. There was no such award. I am unable to hold upon the evidence that these properties were held adversely by one of the co-sharers as against the other. I cannot hold that Chuni thus lost all his right in 36 Foriapooker Street; I hold that the purchasers from Chuni became entitled to his half share in it.

A further question was raised as to whether the plaintiffs had ever obtained possession of this half share. There was some evidence that Suresh used to collect rent, but it appears that it was with regard to a small portion of the house. I am unable to hold that he had at any time excluded Amrita Lal Sur from possession of the premises. Amrita Lal Sur has been examined and spoke to having been in possession on behalf of the purchaser, namely, his mother-in-law, and to have resided in the premises for 8 or 9 months. He is supported in this by the evidence of Gonesh Chunder Day, an attorney of this Court, and also by some correspondence which passed between Gonesh Chunder and himself. A letter appears to have been addressed by post to Amrita Lal Sur to 36 Foriapooker Street, where he said he was living at the time. Having regard to this evidence, I hold that Amrita Lal Sur did obtain possession and decree this suit, so far as the plaintiffs are concerned. They are entitled to $\frac{1}{4}$ th each in the premises No. 36, Foriapooker Street.

The contention, however, as between the defendants is somewhat difficult, and it has been made still more difficult by the fact that the suit was heard on different dates to suit the convenience of Counsel and witnesses. I am not at all sure that I did not deal with the contending parties more leniently than they deserved in the matter of postponements. The case began in June and was finally heard on the last day of August, just before the holidays. It was not fair to myself that a case of this character with complicated questions of title, in which evidence was given in instalments, should have gone on in the manner it did; but the only person to be blamed is perhaps myself. So far as the two defendants are concerned, Dulken contends that Giribala had only a Hindu daughter's interest, and, although some of her sons joined in the mortgage executed by her, she could not deal with the corpus so as to bind all the reversioners after her death. All of them were admittedly not majors at that time, and it is, I think, justly contended that a Hindu daughter, such as Giribala who has only a limited interest, is unable without the consent of all the reversioners to make an effective transfer of the property. This seems to me to be the view held by the Full Bench in the case of Debi Prosad Chowdhry v. Golap Bhagat (1). It was further contended on behalf of Dulken that it had not been shown that Giribala had any legal necessity, on account of which she had mortgaged the property. Learned Counsel who appeared on behalf of Shib Chandra Kar pleaded that he had overlooked the point, and as he was not ready with any evidence on that point he asked for a postponement. Even at that stage I allowed it, because I did not want the client to suffer, because learned Counsel or attorney had not applied their minds to one of the substantial issues in this suit. Evidence to supplement matters of this character given at a late stage of the proceedings requires careful scrutiny. Having regard also to the nature of the evidence given in this case, I am not at all satisfied that it has been made out that there was any legal necessity at the time that Shib Chandra Kar alleges the transaction took place. There was a great deal of evidence about decrees outstanding against Shib Chandra Neogi's estate, evidence of payments being required for urgent purposes, all of an indefinite and confused character, but I cannot hold that any legal necessity has been established. Having regard to that view, I think the transfer by three of the sons to Hutchison was an effective sale, and that Dulken has acquired their interest, namely, $\frac{3}{5}$ ths of $\frac{1}{2}$ or $\frac{3}{10}$ ths of this property. So far as Subodh and Sushil are concerned, they were infants at the time of the original transaction, but they have since released their interest in the property in favour of Shib Chandra Kar; and although a written statement was filed by Sirish, they have not appeared to contest the action. Suresh was examined as a witness, but stated quite clearly that he did not contest the action at all against Shib Chandra Kar, and that apparently was the position taken up by all of them and learned Counsel who appeared, instructed by their attorneys, merely asked that his costs might be taxed as between attorney and client on scale No. II. I, therefore, hold as between the defendants that $\frac{3}{10}$ ths go to Dulken and $\frac{2}{10}$ ths to Shib Chandra Kar. With the above declaration of shares, I direct a partition of the property.

As regards the costs, costs up to the first day's hearing as in a partition suit. Shib Chandra Kar and Dulken will pay their own costs of the subsequent days. Costs of the plaintiff of the other days are to be borne by Dulken to the extent of $\frac{3}{5}$ ths and Shib Chandra Kar to the extent of $\frac{2}{5}$ ths. Costs after decree will be according to the shares of the parties. All these costs are to be taxed on scale No. II.

With regard to the reserved costs, they will be as of a hearing, and the same order as I have made for the costs of the parties subsequent to the first day's hearing will apply. Mr. Sen states that the plaintiffs did not appear when the case was being fought out between the two contending defendants about their respective claims. If that be so, the said defendants will bear their own costs of the subsequent days and will not have to pay costs of the plaintiffs according to the shares above mentioned. I give leave to Mr. Sen to mention the matter again if necessary, since there is some uncertainty about the matter. Leave to the parties to mention the matter as to costs if they consider it necessary, including the question of the reserved costs. Leave to mention the name of the Commissioner of partition.

PRELIMINARY JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In my judgment the preliminary objection which was taken by Mr. Sircar must prevail. The appeal in this case was by Shib Chandra Kar and was against the decree made by Mr. Justice Chaudhuri in so far as it related to Mr. Dulken's claim. It proceeded upon the basis that the plaintiffs were entitled to a half share in certain property, and there was no appeal as to the decision which allocated the half share to the plaintiffs, and the dispute between Shib Chandra Kar and Dulken was solely in relation to the other half. Then the widow of Satish Chandra Sur who did not appear at the trial, but who has been, as I understand, since added as a party to this appeal filed a cross objection, alleging that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that the plaintiffs were entitled to a half share of the property, and that the learned Judge should have held that Satish Chandra and the other heirs of Shib Chandra Neogi were entitled to the whole property. The widow did not enter a separate appeal, but has raised this point, as I have said, by way of cross-objection. The question is whether such cross-objection should be allowed.

Now, Order XLI, rule 22, which was read yesterday, which I need not read again, in its terms is certainly wide enough to cover such a cross-objection as was made in this case. But it has been held that cross-objections under this rule ought not to be allowed in every case: and, I refer to the decision in Jadunandan Prosad Singha v. Koor Kallyan Singh (2) and read part of the head-note which refers to this matter and which is as follows: "No exhaustive rule on the subject can be formulated, and the true test is, whether, for the ends of justice, it is necessary that upon the appeal of one of the parties the matter should be re-opened only so far as he is concerned or the whole case should be reviewed and some of the respondents allowed the opportunity to urge a cross-objection against their co-respondents. One test of a negative character is sometimes useful: if the party, against whom a cross-objection is sought to be urged by his fellow-respondents, is not a necessary party to the appeal, the cross-objection can hardly be allowed to be urged", and the judgment of my brother Mookerjee is to be found at page 62,* I read from a passage at the bottom of page 63* which seems to me to be applicable to this case: "The principle is that, as a general rule, the right of any respondent to urge a cross-objection should be limited to his urging it only against the appellant; and it is only by way of exception to this general rule, that one respondent may urge a cross-objection as against another respondent; the exception, it is said, holds good in those cases where the appeal opens up questions which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be opened up as between co-respondents." And, then later on, he refers to the negative test which I have already read, and goes on to say: "The test to be applied is, whether the questions which arise between the several sets of parties are so connected that one of them ought not to be allowed to re-open matters so far as he is concerned without opportunity allowed, in the interests of justice, to another to protect himself by urging his objections, even though they be directed, not against the appellant, but against a co-respondent." Now, in my judgment the matters which I have referred to and which are sought to be raised by the cross-objection had no relation to or connection with the question which was raised by the appeal, and cannot be said to be within the test which is laid down by this judgment, namely, "so connected that one of the parties ought not to be allowed to re-open matters so far as he is concerned without opportunity allowed, in the interest of justice, to another to protect himself by urging his objections, even though they be directed, not against the appellant, but against a co-respondent." I do not think this case comes within that test. What I have only to add is this: our attention was drawn to Order XLI, rule 33. This rule, as I understand, has been passed since this decision. It gives undoubtedly important and useful powers to the Court of Appeal, which, speaking for myself, I should think the Court of Appeal would not hesitate to make use of on a proper occasion; but as regards this case it is sufficient for me to say that in my judgment it is not a proper case in which the Court of Appeal ought to exercise the powers which are given to it by that rule.

For these reasons I think the preliminary objection which was raised by Mr. Sircar must prevail.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree that the cross-objection taken by the defendant-respondent against the plaintiff-respondent should not be entertained. The property, it has been held, belonged, in equal halves, to two brothers Shib Chandra Neogi and Chunilal Neogi. According to the facts found by Chaudhuri, J, the share of the latter has devolved upon the plaintiff, while the share of the former has vested in the two defendants, Kar and Dulken. Kar has preferred this appeal and has raised the question, whether the share of Shib Chandra was not vested in him alone to the exclusion of Dulken. The plaintiff has been joined as a respondent to this appeal, as a partition is sought of the entire joint property. Thereupon, another defendant, who unsuccessfully resisted the claim of the plaintiff to the half share of Chunilal, has sought to re-open that question by way of cross-objection. Clearly, the cross objection should not be entertained under Order XLI, rule 22 of the Code; the question raised thereby is entirely distinct from and in no way related to the question in controversy in this appeal. The grounds for this conclusion need not be elaborated here and will be found formulated in my judgment in the case of Jadunandan Prosad Singha v. Koer Kallyan Singh (2). Our attention, however, has been invited to Order XLI, rule 33 of the Code, which, it has been argued, invests the Court of Appeal with wide discretionary powers, comprehensive enough to cover the present case. This contention, in my opinion, should not prevail.

The scope of this rule has been the subject of judicial determination in the case of Ganga Dhar Muradi v. Banabashi Padihari (3), Ananga Mohun v. Bejoy Chandra (4), Abjal Majhi v. Intu Bepari (5), Akimannessa Bibi v. Bepin Behari Mitter (6), Mathura Mohan Saha v. Ramkumar Saha (7) and Rangamlal v. Jhandu (8). These decisions show that Order XLI, rule 33, must be cautiously applied, for instance, applied generally in cases where but for recourse to it, the ends of justice would be defeated. Thus the rule should not be allowed to be invoked in favour of a litigant so as to enable him to evade the provisions of other Statutes, such as the Limitation Act and the Court Fees Act. Here, a recourse to the other provisions of the Code would have been sufficient for the purposes of the respondent; she has failed to do so, and, cannot now be permitted to fall back upon Order XLI, rule 33. The cross-objection must consequently be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This case has taken rather a curious course, and it is about to be decided by the Court upon a point which, as far as I understand, was not taken in the Court of first instance, and was not mentioned in the grounds of appeal, but was one which occurred to the members of the Court, and which was put yesterday to Mr. Das and, I may say for myself, the case was argued exceedingly well on both sides, and when Mr. Das was faced with this point he met it with the candour, which always characterizes his conduct in Court, and in spite of his ingenuity he had to admit practically that there was no answer to it. When I come to deal with the question about costs, I shall have to say something of the course the case has taken. Before I deal with that, I propose to state shortly the facts of the case and then give my judgment.

The appeal is by Shib Chandra Kar, who appeals, as I have already said in dealing with the other part of the case, against the decision in favour of another defendant whose name is Duloken. The learned Judge has decided that Shib Chandra Neogi and Chhnilal Neogi formed a joint Hindu family and had a joint business carried on at premises No. 36 Fariapooker Street, that that property was purchased in the name of the wife of Shib Chandra Neogi, and that the plaintiffs who claim through Chhnilal were entitled to half that property. The dispute between the defendant Shib Chandra Kar and Duloken has been confined entirely to the other half, namely, what I may call the half to which the heirs of Shib Chandra Neogi were entitled.

Now, Shib Chandra Neogi had a daughter whose name was Giribala who had six sons, Satish Chunder Sur, Suresh Chunder Sur, Sirish Chunder Sur, Sarat Chunder Sur, Subodh Chunder Sur and Susil Chunder Sur. There were considerable dealings with the property in question into which I do not intend to go—the material dealings were three mortgages: the first was dated the 13th of February 1901 in which Giribala was the mortgagor and her eldest three sons, Satish, Suresh and Sirish joined; the mortgage was to a man called Tincowrie Haldar, and the property was mortgaged for Rs. 4,030. On the 22nd of January 1902 there was another mortgage of the same property by Giribala and the same three sons, to Shib Chandra Kar, the defendant, for Rs. 4,500. On the 12th of January 1903, there was a further mortgage to one Nilkanta Pal and in this mortgage Giribala joined on behalf of herself and also on behalf of her two infant sons Subodh and Susil, and to this mortgage her first, third and fourth sons, Satish, Suresh and Sarat were parties, the second son Sirish having died in the meantime; that was a mortgage for Rs. 3,000. On the 25th of February 1904, Tincowry Haldar obtained a decree in Suit No. 273 of 1903; the defendants to that suit were Giribala, Satish and Suresh and the subsequent encumbrancers Shib Chandra Kar and Nilkanta Pal. On the 27th of April 1904, there was an agreement between Giribala and all her sons, except Sirish who was dead at that time, by which the parties agreed to sell the property in Fariapooker Street and another property to Duloken subject to mortgages—the mortgages being specifically mentioned—and subject to the decree in Suit No. 273 of 1903. On the 17th of December 1905, Giribala died. On the 2nd of March 1906, Nilkanta Pal assigned his mortgage-debt and his benefit under the decree to the defendant Shib Chandra Kar. On the 23th of March 1906, there was a substitution order on the register of the suit by which Sarat and one or two of his brothers were added as parties. On the 24th of July 1903, there was a conveyance to Hutchison by Satish, Sarat and Suresh, the three sons, and Harish, their father, and it is the basis of the title of Duloken. By that, these three sons purported to convey their $\frac{3}{5}$ th share of the property:—in that conveyance there was no mention or recital of the mortgage. On the 31st of July 1903, there was an order amending the decree and substituting the names of the sons for that of the mother Giribala; and, on the 3rd of May 1909 the decree was made absolute for sale. On the 16th of April 1910, Hutchison conveyed the property, or rather I think I shall be more accurate in saying the $\frac{3}{5}$ th share of half the property, to Duloken for Rs. 500. On the 2nd of August 1910, Tincowrie Haldar assigned his decree to the defendant Shib Chandra Kar and all rights under it for Rs. 3,100. On the 23rd of August 1910 Shib Chandra Kar was made plaintiff in Suit No. 278 of 1903. In December there was a sale by the Registrar, and at this sale Shib Chandra Kar purchased all the properties, and paid a sum of Rs. 17,600. On the 7th March 1911, the sale certificate was handed to Shib Chandra, Kar. There is one other fact which I need now mention, and that is that on the 24th of March 1911 the infant sons, the fifth and sixth sons of Giribala in consideration of a sum of money, Rs. 500, released all interests in the property to the defendant Shib Chandra Kar.

Now, the question arises upon those facts whether the defendant Duleken is entitled to 3/5th share of this property in Foriapooker Street or to any part of that 3/5th share. The learned Judge has held that he was. In my judgment the appellant is entitled to succeed upon this ground—and I may mention here, as I have already mentioned, that I do not differ from the learned Judge's judgment because this point was never raised before the learned Judge, and he never had an opportunity of considering it—I think that by joining in the mortgage of 1903, Sarat and the other two sons, who were the parties conveying to Hutchison in 1906, represented that the property was being mortgaged by their mother for what has been called legal necessity. Upon those mortgages decrees have been made. But I am prepared to hold and do hold that apart from those decrees those sons who joined in those mortgages would not be allowed to go back upon those representations when they are dealing with a party such as Shib Chandra Kar, who has changed his position relying upon the representations of fact, Shib Chandra Kar having parted with no less than Rs. 17,600. In the course of the argument, I referred to the well-known case of Pickard v. Sears (9), and also the case of Carr v. London and North Western Railway Company (10) and I read to Mr. Das a passage which I read again, (see Leake on Contract, sixth Edition, page 4) "where one by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe in the existence of a certain state of things,"—I pause here for a moment and point out that in the present case the three sons by their conduct and statement wilfully caused another to believe in the existence of a state of things to this effect that Giribala was mortgaging the property for a legal necessity and was entitled to convey the whole of the property—"and induces him to act on that belief or to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time." Therefore in my judgment, the three sons would be estopped from denying, as far as Shib Chandra Kar was concerned, that the state of things which they had represented existed. Then Mr. Das drew my attention to section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act and also to the illustration which is given in the section, although it was directly contrary to his client's case but naturally it was his duty and he did perfectly right in drawing our attention to it, where the illustration given is, "A intentionally and falsely leads B to believe that certain land belongs to A, and thereby induces B to buy and pay for it. The land afterwards becomes the property of A, and A seeks to set aside the sale on the ground that, at the time of the sale, he had no title. He must not be allowed to prove his want of title."

For these reasons I am of opinion that Duleken, who claims in this case through the three sons whose names I have mentioned, obtained no better interest in this particular property than the sons themselves had and, therefore, this appeal must be allowed.

Now, as regards the costs—I speak entirely for myself for the present moment but I think my learned brothers will agree with me—this case had a most unfortunate course. In the Court below the question of legal necessity was only raised, if I may call it, at the last minute, and an adjournment was taken in order that the appellant might prove, if he could, the case of legal necessity on the part of Giribala and her three sons who joined with her. Then the learned Judge on the facts and on the evidence which was given at the late stage of the case decided against the case of legal necessity. That being so, the appellant comes to this Court and he first of all argued that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that no case of legal necessity was proved, and then went on further to argue that even if he could not substantiate that case, he was entitled to succeed on the ground that under the circumstances of this case there was a presumption, by reason of the mortgages by the three sons who were of age at the time the mortgages were given, that there was a legal necessity, and that inasmuch as the other side did not rebut that presumption, the appellant is entitled to succeed. Even that case, as far as I can understand, was not urged in the Court below, and the ground upon which we have decided the case was not mentioned in the notice of appeal, and that is the only ground upon which this appeal has been allowed. I purposely abstain from expressing any opinion as to whether the learned Judge was right in holding that there was no such legal necessity: speaking for myself, I should have very great hesitation in interfering with his judgment on that point. I also refrain from expressing any opinion as to whether there was the presumption. If I were to do that, I should have to consider very closely indeed, whether the other side ought not to have an opportunity of displacing that presumption. Fortunately we have not to do that: for I think the appellant is entitled to succeed upon the ground I have mentioned. Having regard to these circumstances, I think the appellant ought not to have any costs against Dulken either in this Court or in the Court of first instance and that each party should bear his own costs in this Court and in the Court of first instance.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree both as to the order passed on the appeal and as to costs.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the first defendant in a suit for partition of joint property, which belonged originally to two brothers Shib Chandra Neogi and Chuni-lal Neogi, though it had been acquired and continued to stand in the name of Ramanimoni Dasi, the wife of the elder brother. The question of the devolution of the share of the younger brother is not in controversy in this appeal, and, we are concerned only with the share of the elder brother. The rival claimants in respect of this share are the appellant Shib Chandra Kar and the respondent Arthur Clayton Dulken; the former sets up a title by purchase at a sale held in execution of a decree on three mortgages granted on the 13th February 1901, 22nd January 1902, and 12th January 1903 by Giribala, the daughter of Shib Chandra Neogi and Ramanimoni Dasi; the latter claims as assignee from three of the sons of Giribala who had joined with their mother in the execution of one or more of the mortgages already mentioned. Mr. Justice Chaudhuri has decided in favour of Dulken on the ground that the mortgages granted by Giribala and the sale consequent thereon did not bind the inheritance in the hands of her sons. On the present appeal, the argument was at first directed to controvert this proposition, and reliance was placed upon the decision of the Full Bench in Debi Prosad Chowdhury v. Golap Bhagat (1) as to the precise effect of a transfer by a limited owner with the concurrence of some of the reversionary heirs. If the decision of the appeal had depended on the determination of this question, it would have been necessary for the Court to consider, whether, upon the pleadings, the appellant should have been allowed to raise this point in the Court of first instance, and, whether upon failure of the case made in the trial Court, he should be allowed to rely here upon a radically different aspect of the matter. As the argument proceeded, however, it transpired that the determination of the rights of the parties really depended upon a question of law, neither raised nor investigated in the Court of first instance, namely, were the vendors of the respondent Dulken estopped to deny the validity of the mortgages (to which they were parties) and the operative character of the consequential execution sale. This question must be entertained and decided by this Court, as its solution does not require the investigation of new facts. In this connection, we may usefully recall to mind the observations of Lord Watson in

SHIB CHANDRA K&R V. DULCKEN.

Connecticut Fire Insurance Company v. Kavanagh (11), "when a question of law is raised for the first time in a Court of last resort, upon the construction of a document or upon facts either admitted or proved beyond controversy, it is not only competent but expedient, in the interests of justice, to entertain the plea."

We must now examine the true legal position of the three sons of Giribala who joined with her in the mortgage transactions; and, upon her death, transferred the property on the 24th July 1906 to Hutchison, from whom Dulcken purchased on the 16th April 1910. The record shows that the first two sons not only joined their mother in the execution of the first two mortgages but were also parties to the mortgage suit, which, on the 25th February 1904, resulted in the usual decree for sale, subsequently made absolute on the 3rd May 1909. The other son, though one of the executants of the mortgage of the 12th January 1903, was not made a party to the mortgage suit in the first instance; but on the death of his mother on the 17th December 1905, he was brought on the record as one of her representatives-in-interest. I use this inaccurate expression, as it occurs in the decree; but what happened in essence was that the sons of Giribala were, upon her death, brought on the record of the mortgage suit to represent that interest in the hypothecated property which was sought to be bound by the decree made therein: Premmoyi Choudhrani v. Preonath Dhur (12). There is no controversy that on the dates when the mortgages were executed, the entire interest in the property was vested in Giribala and Giribala alone, subject, no doubt, to the qualification that as she was a limited owner, she could bind the inheritance by a transfer, only if it was made under circumstances recognized as necessary or proper under the Hindu Law. Now, each of these mortgages recited her title as derived from her mother by right of inheritance and narrated the circumstances which constrained her to create the incumbrances. Here, we may observe parenthetically that whether the property belonged really to her father or to her mother, she would equally take as the heiress; in either contingency, she would be a limited owner, and, upon her death, the property would pass to her sons, who were the reversionary heirs, as much of the estate of her father as of the stridhan property of her mother. It was thus wholly immaterial, for purposes of devolution, whether the property belonged really to her father or to her mother. The mortgages no doubt proceeded on the assumption that the property belonged to her mother and that the money raised was required for such legitimate purposes as justified an absolute alienation of the inheritance by a limited owner, but how could this prejudice the position of the mortgagee? how could the mortgagors be allowed to rely upon some title other than that alleged in their deed? Brijraj Nopani v. Pura Sundary Dassee (13). The question thus inevitably arises, whether her sons who joined with her in these mortgages are concluded by their solemn declarations, or whether they are free to resile from the position they deliberately took up and to rely upon a title derived, not from their maternal grandmother, but from their maternal grandfather, and thus impeach, possibly defeat, the interest of the mortgagee; this, be it noted, is not a question as to their competency to bind their expectant interest as reversioners by actual alienation before the succession had opened out: Sham Sundar Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (14). In my opinion, section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act furnishes an answer emphatically in the negative. This conclusion is supported by the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (15) and Chandra Kunwar v. Chaudhri Narpat Singh (16). In the former case, Lord Shand said: "What the law and the Indian Statute mainly regard is the position of the person who was induced to act; and the principle on which the law and the Statute rest is, that it would be most inequitable and unjust to him that if another, by a representation made, or by conduct amounting to a representation, has induced him to act as he would not otherwise have done, the person who made the representation should be allowed to deny or repudiate the effect of his former statement, to the loss and injury of the person who acted on it." In the latter case, Lord Atkinson said: "In Heane v. Rogers (17), Bayley, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court lays it down that: 'there is no doubt but that the express admissions of a party to the suit, or admissions implied from his conduct, are evidence, and strong evidence, against him; but we think he is at liberty to prove that such admissions were mistaken or were untrue, and is not estopped or concluded by them unless another person has been induced by them to alter his condition. In such a case, the party is estopped from disputing their truth as against that person (and those claiming under him) and that transaction, but as to third parties he is not bound. In Newton v. Liddiard (18), Lord Denman approved and adopted this statement of the law; and Morgan, Ex parte, Simpson, In re (19) and Trinidad Asphalt Co. v. Coryat (20) in effect illustrate the same principle." Reference may also be made to other decisions which illustrate this principle: Cairncross v. Lorimer (21), Pickard v. Sears (9) and Freeman v. Cooke (22), Cornish v. Abington (23), Carr v. London and North Western Railway Co. (10), Suton v. Lafone (24) and Bepin Behari Mitter v. Tinkowri

Pathak (25) the doctrine was recognised as early as 1812, when the Sudder Court held in Mohun Lal Khan v. Hanees Siroo-munnee (26) that a reversioner who has voluntarily signed the deed of the widow cannot legally claim in opposition thereto, Sia Dasi v. Gur Sahai (27) and Ramadhin v. Mathura Singh (28); Mr. Das, who argued the case for the respondent with great ability indeed, admitted with his usual candour, that the sons who had actually joined in the mortgages granted by their mother could not be heard to maintain to the detriment of the mortgagee or of the purchaser at the mortgage sale: Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (15), that the recitals therein were untrue, but he contended that the position of the transferee from them was different in view of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, which defines the effect of a transfer by an unauthorised person who subsequently acquires an interest in the property transferred. In my opinion, that section is of no real assistance to the respondent, even on the assumption that he is a purchaser for value without notice. The sons are concluded by the recitals in the mortgage instruments to which they were parties; those recitals establish indisputably that the appellant has obtained an absolute title to the property, a title not defeasible at the instance of the sons; consequently, no title did or could pass to the purchaser from the sons. The two sons who were parties to the mortgage suit and are bound by the decree made therein, are obviously in a position of still greater embarrassment than their brother who was not initially made a party to that suit. There is, further, no room for doubt that what was mortgaged was the entire interest in the property, which was precisely what was intended to be bound by the decree and to be sold thereunder. This follows irresistibly from the fact that the execution sale actually took place after the death of Giribala, for if the decree had been intended to bind merely the limited inter-

There is thus no escape from the conclusion that the Court intended to sell the entire interest, and, in the events which have happened, that interest has vested in the appellant. Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1909), s. 91—Public nuisance, suit for removal of, by private person—Special damage, proof of.

The fact that a person suffers in a special degree the inconvenience felt by the public arising from a public nuisance cannot be said to cause him special damage and does not give him any right to sue for the removal of the nuisance, unless he proves that it causes him damage in a way different from the general public.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, West Berar, Akola, in Appeal No. 55 of 1916, dated the 2nd April 1917.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—It is urged in second appeal that the lower Courts were wrong in holding that the plaintiff could not maintain the suit in respect of Panhals A and B and window C, as they did constitute a private nuisance to the plaintiff and caused him special damage. It is said that the plaintiff has to use the lane into which the Panhals A and B and the window C open more than the rest of the public, she, therefore, suffers in a special degree from the inconvenience caused to the general public by their existence. The fact that a person suffers in a special degree the inconvenience felt by the general public cannot be said to cause him special damage.

JAGANNATH SINGH v. DRIGBIJAY SINGH

It is not alleged that the nuisance is specially aimed at or intended to cause damage to the plaintiff, or that the plaintiff suffers damage in a way other than the general public. It is impossible to see how the window C can in any sense constitute a nuisance. I agree with what the lower Appellate Court has said in paragraph 5 of that Court's judgment.

The appeal fails and is dismissed under Order XLI, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code.

Jurisdiction of Revenue Courts to decide finally on validity of documents of title.

The proposition that the Revenue Courts have no exclusive jurisdiction to decide finally upon the validity of documents of title, though correct as a general statement of the law, is subject to the obvious qualification that the Civil Courts cannot decide any matter in which jurisdiction has been exclusively reserved to Revenue Courts. [p. 89 col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 18th May 1917, upholding that of the Sub-Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 17th March 1917.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute between the parties to this appeal has arisen out of certain proceedings which were taken by the plaintiff-respondent, the Taluqdar, in the Revenue Court. The Taluqdar issued a notice of ejectment against the appellant in respect of the lands in suit. The appellant contested the notice in the Revenue Court on the ground that he had under-proprietary rights. The case was fought out as far as the Board of Revenue. The Board held that the notice must be cancelled on the ground that a prima facie case of under-proprietary rights had been made out. The result is that the Taluqdar has brought the present suit for declaration. The relief claimed in paragraph 12 of the plaint is (1) that a declaration be made that the defendant has got neither proprietary nor under-proprietary rights in the land in suit, (2) that he is a mere tenant of the land in question, (3) that the lease (patta) which is set up by the defendant is a fictitious deed and (4) that the decision of the Board of Revenue is erroneous.

The Courts below have found that the defendant has neither proprietary nor under-proprietary rights in the lands in suit and that finding is not disputed by the appellant. The case with which the appellant comes to this Court is that the Courts below were wrong in giving a decision as to the genuineness of the patta, that is to say, the document upon which the appellant had relied in the Revenue Court. It is said that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to give any declaration regarding the genuineness or otherwise of this document. In my opinion, this contention must be allowed and the decree of the Court below must be modified accordingly. It appears that during the trial in the Court of first instance the defendant admitted that he was not in a position to claim proprietary or under-proprietary rights in these lands. He set up the case that he was a tenant with a right of occupancy. Consequently the only matter upon which the parties remained at issue after these admissions had been made was whether the defendant was, as the plaintiff described him, an ordinary tenant of the lands in suit or whether he was an occupancy tenant, as he himself claimed to be. Obviously a Civil Court could give no declaration on a question of this kind. It is well settled that the Revenue Courts have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the class to which a tenant belongs. This being so, it seems to me that after the admission made by the defendant the Courts below were wrong in going further for the purpose of determining whether or not the document set up by the defendant was a genuine document. On behalf of the respondent I have been referred to a ruling of my own reported as Debi Bakhsh v. Ram Dhani (1), in which it (1) 35 Ind. Cas. 446; 19 Q. C. 58, was laid down that the Revenue Courts have no exclusive jurisdiction to decide finally upon the validity of documents of title. As a general statement of the law this appears to me to be correct, but it is necessarily subject to the qualification that the Civil Courts cannot decide any matter in which jurisdiction has been exclusively reserved to the Revenue Courts. It appears to me that in the present case the issue regarding the genuineness or otherwise of the patta relied upon by the defendant-appellant could only be decided with the object of determining a question which is exclusively reserved for the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts, namely, whether the defendant is an ordinary tenant or a tenant with a right of occupancy.

The result is that the appeal is allowed. The decree of the Court below is modified by striking out the declaration regarding the genuineness of the patta relied upon by the defendant-appellant. The parties will bear their own costs.

Appeal allowed.

Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit in terms is one for dissolution of partnership. The Courts below have come to the conclusion that it is barred by limitation, applying Article 106 of the Limitation Act.

Two points have been raised before us by the learned Vakil for the appellant. One is that in the reference to the arbitrators, there was a request to settle the accounts, that is equivalent to an acknowledgment of liability and that, consequently, the suit is not barred by limitation. The other is that to the suit as framed Article 120 applies. As regards the first of these points, the question is as to whether Exhibit D dated 1st December 1912 contains an acknowledgment of liability. It is true that the document says that the account should be looked into, the loss and profits between the parties should be ascertained and that the parties will be bound to take whatever may be settled by the arbitrators. But the reference never fructified into an award. Some of the arbitrators died and as the result the reference came to an end. Whether in these circumstances the letter to the arbitrators could amount to an acknowledgment depends upon the interpretation to be placed on the decision of the Judicial Committee in Maniram v. Seth Rupchand (1). The Committee pointed out that there were three classes of acknowledgments: the first is an unconditional undertaking to pay, the second is an unconditional acknowledgment of liability, and the third is a conditional acknowledgment of liability. As regards the third class it is pointed out that if the condition is not fulfilled there will be no acknowledgment at all: and the case of reference to arbitrators was specially regarded by the Judicial Committee as a case of conditional acknowledgments. This is what is stated by Sir Alfred Wills at page 1058: "There can be no reason for giving a different meaning to an acknowledgment that there is a right to have the accounts settled, and no qualification of the natural inference that, whoever is the creditor shall be paid, when the condition is performed by the ascertainment of a balance in favour of the claimant", that is to say, until there is an ascertainment of the balance by the party to whom the accounts have been referred there will be no acknowledgment of liability. Reliance is placed for this statement of law upon a decision of Mellish, L. J., in River Steamer Co., In re; Mitchell, Ex parte (2). In the present case, as we pointed out, the reference fell through and consequently the condition attaching to the enforcement of acknowledgment never was fulfilled. In Bollapragada Kamamurthy v. Thammanna Gopayya (3), two learned Judges of this Court have construed the case of Maniram v. Seth Rupchand (1) in the sense in which we interpreted it. Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar relies strongly upon the decision of this Court in Sitayya v. Rangareddi (4). There was an award which the Court set aside. But the learned Judges referred to the reference itself as containing an acknowledgment of liability. No doubt this case is in favour of the appellant, and although the Judicial Committee in the case of Maniram v. Seth Rupchand (1) referred to this case, their Lordships did not regard it as having any reference to a conditional acknowledgment. In this view we would have upheld the decision of the District Judge, but for the fact that we do not agree with him that Article 106 of the Limitation Act applies to the present case. As we stated at the outset, the suit is in terms one for dissolution of partnership and under Order XX, rule 15, it is the Court that has to fix the time from which partnership shall cease to exist. Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar has contended that the parties all through understood the plaint as having declared that the partnership had been put an end to and containing a claim for an account of a dissolved partnership. But in the face of the language of the plaint it is impossible to uphold such a view. It may be that Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar is justified in saying that this is altogether a new case which was not considered by either of the Courts below; and we cannot say that the point was clearly put in the grounds of second appeal here. In these circumstances, while we think that we cannot uphold the conclusion of the Courts below that Article 106 is applicable, we must hold that Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar is entitled to his costs in this Court and that the question as to limitation should be tried in the light of our observation. We reverse the decree of the District Judge and remand the appeals to him for disposal according to law. The appellant must pay the costs of the respondent in this Court. Farther costs will be provided for in the decrees of the Court below.

JUDGMENT.—After hearing the learned Counsel in this case and considering the evidence, I am of opinion that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is erroneous. I think the decree of the Court of first instance ought to be restored.

The plaintiff's case was that he is a Zemindar in the village, that he occupies a house there and that in front of that house there is a piece of land which is used as "saken darwaza". In other words, the land is an open space the occupation of which is enjoyed by the plaintiff for the convenience of his house. His complaint was that the defendant, who is also a Zemindar in the village and has his own house some distance away, had come and driven cattle pegs in the land in question and also deposited manure, the result being an interference with his right of enjoyment.

It is perfectly plain from a perusal of the oral evidence in the case that the witnesses on neither side are to be believed. They seem to be partizan witnesses who are ready to swear to anything. The fact, however, remains that there is some documentary evidence which goes to show that the plot in suit in the year 1884 stood in front of the house of a man named Ram Ratan. It is described in this document Exhibit A 3 as being "saken darwaza". The defendant's story is that this house now occupied by the plaintiff was once in the possession of a tenant of his. Whether that is so or not appears to me to make no difference. The admitted fact remains that the plaintiff Ram Piyare Lal has now been occupying this house for some years past; indeed some of the defendant's witnesses admit that he has built or re-built the house. If that is so, then it seems to me that the plaintiff is entitled to the undisturbed enjoyment of this land in front of his house, provided that in doing so he does not put the other co-sharers to inconvenience and that they are, in a similar way, enjoying the exclusive possession of plots of land in front of their own houses. I do not agree that the case set out in the plaint was a vague case. It is true that there is no claim for an easement; nor again is there any claim to absolutely exclusive possession. The law has, I think, been laid down correctly in a judgment of Pandit Kanhaiya Lal which is reported as Sobha Singh v. Ganga Bakhsh (1). The general rule is that a co-sharer has no right to appropriate to himself a specific portion of the common land and to exclude his co-sharers, from all use and enjoyment of the same without a lawful partition. But where a person has been in possession of a piece of joint land for a long time without any let or hindrance by the other co-sharers the latter have no right to eject him or his transferee or to disturb his possession or enjoyment, otherwise than by seeking partition, and he is entitled to continue in such possession so long as such user does not interfere with the user of the other co-sharers of what is in their possession. The law as laid down there seems to me to fit this case exactly. It is not to be doubted that the piece of land in front of the house now occupied by the plaintiff has for a very long period been used by the occupants of the house as "sahen darwaza". It is also apparent from the map which was prepared by the Commissioner that the defendant Nageshar has lots of room in front of his own dwelling house for the purposes of making a manure heap and tying up and feeding his cattle. I can only come to the conclusion that he has deposited manure and driven these pegs in front of the plaintiff's house for the purpose of annoying him. If the defendant is not satisfied with the present arrangement, his remedy is to seek partition of this abadi area. Probably what has given rise to this suit is the fact that within the last year or two the plaintiff has erected some sort of chabutra on the land in dispute to be used for the purpose of religious recitations. It may be that the defendant objects to this erection, but as I have already said, if he is not satisfied with the arrangements as they are, he is at liberty to apply for partition. As things are at present, it seems to me that the plaintiff is not interfering in any way with the right of the other co-sharers to enjoy for the time being exclusive possession of the pieces of land in front of their houses.

I allow the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and restore the decree of the Court of first instance. The plaintiff will have his costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed.

Defendant purchased a malik makbuza plot in execution of a decree obtained by the malguzar for arrears of revenue payable in respect of the plot. The plaintiff thereupon sued to enforce his mortgage which comprised the malik makbuza plot. The defendant urged that the revenue payable under the sub-settlement being, under section 65 of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, the first charge on the plot, the plaintiff's mortgage could not be enforced against him as the sale was free from incumbrances:

Section 108 of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act applies only when a sale under the provisions of the Land Revenue Act takes place for the recovery of arrears payable directly to Government. It does not apply to sales for the recovery of arrears of revenue payable to the malguzar in respect of a malik makbuza plot, as section 64 makes it clear that land revenue in respect of a malik makbuza plot is paid not directly to Government but through the malguzar. Appeal from the decree of the Court of the District Judge, Jubbulpur, dated the 13th April 1916, in Civil Suit No. 15 of 1915.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Sir B. K. Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued upon a mortgage of the 12th September 1907 comprising a Malik Makbuza plot in Monza Jubbulpur. On the 28th July 1914 the defendant No. 3 purchased this plot in execution of certain decrees obtained by one Sao Lakhi Chand, Malguzar of the village, for arrears of revenue payable in respect of this Malik Makbuza plot. The defendant No. 3 claimed that as under section 65 of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act the revenue payable under sub-settlement by the Malik Makbuza was a first charge, the plaintiff's mortgage could not be enforced against him as the sale was free of all encumbrances. The plaintiff denied the sale in favour of the defendant No. 3 operated to extinguish his mortgage and offered in any case to redeem the prior charge in respect of arrears of land revenue. The lower Court has decreed the plaintiff's claim in full and this appeal has been filed by defendant No. 3.

The learned Advocate for the appellant asked for permission to urge a new ground of appeal not taken in the memorandum of appeal and not urged in the lower Court. Upon objection by the respondent I have disallowed this new plea, as it would involve further enquiry into facts and is not based upon any definite allegation on the record.

The decision of the lower Court appears to me to be correct so far as regards the effect of the sale in favour of the defendant No. 3 is concerned. The Malguzar did not obtain a sale decree nor did he join the present plaintiff as a party to the suit for the recovery of arrears of revenue. Under these circumstances I hold, following the rulings of this Court, that the defendant has not acquired a title free of all encumbrances [see Mangal Frasad v. Chandra Mall (1) and the cases cited therein]. Reliance, however, is placed on section 108 of the Land Revenue Act of 1891. That section lays down: "Unless the Chief Commissioner in sanctioning the sale otherwise directs, a purchaser of any land sold for arrears of revenue due in respect thereof acquires the full proprietorship or superior or inferior proprietorship of it, as the case may be, free of all leases, liens and other incumbrances; and all grants or contracts previously made by any person other than the purchaser in respect of such land shall become void as against such purchaser." This forms part of a group of sections under the heading "Realization of Revenue from Malguzars." while sections 115, 116, 117 and 118 form a group of sections under the heading "Realization of Revenue by Malguzars." The sale which is referred to under section 108 obviously refers to section 94, which lays down that an arrear of revenue payable directly to Government may be recovered by selling a Mahal or a share or land of any Malguzar who has not paid a portion of the revenues. In other words, section 108 applies only when a sale under the provisions of the Land Revenue Act takes place for recovery of arrears payable directly to Government. Now section 64 of the Land Revenue Act makes it clear that the land revenue is paid by a Malik Makbuza not directly to Government but through the Malguzar. Therefore, section 108 has no application whatever.

Under section 116 of the Land Revenue Act any Lambardar or Sub-Lambardar entitled to recover an arrear, or any Malguzar to whom such an arrear is due under a sub-settlement, may apply to the Deputy Commissioner to recover such arrear on his behalf as if it were an arrear of revenue payable directly to Government. The Deputy Commissioner may, if he thinks fit, comply with such application, but shall before compliance therewith give, to the persons who would be defendants if a suit were instituted for the recovery of such arrears, opportunity to show cause against the order which he proposes to make. No such application, as is contemplated by this section, was ever made to the Deputy Commissioner but a civil suit was filed. I need not, therefore, decide what would have been the effect if the Deputy Commissioner had thought fit to comply with an application under section 116. The case, therefore, so far as this point is concerned has been rightly decided.

It is not disputed that the plaintiff is bound to redeem the prior charge in favour of the appellant. The plaintiff will pay Rs. 175 within six months from this date and redeem the prior charge on the ten anna eight pies share of Malik Makbuza field No. 1 of Mouza Jubbalpur. The plaintiff will be entitled to enforce the sale decree passed in his favour by the Civil Court, so far as the field No. 1 is concerned, only after such redemption. Each party will bear his own costs of this appeal. The decree of the lower Court will be modified accordingly.

Decree modified.

Provincial Small Causes Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 31—Suit for money with prayer for looking into accounts, whether suit for accounts—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court.

A suit to recover money which is cognizable by a Small Cause Court, does not become a suit for an account under Article 31 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act merely because accounts have to be looked into in order to ascertain the correctness or otherwise of the amount claimed by the plaintiff.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated 6th August 1917, of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Calicut, in Small Cause Suit No. 679 of 1917.

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Ayyar, for the Petitioner.

NAIMUL HAQ v. MOHAMMAD SUBHAN-UL-LAH.

JUDGMENT.—The suit is to recover Rs. 51-6-4 paid by plaintiff at defendant's request to remove an attachment. The fact that plaintiff states that there were other transactions in respect of which he reserves his right to sue separately will not alter the nature of the suit. The mere fact that accounts have to be looked into in order to ascertain the correctness or otherwise of the amount claimed by plaintiff would not render the suit one for an account under Article 31 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act. Konduru Runga Reddi v. Subbiah Setty (1), Sankara Reddy v. Errama Reddi (2), Faradarajulu Chettiar v. Pattri Narayanaswamy Chetty (3) Kshetra Nath Bhuiya v. Kali Das Dasi (4). The allegations in paragraphs 4 and 5 will not affect the jurisdiction of the Court to decide whether plaintiff at the defendant's request made a specific payment sued for. I set aside the order of the District Munsif and direct him to receive the plaint and dispose of it according to law.

Respondent will pay petitioner's costs.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—The plaintiff in this case is the daughter's son and the defendant the son's son of one Maulvi Habib-ul-lah Khan who died on April 3rd, 1891. The plaintiff's case is that the said Maulvi had, in his life-time, made a waqf, or dedication for religious and charitable purposes, under the Muhammadan Law of certain property specified at the foot of the plaint; that the defendant is in possession of the said property as mutwalli, or trustee of the endowment, but is misconducting himself in various ways, and principally by wasting and alienating the endowed property and by refusing to make payments which he is bound to make under the terms of the endowment. The plaintiff claims to be interested in the trust as a beneficiary under the same, and to be entitled to maintain the suit independently of the provisions of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The reliefs sought are a declaration that the property specified at the foot of the plaint is "the waqf property," the removal of the defendant from the post of mutwalli, or managing trustee of the endowed property, and the appointment of a new mutwalli, to be selected by the Court in its discretion from amongst the persons entitled to be so appointed under the terms of the alleged deed of endowment. A list of these persons, including the plaintiff himself, is appended to the plaint; but none of the other persons in the list has been impleaded as a party to the suit. In the defendant's written statement as originally filed the suit was resisted on a variety of grounds; but it was admitted that a valid endowment or waqf had been made by Maulvi Habib-ul-lah Khan of the property in suit. At a later stage the defendant applied to the trial Court for permission to amend his pleadings in this respect, his case being that his admission above referred to had been made upon defective legal advice and amounted to nothing more than an erroneous admission upon a point of law. He was allowed to file an amended pleading, in which he denied that Maulvi Habib-ul-lah Khan had ever made a valid waqf of any property, and pleaded more particularly that, on no possible view of the facts or the law, could it be held that there had ever been any dedication to religious or charitable purposes of the property specified in the lists (b) and (c) appended to the plaint. The case went to trial on issues framed upon the pleadings as thus amended, and the plaintiff has no valid ground for complaining of the exercise of a discretion undoubtedly inherent in the trial Court. It may indeed be pointed out at once that it has had to be conceded in argument before us that no waqf was ever made of the property specified in list (b).

The Court below framed a number of issues, but has dismissed the plaintiff's suit, in the main upon a finding that there was never any valid waqf, or dedication of any of the property in suit to religious or charitable purposes. The memorandum of appeal to this Court is a prolix and argumentative document; but in substance three points only are taken and have been argued before us:—

(a) It is contended that the defendant is estopped from denying that there has been a valid waqf of the property in suit.

(b) It is claimed that a valid waqf under Muhammadan Law was created by three specified documents, admittedly executed by Maulvi Habib-ul-lah Khan; or in the alternative by the first two of these documents; or again in the alternative by the third document, which is the Will of the said Habib-ul-lah Khan.

(c) It is pleaded that, even if the Court should repel the second of the above contentions, in view of the law as laid down by sundry authoritative decisions prior to the passing of the Mussalmans Waqf Validating Act (No. VI of 1913), the said Act is retrospective in its effect and that the arrangement effected by the Will of the deceased Maulvi Habib-ul-lah Khan amounts to a valid waqf under the provisions of this Statute. On behalf of the respondent each of the above propositions is denied, and it is also sought to support the decision of the Court below on a plea decided by that Court against the defendant, namely,

(d) that the suit as brought, for the reliefs specified in the plaint, is one which a person claiming an interest in the alleged trust could only maintain under the provisions of section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, so that the plaint ought to have been rejected as it stood, on the ground that it contravenes the provisions of that section and was filed without the consent of the prescribed authority.

Strictly speaking, the questions raised in the pleadings (a) and (d) above set forth are in their nature preliminary to the consideration of the appeal on its merits, as the questions raised in pleadings (b) and (c) could not arise if point (a) were decided in favour of the appellant or point (d) in favour of the respondent. The case has, however, been fully argued out before us; and I find it practically more convenient to proceed at once to the consideration of the main questions raised by the appeal.

According to the plaint the waqf was created by a deed dated January 30th, 1885, the other two deeds referred to in the plaintiff's pleadings being merely supplementary documents serving to supply omissions in, and to give directions required by, the actual deed of waqf. The plaintiff is no doubt entitled to ask that all three documents should be taken into consideration, and even that they should be read together in connection with his contention that the defendant as mutwalli has been acting in contravention of the conditions of the trust; but there are two questions which he cannot be allowed to confuse. His case in the Court below was that Maulvi Habib-ul-lah Khan created the waqf in question in his lifetime; he never set up a testamentary waqf intended to come into operation at the death of the testator. Had he done so, certain questions would have been raised as to which there has been no inquiry in the Court below; it has not been ascertained what heirs Maulvi Habib-ul-lah Khan left him surviving at the moment of his death, or whether the said heirs gave their consent to the waqf so as to make it binding in respect of more than one-third of the property of the testator. In the eye of the Muhammadan Law a waqf is a transfer of property whereby the transferor or waqif divests himself of the ownership of the same in favour of the Almighty: there is consequently a very wide difference between setting up a transfer effected by Maulvi Habib-ul-lah Khan on January 30th, 1885, and alleging a transfer by testamentary bequest, which took effect only on the death of the testator on April 3rd, 1891. If the result of the case turned upon it, which I do not think it does, I should entertain grave doubts as to whether it was open to this Court, in appeal, to find that there had been no waqf by Maulvi Habib-ul-lah Khan in his lifetime but a valid testamentary waqf taking effect from the date of his death.

With regard to the principles of law applicable to the consideration of the three main documents in this case we were referred to the usual standard authorities, by which the law on the subject was settled prior to the passing of Act No. VI of 1913. I set them down here for convenience of reference.

NAIMUL HAQ v. MOHAMMAD SUBHAN-UL-LAH.

Another case of considerable interest, which may also be referred to in connection with the question of the retrospective effect of Act No. VI of 1913, is that of Ramanadan Chettiar v. Vava Levvai Marakayar (7). So far as the case now before us is concerned, I do not think I can state the effect of these decisions better than by quoting the words of a learned Judge of this Court in Mazhar Husain Khan v. Abdul Hadi Khan (8):—

"A valid waqf is created if the owner of the property, the subject of the waqf, divests himself of it and appropriates it to charitable or religious purposes. . . .

. . . In order to constitute a valid waqf there must be a substantial dedication of the property to religious or charitable uses at sometime or other. . . . There must be a substantial and not merely a colourable dedication of the property; the religious or charitable purpose should not be so unsubstantial or illusory as to give to the settlement merely a colour of piety, the real object being the aggrandisement of the family."

Judged by these tests, the "dedication" said to be effected by the deed of January 30th, 1885, will not bear examination for a moment. There is no substantial and effective alienation of the property; the transaction is "illusory" in the plainest sense of the word. The man who executed that document had no intention whatever of parting, in his own lifetime, with the effective ownership of any property whatsoever. He makes a great parade of piety, learning and liberality, but he is at the utmost pains to take away with one hand all that he purports to give with the other. He specifies no objects for the endowment, appoints himself mutwalli for life, and quite explicitly covenants that "I shall during my lifetime spend the profits of the property at my own discretion." This is bad enough; but what absolutely clinches the matter is that the pious executant reserves to himself "exclusive power to transfer" any of the property ostensibly dedicated. There is a vague suggestion that this will only be done "if I find that it causes loss in any way;" but the learned Maulvi is too careful of his own interests to be satisfied even with this. He goes on to provide in express terms that he is to be at liberty to exercise this power of alienation at his own absolute discretion, "if for some other reason I find it advisable to do so." Here again he makes a half-hearted attempt to keep up the attitude of the pious donor by stipulating that he will "purchase another property in lieu of it and make it part of the property endowed;" but even this limitation of his authority irks him, and he promptly adds that he may also, in the alternative, "spend the consideration for some pious purposes," of the piety of which he is himself of course the sole judge. A document so worded would not operate to transfer ownership in favour of any private individual, and why it should be supposed to do so in favour of the Almighty I cannot imagine. The document is a sham from first to last; it creates no endowment and "dedicates" no property to any purpose whatsoever.

The position is in no way improved by the deed of June 10th, 1889. By this time the Maulvi's scheme for a family settlement had been a good deal upset by the death of his only surviving son. The only possible successor he could think of to the office of mutwalli which he had reserved to himself under the first deed was the son of his other son, the present defendant, at that time a mere child. He accordingly supplements the deed of January 30th, 1885, by nominating this defendant to succeed him as mutwalli, by putting him under the guardianship of the present plaintiff and by laying down certain rules for his guidance. He is careful to reiterate the fact that he himself retains full control over the property for his own lifetime, under no obligation to do anything but spend the money on "proper objects"; but he refers to his Will, which he was then engaged in drawing up, for a statement of the purposes on which the income of the endowed property is to be spent hereafter by the mutwalli who shall succeed him. He also takes occasion to lay down directions as to what is to become of the properly when "no descendant of mine, male or female, is left." I am quite clear that, if no waqf was created by the deed of 1885, none came into existence with the execution of this document on June 10th, 1889.

There remains for consideration the Will of Maulvi Habib-ul-lah Khan, a portentous document, filling twenty-eight printed pages of our record, commenced by him on June 1st, 1889, and finally executed on October 29th, 1889. The document requires to be considered as a whole. It does undoubtedly make provision for purposes which may fairly be classified as religious or charitable; but in its essence it is a family settlement in perpetuity. The mind of the testator is glaringly apparent from the very outset. He is going to provide for his lineal descendants, in the male and female line, for ever, so long as one of them is left; he is careful to tie up the property against all possibility of waste on their part and to keep it out of the reach of their creditors. What is more, he is going to provide them with a steadily increasing property. The present income of the estate which he thus "dedicates" to their advancement he estimates at Rs. 20,000 per annum, adding that with good management he believes that this "can be much increased." He limits the future mutwalli rigidly to a certain scale of expenditure; he reckons that after the mutwalli has drawn his own comfortable remuneration, paid all the prescribed allowances to other members of the family, met all the household expenses and all the payments on account of charities or religious observances which he has laid down, "the expenses cannot exceed Rs. 10,000 or Rs. 11,000." The handsome (and of course steadily increasing) surplus is to be regularly invested by the mutwalli for the benefit of the endowment. The ingenious old gentleman has even hit upon a plan for stimulating the energies of future mutwallis in the matter. Whatever properties they acquire out of the annual surplus they may keep one fourth of the income of the same to themselves, adding it to the prescribed remuneration for their services. The remaining three-fourths, however, of the income of the newly acquired properties must go to swell the endowment by an ever increasing series of fresh investments. In fact, if Maulvi Habib-ul-lah Khan can contrive it, this monstrous estate is to go on growing indefinitely, snowball fashion, the prescribed expenditure on religious and charitable objects bearing an ever decreasing proportion to the total income and the available surplus for re-investment increasing year by year, and the process is to continue so long as any descendant of the testator, in the male or female line, survives. The possible contingency that the number of his lineal descendants might increase until no adequate provision remained for their maintenance in the "compulsory" and "optional" expenses prescribed by the Will does not seem to have been fairly faced by the testator. The one person who would be increasingly well off is the mutwalli for the time being, with his remuneration of 25 per cent. of the income of the newly acquired properties. The object of the entire scheme is to create a perpetuity of the most poisonous kind, under which the endowment is to continue growing like some unwholesome excrecence on the body politic, for the benefit of no one in particular except the mutwalli for the time being, but for the honour and glory of the testator and of his family, from amongst whose members the mutwalli is always to be chosen. In the argument before us the parties were divided as to whether the total provision made for expenditure on objects which could, by any stretch of language, be described as "religious, pious or charitable", amounted to Rs. 1,476 or to Rs. 2,674 per annum. The truth probably lies between the two extremes; but the plaintiff has made up his total by including all the life annuities granted to old servants of the testator, such as any gentleman of position might reasonably and properly desire to make by his Will. I should not be disposed to accept a terminable life annuity of this sort as representing expenditure on a "charitable" object, in the sense in which the word is used even in the Waqf Validating Act of 1913. Many of the other items of expenditure claimed by the plaintiff as of a "religious" or "charitable" nature amount to no more than the incurring of such expenses as any Muhammadan gentleman of position would expect to meet in connection with the recurring festivals and observances of his religion. The one really substantial item is the annual expenditure on the upkeep of an Arabic School; and I note that one of the controverted points in the Court below was whether this school had not been compulsorily closed for want of pupils. In any case it seems clear to me that the expenditure prescribed in the Will for purposes of a religious and charitable nature was less than 10 per cent. of the testator's estimate of the income of the endowed property, and that this percentage would necessarily be a continually decreasing one if the terms of the Will were carried out. We were told in argument that this is just the kind of family settlement which we may expect under Act No. VI of 1913. I trust that the common sense of the Mubammadan community will protect them from the creation of many wagfs such as that purporting to be embodied in the document now in question; if not, I can only say that the Statute will prove as injurious to the true interests of that community as to those of the country at large.

In any case I feel no hesitation in holding that the Will of Maulvi Habib-ul-lah Khan, considered apart from the provisions of Act No. VI of 1913, does not constitute a valid wagf. The dedication of property to religious or charitable purposes is "unsubstantial and illusory." The real object of the testator is fully apparent from the terms of the document itself; it is "under a colour of piety" to effect "the aggrandisement of his family." I think that even this object is clumsily and somewhat ineffectively carried out, unless the expression above quoted be enlarged so as to read, "the aggrandisement of the family name," but the question of the testator's object requires to be considered apart from the question of the effectiveness of the methods by which he pursued it.

The evidence as to the subsequent conduct of the parties does not seem to me to carry the case much further. When Maulvi Habib-ul-lah Khan died the defendant was still a boy, apparently only about ten years of age. The plaintiff accordingly took possession of the property believed to be included in the wagf as guardian on behalf of the minor defendant, treating the latter as having succeeded to the mutwalliship. This record does not show what heirs of Habib-ul-lah Khan were in existence whose interests were adversely affected by this arrangement, what was the extent of that gentleman's property which he did not purport to include in the family settlement made by his Will, or what was done about this other property. So far as the evidence in this case goes, it would seem that the properties specified in list (b) appended to the plaint, which had devolved on Maulvi Habib-ul-lah Khan subsequently to the month of October 1889, were treated on the same footing as the rest of the alleged trust property, though it has had to be conceded in this Court that these properties were never made the subject-matter of any wagf. Under the terms of the Will the plaintiff's guardianship was to continue until the defendant attained the age of twenty-one; but the parties took it on themselves to terminate the arrangement about a year earlier by a deed of July 31st, 1901. It is worth noticing that under the plaintiff's management the endowed property had been increased in ten years by acquisitions bringing in an additional income of Rs. 5,000 a year. Under the terms of the Will the plaintiff was entitled to one-fourth of this income; but he bargained with the defendant for the transfer to himself in proprietary right of certain landed property taken from out of the new acquisitions. He accepted this transfer in lieu of one-fourth of the income of the newly acquired properties and of another allowance to which he was entitled under the Will. In this transaction both parties seem to have arrogated to themselves a freedom in the matter of dealing with the endowed properties not strictly consistent with the idea of a wagf; yet they profess in general terms to be acting under the dispositions effected by the Will of their common grandfather. I can see nothing in the conduct of the defendant in this connection by which he can be said to have caused the plaintiff to alter his position to the disadvantage of the latter; there is, therefore, nothing to support the plea of estoppel. The defendant did no doubt enter into the possession of the property ostensibly as mutwalli of a waqf; but neither can it be said that he at any time made any representation to the plaintiff on the subject in consequence of which the latter changed his position to his own disadvantage, nor has either party consistently dealt with the property in suit as held under the alleged trust. The plaintiff had to admit that during his period of management he had incurred expenses (for instance Rs. 10,000 on the wedding of the defendant) not warranted by the terms of their grandfather's Will, and the defendant has been raising money by hypothecation of portions of the property in suit in a manner very difficult to reconcile with any honest belief on his part that it had been made the subject of a valid waqf. It has been proved moreover that the largest loan thus raised was arranged with the help of the plaintiff, who signed the mortgage-deed as an attesting witness.

On the first two points set down for determination my findings are that there is no estoppel against the defendant, and that no valid waqf was created by any of the deeds executed by Maulvi Habib-ullah Khan, whether considered singly or in combination.

I am also satisfied that no waqf came into existence with the passing of Act No. VI of 1913 in consequence of any retrospective action on the part of that Statute. I have already pointed out that a waqf under the Muhammadan Law involves a transfer of the ownership of the property which is made the subject-matter of the same; if the Legislature intended to give validity as transfers of property to an unascertained number of past transactions which had no such effect at the time when they were executed, I should have expected it to do so in very clear terms and subject to various conditions and precautions. The utmost that can be said about the terms of the Act as passed is that they involve some ambiguity; and I find no provision made for the rights of bona fide transferees for value, and no period laid down within which the documents said to be thus validated must be propounded or claims on the same preferred. In examining the Statute itself

I find nothing decisive on the point in the wording of the preamble, or in the fact that there is no express provision as to the date from which the Act is to come into force. On the other hand the governing words seem to be found at the commencement of section 3—"It shall be lawful"—and these on the face of them imply a power to be exercised in future from the date of the passing of the Act, and repel the suggestion of retrospective action. A difficulty has been raised regarding the expression "shall be deemed to be invalid" in section 4; but the Court below is certainly right in saying that this entire section is controlled by the opening words, "no such waqf." It would be unfortunate if the Courts were driven to the conclusion that this one section of this short Act is retrospective, while the rest of the Act is not. I think this contingency can be avoided by interpreting the words "no such waqf" in section 4 as equivalent to "no waqf hereafter created under the provisions of section 3." I do not say that this is the only interpretation of which the words are capable; but it seems to me a possible and a fairly reasonable one, and it makes sense of the Act as a whole.

Such authority as has hitherto come into existence on the point is wholly against the appellant. The question has been touched upon in argument before the Privy Council in the last of the cases on the list given in an earlier part of this judgment (44 Indian Appeals, page 21) [Ramanadan Chettiar v Vava Levvai Marakayar (7)]. It was the respondent in that appeal who stood to win if Act No. VI of 1913 has retrospective effect and Counsel for the appellant repudiated this contention in advance. As it happened, the respondent had won a case independently of the Validating Act, so the point was not pressed; but the words used by their Lordships in disposing of the appeal do not suggest to my mind that they would have looked favourably on the suggestion that the Act operated so as to validate past transactions. In the following cases the point has been considered and opinions have been expressed against the retrospective action of the Statute:—

Rahimunnissa Bibi v. Sheikh Manik

NAIMUL HAQ V. MUHAMMAD SUBHAN-UL-LAH.

Jan (8), Muhammad Bukth Majumdar v. Ajmon Raja (10) and Amirbibi v. Azizabibi (11).

In no one of these cases has the particular difficulty been dealt with which has been pressed upon us with regard to the wording of section 4 of the Act; and in the second case the opinion expressed on the point now in issue is of the nature of an obiter dictum. At any rate no High Court has yet ventured to interpret the Act in the sense desired by the present appellant.

There remains only the contention raised by the respondent as to the bearing on this suit of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure and this it is not necessary for me to determine now in order to dispose of the appeal. I desire, however, to say a few words on the point. Some of the arguments addressed to us on behalf of the appellant overlooked the fact that there has been a substantial change in the law since the passing of the present Code of Civil Procedure, Act V of 1908. Under the corresponding section 539 of the former Code there was a certain conflict of authority on the question whether the section had any restrictive effect in respect of any right of suit which might exist independently of its provisions. The addition of clause (2) to section 92 of Act No. V of 1908 makes it clear that the section is mandatory. A suit claiming any of the reliefs specified must be brought under and in conformity with its provisions, or not at all. If the plaintiff sets up a trust, "created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature," and claims "as a person having an interest in the trust" any of the reliefs specified in the section, he must do so in accordance with its terms. One of the objects of the section is that the jurisdiction of our Courts shall not be invoked to control and supervise the administration of public trusts, unless and until a responsible officer of Government has satisfied himself that the matter is one which calls for interference in the public interests. In the present suit the main reliefs sought are those specified in clauses (a) and (b) of section 92 (1), Civil Procedure Code; the additional relief sought by way of declaration is probably not maintainable at all without a prayer for consequential relief, and is in any case the same relief in substance as is specified in clause (c), besides being included in clause (h) of the same subsection. The present plaintiff, therefore, could only get round the prohibition laid down in section 92 (2) aforesaid by contending that the religious and charitable purposes of the wagf which he desires to set up are not "public purposes" within the meaning of the section. An ultimate dedication of property for the benefit of the poor would, I take it, certainly be a "public" purpose. Under the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act (No. VI of 1913) the Muhammadan community has obtained legislative recognition of the claim that, under the religious law binding upon a member of that community, he is entitled to settle property in perpetuity on his "family, children or descendants," provided only he keeps up at least the pretence that some purpose of a "public" nature is served by the endowment. I can only ask whether Muhammadan lawyers generally would be prepared, now that Act No. VI of 1913 is on the Statute book, to turn round and say that in a "family wagf" under the said Act the ultimate dedication of the property to public purposes is after all such a mere pretence that trusts or endowments of this nature are not subject to the provisions of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Having said this much, I think it fair to add, with reference to the facts of this particular case, that I am far from holding that a suit by the present plaintiff to recover the arrears of the allowance reserved to him under his grandfather's Will, and not bargained away by him in the deed of July 31st, 1901, would not be maintainable. On the facts at present before us I think the defendant would find it hard to resist such a suit. If he has taken this property, or any of it, under the terms of his grandfather's Will, he would seem to have taken it subject to a trust in favour of various persons, including the present plaintiff and the liability could be enforced upon a suit properly framed.

The present suit has, in my opinion, been rightly dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge, and I would dismiss this appeal with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

WALSH, J.—I entirely agree. I very much doubt whether the plaintiff could have maintained this suit in its present form in any case, but the main contention that there was any genuine religious dedication at all has completely broken down. No doubt there are private trusts in the Will the breach of which might form the ground for a claim for relief, but this is not the plaintiff's case. Taking the view we do the retrospective operation of the Act of 1913 does not arise for decision, but after hearing the point fully argued I agree with my brother's opinion about it.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 1—Appeal, presentation of—Decree of lower Appellate Court, copy of, not containing grounds of appeal to that Court, whether proper copy—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 10—Pre-emption suit—Possession taken by vendee prior to sale—Limitation, commencement of.

Along with his memorandum of appeal to the Chief Court appellant filed a copy of the lower Appellate Court's decree which did not contain the grounds of appeal to that Court:

Held, that the copy filed by the appellant was a proper copy of the decree within the meaning of Order XLI, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code and that the appeal to the Chief Court had been properly presented. [p. 102, col. 2.]

Under Article 10 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act the time from which the period of limitation begins to run against the pre-emptor is the date on which the purchaser takes, under the sale sought to be impeached, physical possession of the whole of the property sold. [p. 103, col. 1.]

Where, however, under an arrangement with the vendor the vendee takes possession of the property which he intends to purchase before the actual sale of the property to him, the possession cannot be held to be under the sale, and must in law, for the purpose of applying Article 10 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act, be referred to the subsequent date on which the sale actually takes place, and it is from this subsequent date of the actual sale that the period of limitation prescribed by the said article begins to run against the pre-emptor. [p. 103 col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 16th December 1916.

Mr. Govind Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bhagat Ram Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection has been urged by Counsel for the respondents to the effect that the appeal is barred by time. The contention is that the copy of the decree of the District Judge, which was filed along with the memorandum of appeal in this Court, did not contain the grounds of appeal filed by the plaintiff in the District Judge's Court and, therefore, could not be treated as a copy of a valid decree. On the 5th May 1917 the appellant was directed by the Chief Court office to file a copy of the grounds of appeal and the requisite copy was not filed until the 2nd June 1917. It is contended that a proper copy of the decree of the District Judge should be considered as being filed on the last mentioned date and not before, and that such being the case the appeal is barred by time. I am clearly of opinion that the copy of the decree, which was filed by the appellant along with his memorandum of appeal, was a proper copy of a perfectly valid decree of the District Judge, although it did not contain the grounds of appeal, and that the appellant had duly complied with Order XLI, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code. The preliminary objection is, therefore, overruled.

The sole question for decision in this appeal is whether the suit for pre-emption, which was brought by the plaintiff-appellant against the defendants-respondents for possession of 8 kanals 17 marlas of the land in dispute, was barred by limitation or not under Article 10 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, which admittedly governs the case. After hearing Counsel on both sides and referring to the registered sale deed, dated the 21st December 1914, and to the oral evidence on the record, I am of opinion that the above question must be answered in the negative.

It is not disputed that the land in suit was sold by the vendor to the vendees by a registered sale-deed, dated the 21st December 1914; and it is also conceded that if the period of one year prescribed by Article 10 of the Limitation Act aforesaid began to run from the date of the sale-deed the plaintiff's suit would be within time, as it was instituted on the 20th December 1915. But what is contended on behalf of the vendees is that they had taken actual physical possession of the land in dispute through one of them, Pandit Dina Nath Bali, on the 26th October 1914, i. e., about two months before the sale-deed was formally executed and registered; and that, therefore, the period of limitation must be considered to have begun to run against the pre-emptor from the 26th October 1914, and not from the date of the sale, and his suit which was not brought until the 20th December 1915 was barred by limitation. Both the Courts below have accepted this argument as sound and have thrown out the plaintiff's claim as barred under Article 10 of the Indian Limitation Act.

The plaintiff has preferred a second appeal to this Court; and after hearing arguments, I am of opinion that the view taken by the Courts below is clearly erroneous. Under Article 10 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act the time from which the period of limitation begins to run against the pre-emptor is the date on which the purchaser takes, under the sale sought to be impeached, physical possession of the whole of the property sold.

The crucial point for decision in the present case, therefore, is this: When did the vendees take, under the sale sought to be impeached, physical possession of the whole of the property sold? Was such possession taken on the 26th October 1914, i. e., about two months before the sale, evidenced by the registered deed, dated the 21st December 1914, actually took place; or should it be considered in law to have been taken after the said sale, the delivery of possession on the 26th October being treated as a convenient arrangement entered into between the parties in anticipation of the intended sale? The matter admits hardly of any doubt, for it is clear beyond question, both from the terms of the registered sale-deed, dated the 21st December 1914, and from the statement made by the vendor in the lower Court, that the proprietary rights in the land in dispute did not pass from the vendor to the vendees until the said sale deed was duly executed and registered, and, therefore, the vendees could not take, under the sale sought to be impeached, physical possession of the property sold before the date of the said sale deed. The finding of the lower Courts that one of the vendees, Pandit Dina Nath Bali, took actual physical possession of the land on the 26th October 1914 must be accepted as final in this second appeal; but accepting it as final, it does not follow that the view of the law of limitation taken by the lower Courts is correct. The taking of possession by one of the vendees on the 26th October 1914 was certainly not taking of possession under the sale which the pre-emptor seeks to set aside, for admittedly the sale had not taken place on that date. The sale took place on the 21st December 1914, and the prior possession of one of the vendees on the 26th October 1914 must in law be referred for the purposes of applying the provisions of Article 10 of the Indian Limitation Act to the subsequent date on which the sale actually took place; and clearly it is from this subsequent date of the actual sale that the period of limitation prescribed by the said Article 10 begins to run against the pre-emptor. The construction placed by the District Judge on Article 10 is not only inconsistent with the plain grammatical meaning of the words of the Article, but would, if adopted, lead to anomalous consequences.

For the reasons given, I hold that the plaintiff's suit for pre-emption is within time; and I accordingly accept this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the District Judge and remand the case for decision on the merits. The stamp on the memorandum of appeal will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the cause.

Malabar Law—Maintenance, claim for, against tarwad, nature of—Malabar Marriage Act (IV of 1896), ss. 17, 18, scope of—Registration of marriage, effect of—Claim against tarwad, whether forfeited.

The right of a member of a Malabar tarwad for maintenance or an allowance is an incident of co-proprietorship in the property of the tarwad and that right cannot be denied unless circumstances show that the tarwad is not in a position to give a separate allowance. [p. 104, col. 2; p. 105, col. 1.]

Sections 17 and 18 of the Malabar Marriage Act were not intended to deprive a member of a tarwad of his or her rights in the tarwad. The registration of the marriage of a female member of a tarwad, therefore, under the Act does not cause a forfeiture of her rights and cast the duty of maintaining her and her children on her husband. [p. 105, col. 1.]

Section 18 of the Act only provides for personal guardianship and leaves the guardianship of property untouched. [p. 105, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Palaghat at Calicut, in Appeal Suit No. 849 of 1914, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Palaghat, in Original Suit No. 344 of 1913.

Mr. J. L. Rosario, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit is by a female member of a Tarwad and her children for maintenance against the Tarwad: the defence is that as the 1st plaintiff's marriage has been registered under Act IV of 1896, she and her children should entirely look to the husband of the 1st plaintiff for maintenance, and not to the Tarwad. The question is said to be one of first impression; the learned Vakils on both sides have addressed to us very full arguments on the question. In our opinion the view of the lower Appellate Court is wrong.

At the outset it might be mentioned that the expression "maintenance" is loosely applied to this class of cases. The allowance claimed by an Anandraman of a Malabar Tarwad or by a junior member of a joint Hindu family is not as a dependent upon the owner of the property, but as one who in his own right is entitled to participate in the income. The Common Law in both cases having vested the management in the senior member, the claim for separate allowance is an indicia of proprietorship and not founded upon moral or quasi legal obligations or on inability to maintain himself or herself. The authorities to which Mr. Rosario drew our attention have established this position with practical unanimity. In Putanvital Teyan Nair v. Putanvital Ragavan Nair (1) it was held that the possession of separate property should not be taken into account in considering whether a member of the Tarwad was entitled to separate allowance. This decision proceeded on the theory that each member has a right to a share in this income. Ekanat Thayu Kunji Ama v. Ekanat Shurgunni Valia Kymal (2) has to some extent qualified the above decision by pointing out that where the Tarwad has not sufficient income to maintain all the members decently, the fact that one of them has other means of livelihood would be a factor that can be taken into account. Here again the right to claim the allowance even where there are other means seems to have been accepted. In Achutan Nair v. Kunjunni Nair (3) it was distinctly stated that the right to an allowance should be based on the right of co-ownership of property. Maravadi v. Pamakkar (4) accepts this principle as well founded. In Naku Amma v. Ragava Menon (5) it was held that a member of a Tavazhi was entitled to sue the Tavazhi for an allowance even though he was being maintained by the main Tarwad. This is another illustration of the principle of co-ownership. This latter decision was affirmed by the Full Bench in Chakkara Kannan v. Kunhi Pokker (6). Thus it is clear that the right of a member of a Tarwad for an allowance is an incident of co-proprietorship in the property of the Tarwad and that consequently that right could not be denied unless circumstances show that the Tarwad is not in a position to give a separate allowance.

In this appeal the questions whether the plaintiffs were justified in living away from the Tarwad house, whether there are circumstances which would justify the allotment of an allowance when they do not choose to live with the other members and whether the claim for arrears is sustainable have not been gone into. Those questions will have to be dealt with by the lower Appellate Court.

Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar mainly relied upon sections 17 and 18 of Act IV of 1896. The learned Vakil argued that the term "maintenance" suggested that it is a subsistence allowance and that if that subsistence is given by another who is bound by law to provide it, the Tarwad is absolved from liability. This argument ignores the weight of the consideration we have set out, namely, that the claim by a Tarwad member is of the character of proprietary right to a share in the income. It is true, as pointed out by the learned Vakil, that clause (2) of section 17 only leaves unaffected the customary right, if any, against the Tarwad but the right secured by clause (1) is a personal right, a right, given by the Statute against persons who comply with certain formalities. Such a right cannot take away the right of property.

Section 18 was relied on as showing that the father or the husband is alone entitled to maintain the children of the wife. That section introduces an exception to the general rule that the natural guardian of an Anandravan is the Karnavan.

The Legislature has recognised that the welfare of the minor wife or the minor children would be safer in the hands of those who are more nearly connected by blood than the Karnavan. It has at the same time imposed a limitation upon the husband or the father by enacting it as a condition precedent to guardianship that they should manifest their interest in the welfare of the minor by making some sacrifice. This section only provides for personal guardianship and leaves property guardianship untouched.

We do not think these provisions were intended to deprive a member of a Tarwad of his or her rights in the Tarwad.

For these reasons we must reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the appeal for disposal on the merits.

Costs will abide the result.

A defendant in a suit, who takes objection to the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit has been instituted cannot maintain an application for its transfer to another Court under section 22 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 106, col. 2.]

A plaintiff's right to choose his own forum cannot be taken away from him except for very cogent reasons. [p. 106, col. 2.]

The fact that a defendant's witnesses would be very much inconvenienced if the suit continues in the Court chosen by the plaintiff as his forum is not a sufficient ground for taking action under section 22 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 106, col. 2.]

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under sections 22 and 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The applicant Askaran Baid is the defendant in a suit which has been instituted by the opposite party Bhola Nath and Murli Dhar in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow. After the institution of the latter suit the applicant filed a suit in the High Court at Calcutta, and now he desires to have the suit which is pending in the Lucknow Court transferred to Calcutta under the provisions of section 22 of the Code. The grounds upon which the application is made are that in view of the relation between the parties and in view of the scope of the suit which has been brought by the applicant in Calcutta it is not desirable that the trial of the Lucknow suit should continue, inasmuch as the matters involved in the Calcutta suit comprise the single matter which is in dispute in the suit pending at Lucknow.

The plaintiffs in the Lucknow suit are two persons Bhola Nath and Murli Dhar, who describe themselves as being the proprietors of a firm carrying on business under the name of Balgobind-Bhola Nath and the transaction to which the suit relates, is a single transaction regarding a quantity of cloth which it is said the plaintiff firm entrusted to the present applicant for sale on commission in Calcutta. The suit in Calcutta has been filed by the applicant Askaran Baid against these same persons Murli Dhar and Bhola Nath, who are described as carrying on business under two names, namely, Badri Das-Prag Das and Balgobind-Bhola Nath. It has been stated before me by the learned Counsel who opposes this application that these two firms are distinct and carry on different businesses; although it is the fact that Murli Dhar, one of the persons named, is a partner in both the firms. For the applicant it is stated that Murli Dhar has been carrying on business with Askaran Baid for a number of years and that there is an account between the parties for the settlement of which the suit in Calcutta has been filed, and as already mentioned, the applicant's case is that the account between the parties relates to dealings extending over a number of years including the particular transaction which is the subject-matter of the dispute in the Lucknow suit.

It is clear from the pleadings of the parties in both the suits that they are at issue regarding a number of facts. One point to be noticed is that the applicant Askaran Baid has put in his written statement in reply to the plaint filed in the Court at Lucknow. One of the pleas which he has raised is that the Lucknow Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. It has been urged before me by the learned Counsel for the opposite party that in view of this plea the applicant is not competent to maintain the present application for a transfer of the Lucknow suit to Calcutta; and as an authority for this argument I am referred to a judgment of a Judge of the Allahabad High Court reported as Punna Chandra Mukerji v. Dhona Kristo Biswas (1). The correctness of that judgment has been contested before me by the learned Advocate for the applicant, but I am not prepared to accept his argument. It appears to me that on a proper construction of section 22 an order for transfer can only be made in respect of a suit which may be instituted in any one of two or more Courts. If the defendant's case is that the suit is not one of this description because it has been brought in a Court which has no jurisdiction at all, it seems to me that he ought not to be allowed to maintain any application under section 22. Apart from the law on the question, I am not satisfied that any sufficient ground has been made out which would justify the transfer of this case, even if a transfer were possible. The main argument before me is that most of the witnesses who can depose regarding the matters in issue between the parties are people who live and carry on their business in Calcutta and the inconvenience of bringing these people before the Court at Lucknow is appealed to. As pointed out, however, by the other side, the personal attendance of witnesses from Calcutta cannot be enforced in the Lucknow Court and such evidence as may be required from Calcutta can be taken on commission. In any case an application of this kind cannot be dealt with from the point of view of the convenience of the defendant's witnesses. The plaintiff admittedly has the choice of forum and his right to choose cannot be taken away from him except upon very cogent grounds. The law on the subject has been laid down in a ruling of the Bombay Court to be found in Geffert v. Ruckchand Mohla (2). In that case arguments in favour of a transfer were put forward similar to those which have been advanced before me and were repelled on the ground that no good cause was shown for depriving the plaintiff of Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Manbhum, dated the 8th April 1914.

Mr. Atul Krishna Roy, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gour Chandra Pal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum, in which he gave certain directions to the Commissioner as to the manner in which he should proceed in carrying out a decree of the High Court at Calcutta in a partition suit. The plaintiffs were the descendants of one of four brothers who were originally co-sharers of a rent-free estate known as Mauza Kasmar, Pargana Barabhum. The defendants were the descendants of the other three brothers and those claiming through them. In 1910 the plaintiffs instituted a suit for partition before the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum. Of the other three branches of the family only one, viz., defendants Nos. 9 to 26, offered any serious opposition to the suit. They contended that a partition had taken place between the predecessors of the four different groups some 60 years earlier, when the whole of the hasil and certain other plots had been partitioned and that the parties were now in separate and exclusive possession; and further that they (defendants Nos. 9 to 26) had for many years spent money and labour in reclaiming parts of the waste land and in making new cultivable lands and had acquired a title thereto by possession and the plaintiffs' title thereto was barred by limitation. The learned Subordinate Judge decided the suit in favour of the plaintiffs. He found that no earlier partition had taken place and that exclusive possession of the joint lands did not bar the rights of the co-sharers, and ordered a partition accordingly of the whole Mauza except the Kasmar Bandh and Balladhibash lands and gave certain instructions to be followed by the Commissioner in carrying out the partition. The effect of these instructions, broadly speaking, was that the parties found in possession of bandhs and tanks and lands brought under cultivation by their own labour and at their own expense should be retained in possession of the same, but that they could not retain possession of ghora and danga lands if the total area in their possession was in excess of the amount they were entitled to as their share in the partition. He further directed that the partition should be based on the map and Khatians of the Survey and Settlement Department except where proved to be incorrect.

On appeal by defendants Nos. 9 to 26 to the Calcutta High Court, that Court varied the lower Court's decision by finding that a partition had taken place between the four branches in equal shares some 60 years earlier of the cultivable lands, but that it was impossible on the evidence to determine the precise lands in respect of which the partition took place. The Court also found that parts of the waste lands formerly left joint had been reclaimed and brought under cultivation by the different branches of the family, which accounted for the fact that defendants Nos. 9 to 26 had apparently brought under their control and cultivation more than the share which could be allotted to them upon a partition of the entire village. The High Court agreed with the Subordinate Judge that possession in such circumstances did not give them a good title to ghora and danga lands as against the plaintiffs. The judgment then proceeded as follows:—"One direction, however, must be given in modification of the decree of the Subordinate Judge. He has rightly held that each of the parties should be retained in possession of the lands upon which they have spent capital and labour. In so far, however, as the appellants are concerned, it must be ascertained in the first instance whether they are really in occupation of more lands than they would be entitled to occupy on a partition. We, therefore, direct the Subordinate Judge to appoint a Commissioner to make a survey of all the ghora lands of the village and to ascertain the area thereof. The appellants would be entitled to one-fourth share of the total area. If the area thus determined falls short of the area now in their possession they must surrender the excess." Then followed directions that any excess to be surrendered should be the land last occupied, as to which evidence was to be taken and that rather than divide a compact block, the Subordinate Judge should adjust the matter by the payment of owelty money. This direction applied only to ghora and danga lands and no party was to be deprived of cultivated lands already in their possession.

When the High Court's decree came to the Commissioner for execution, a dispute arose as to how it should be carried out and he applied to the Subordinate Judge for instructions. An order was then made by the Subordinate Judge purporting to solve the doubt which had arisen as to whether the ghora and danga lands ordered to be surveyed by the High Court's decree meant those lands only which were not now in occupation or those lands as they originally existed before the partition, and he came to the conclusion that the latter interpretation was correct. But as there might be a difficulty in distinguishing those lands now, he thought the simplest method would be to ascertain first the total area of the village and then the total area in possession of defendants Nos. 9 to 26, and gave directions to this effect. From this order the defendants Nos. 9 to 26 appealed to this Court. A preliminary objection was taken by the plaintiffs that no appeal would lie from such an order and strictly speaking, this objection is probably well founded, but speaking for myself, it seems to me that if it should be brought to the notice of the High Court that its decree is being executed in a manner manifestly at variance with the purport and intention of that decree—and for this purpose the decree must be regarded as a decree of this Court which has succeeded to the jurisdiction of the High Court at Calcutta in this province—then I think that the High Court under its inherent powers of supervision, which are expressly saved by section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure, may in a case of this sort take such action for the ends of justice as may be necessary to enforce the proper execution of the decree. We, therefore, decided to examine the order of the Subordinate Judge and the decree of the High Court in order to satisfy ourselves on the point. After reading the High Court's judgment and decree it is quite manifest that whatever the exact meaning of the direction to survey the ghora lands, the whole judgment is based upon the assumption that the appellants do not occupy cultivated lands in excess of one-fourth of the area of the whole village and that the remaining lands in possession of the appellants are ghora and danga lands. Upon this assumption the Court directed the Commissioner to ascertain first whether the whole of the lands occupied by the appellants including ghora and danga lands exceeded a fourth share of the whole village. Then there is a direction to survey all the ghora lands which I take to include danga lands as well, and this would involve lands of this description in the appellants' control and possession. A point was raised in the memorandum of appeal that this survey was intended only to comprise ghora and danga lands as now existing, exclusive of lands originally of this description but now brought under cultivation. The judgment is not very clear on this point. It was conceded, however, by the appellants that it was intended that the whole of the ghora and danga lands, as existing at the time of the previous partition, should be surveyed. It may not, however, be necessary to have a complete survey of these lands if the partition can be effected without this. One matter, however, is beyond dispute. Whatever be the exact intention of the High Court's decree as to the extent of the survey ordered, that decree was based upon the assumption that the appellants were not in possession of more cultivated lands than their 4-annas share which they would be entitled to on a partition, and it must be taken that any excess in their possession beyond their fourth share is to be regarded as ghora and danga lands which are liable to surrender—those last brought into possession being surrendered first. Once the lands in the appellants' occupation are ascertained, it ought not to be necessary to survey more than the amount which they hold in excess of their proper share, if any. This, however, must be a matter for the Commissioner to determine on the spot. Subject to this modification, I think the Subordinate Judge rightly interpreted the decree in the order appealed from. How the lands in possession of the appellants are to be ascertained is not stated by the High Court and the learned Subordinate Judge directs that in order to determine this the Commissioner should first ascertain the total area of the village and the total area in possession of the appellants. This direction, however, must not be taken necessarily to involve a new survey by the Commissioner of the whole village. He should proceed as far as possible on the maps and Khatians of the Survey and Settlement Department in accordance with clause 4 of the instructions in the Subordinate Judge's judgment, of the 22nd August 1910 and otherwise comply with the same in so far as it is confirmed by the High Court's decree. Each party should bear his own costs.

CHAPMAN, J.—I agree.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, rr. 2, 53. (6)—Attachment of decree—Adjustment after attachment, effect of, on rights of attaching creditor—Notice, absence of, to judgment-debtor, effect of—Application by decree-holder to record adjustment—Attaching creditor brought on record—Order on application, whether appealable—“Either through Court or otherwise” in O. XXI, r. 53, meaning of.

Where a decree, which is under attachment at the instance of the decree-holder's creditor, is adjusted after the attachment, the adjustment does not bind the attaching creditor, whether notice of the attachment has been issued to the judgment-debtor or not under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 53 (6), Civil Procedure Code. [p. 110, col. 2.]

In such a case, if an application is made by the decree-holder to record the adjustment, it would be open to the attaching creditor to come in and object to the entering of satisfaction and any order passed by the Court would be appealable as one covered by section 47, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 110, col. 2.]

If the attachment was after the adjustment, the attaching creditor has no locus standi and it would not be open to him to raise any question within the meaning of section 47. [p. 110, col. 2.]

Quære.—Whether the Court could suo motu make the attaching creditor party to the satisfaction or adjustment proceedings. [p. 110, col. 1.]

Per Abdur Rahim, J.—The words “either through Court or otherwise” in Order XXI, rule 53, Civil Procedure Code, refer to “payment or adjustment” and not to “notice” preceding it. [p. 113, col. 1.]

The attachment of a decree is complete without notice to the judgment-debtor and the holder of the decree has no right to deal with it after attachment. [p. 113, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 754 of 1914, preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Valangiman, in Execution Application No. 29 of 1914, in Original Suit No. 343 of 1906.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Valangiman, dated the 29th September 1914, in Execution Application No. 29 of 1914, in Original Suit No. 343 of 1906.

KUPPUSAMI IYER v. KUPPUSAMI IYER.

Appeal against Appellate Order No. 70 of 1916 coming on for hearing on the 24th September 1917, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The question we have got to determine is whether an appeal lay to the District Judge from the order of the District Munsif. The District Judge has held that there was no appeal as the order in question was not under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It appears that there was a decree against a certain person, and the decree-holder made an application to the Court for recording satisfaction of the decree which he held against the judgment-debtor. That decree was attached at the instance of two attaching creditors of the decree-holder and the question that arose was whether the attaching creditors had acquired a right to the decree and, therefore, the recording of satisfaction was of no effect against them. It appears that when the application was made for satisfaction of the decree by the decree-holder, the District Munsif of his own accord, finding that the decree had been attached, issued a notice to the attaching creditors and had them brought on the record. Then the question which we have stated was raised. It may be doubted whether the District Munsif was right in making the attaching creditors parties to this application on his own motion. However that may be, the attaching creditors have been made parties and there can be no doubt that the question whether the decree was properly satisfied is one that affects their interest. Rule 2 of Order XXI, sub-rule 1, clause 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure does not provide for any notice being given to the judgment-debtor of an application made by the decree-holder for recording satisfaction and in fact the judgment-debtor in this case was not made a party. No notice was issued to him and he was not on the record either in the Munsif's Court or before the District Judge or even before us. But all the same, the question that was raised was as to the satisfaction of the decree, and that is a question which arises between him as a party to the suit and the attaching creditors who claim an interest in the decree. Order XXI, rule 53, sub-rule (3), of the Code of Civil Procedure says that "the holder of a decree sought to be executed by the attachment of another decree of the nature specified in sub-rule (1) shall be deemed to be the representative of the holder of the attached decree and to be entitled to execute such attached decree in any manner lawful for the holder thereof", and sub-rule (6) lays down that "on the application of a holder of a decree sought to be executed by the attachment of another decree, the Court making an order of attachment under this rule shall give notice of such order to the judgment-debtor bound by the decree attached; and no payment, or adjustment of the attached decree made by the judgment-debtor in contravention of such order after receipt of notice thereof, either through Court or otherwise, shall be recognised by any Court so long as the attachment remains in force." If the attachment of the decree was before adjustment, then there can be no doubt that the attaching creditor would be justified in coming in and objecting to the entering of satisfaction, thereby raising a question covered by section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the other hand, if the attachment was after the adjustment, then he would have no locus standi and it would not be open to him to raise any question within the meaning of section 47. None of the lower Courts have recorded any clear finding on this matter. We, therefore, call for a finding on the evidence on record from the District Munsif whether the attachment was before or after the adjustment and also whether the judgment-debtor had notice of the attachment, if it was before judgment. Two months will be allowed for findings and ten days for objections.

In pursuance of the order of Court, dated 18th January 1918, the parties were allowed to let in fresh evidence.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Munsif of Velangiman submitted the following

FINDING.

1. I am asked to record findings on the following two issues:—

- (i) Whether the attachment of the decree in Original Suit No. 343 of 1906 on the file of this Court by the decree-holder in Original Suit No. 5 of 1912

KOPPUSAMI IYER v. KOPPUSAMI IYER.

on the file of the Kumbakonam Sub-Court was before or after the adjustment set up by the holder of the decree attached; and

- (ii) whether the judgment-debtor under that decree had notice of the attachment if it was "before judgment"?

I think their Lordships of the High Court mean "before adjustment."

In the order of remand sent by the High Court, the 2nd issue is stated as follows:—Whether the judgment-debtor in Original Suit No. 5 of 1912 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam had notice of the attachment if it was "before judgment?" The judgment-debtor in Original Suit No. 5 of 1912, Kumbakonam Sub-Court, is the holder of the attached decree and the question whether he had or had not notice before judgment in Original Suit No. 5 of 1912 is immaterial. The real question is, whether the judgment-debtor in Original Suit No. 343 of 1906, who is the person liable to pay the amount due thereunder to the attaching creditor, had notice of the attachment before he effected the adjustment with his judgment-creditor?

2. Turning to the first question, the alleged adjustment is evidenced by Exhibit A, which is dated the 10th day of October 1913. There were two attachments effected by the decree-holder in Original Suit No. 5 of 1912, Kumbakonam Sub-Court, one before judgment in that suit and the other after judgment. The first of these attachments was of $\frac{2}{3}$ of the decree in Original Suit No. 343 of 1906 and that was applied for on the 28th February 1912. The order to attach seems to have been passed on the same day and the process made returnable on the 12th March 1912. Then after several adjournments the same attachment was made absolute on the 16th April 1912 (see Exhibit I).

3. The decree in Original Suit No. 5 of 1912, Kumbakonam Sub-Court, was passed on the 31st March 1913. It was afterwards transferred to the Sub Court, Negapatam, on a change of jurisdiction. Then at the instance of the decree holder therein the whole decree in Original Suit No. 343 of 1906 was attached by that Court. This application was made on the 2nd December 1913, the order was passed some days afterwards, and it was received by this Court on the 17th December 1913 (see Exhibit Ib).

4. The decree-holder in Original Suit No. 343 of 1906 then applied to this Court to record satisfaction of it relying on the above-mentioned receipt, Exhibit A. The petition was presented on the 23rd December 1913. This Court held that the alleged adjustment was false and dismissed the petition. In the appeal against the order the District Judge, Tanjore, held that no appeal lay. The same decree-holder thereupon filed C. M. S. A. No. 70 of 1916 in the High Court, and it is in connection with this second appeal that the two issues above referred to have been sent down.

5. The evidence on record does not show that a formal notice of either of the above-mentioned attachments was given to the judgment-debtor in Original Suit No. 343 of 1906, but I think there is sufficient evidence to show that the adjustment under Exhibit A was made after the second attachment by the Negapatam Sub Court. A sum of Rs. 1,600 is said to have been paid in cash on the date of Exhibit A by the judgment-debtor to the decree holder in Original Suit No. 343 of 1906, a portion of the balance being set off against a certain partnership amount said to be due to the same judgment-debtor and the other portion, viz., Rs. 200, being relinquished in his favour. It is admitted that the above sum of Rs. 1,600 was obtained by the decree-holder by a sale of his lands to one Muhamadali, and that the sale-deed in his favour was executed 2 or 3 months after Exhibit A (vide petitioner's 1st witness Anantarama Iyer). If, therefore, the said sum of Rs. 1,600 was paid on the date of Exhibit A, it is clear that Muhamadali must have paid the consideration for the sale prior to the execution of the sale-deed—an event which, in my opinion, is extremely improbable. The two or three months mentioned by the above witness take us to December 1913 or January 1914. The sale-deed in question has not been produced and Muhamadali has not been examined. It is, therefore, probable that no money was paid to the decree-holder on the 10th October 1913, the date which is seen on Exhibit A, and the receipt itself must have been executed in January 1914, i. e., sometime after the attachment by the Negapatam Sub-Court was effected. This view is supported by the evidence of the 2nd and 3rd witnesses on the side of the respondents, to the effect that the judgment-debtor Anantharama Iyer offered to sell the same properties to the son-in-law of the 2nd witness and that the negotiations for the sale were carried on at Mannargudi in the month of Karthigai 1913, i. e., December 1913. The 3rd witness further states that Anantharama Iyer wanted the sale to be effected soon, as a certain decree had to be certified as satisfied before the Courts closed for the Christmas vacation that year. The negotiations fell through ultimately, but there is, in my opinion, no reason to discredit these witnesses. In these circumstances, I find that Exhibit A was executed after the second attachment by the Negapatam Sub-Court and after also the present petition was put in to record satisfaction.

6. The next question is whether Anantharama Iyer had notice of the two attachments mentioned above. I have already stated that no formal notice appears to have been given through Court, but the circumstances show that he was aware of them and that he entered into the transaction in question collusively and with a view to defeat the decree-holder in Original Suit No. 5 of 1912. The 1st witness on the side of the respondents, who is the eldest son of the said decree-holder, swears that he met Anantharama Iyer at the Mayavaram Railway Station in February or March 1913 and that the latter told him in the course of a conversation that the attachment before judgment effected by the witness' father was a good thing for himself. The witness' father, who obtained the decree in Original Suit No. 5 of 1912, and who effected the attachment before judgment, died on the 3rd November 1913 (see Exhibit II) and Anantharama Iyer went to the witness' house in December 1913 for purposes of condolence.

Then there was a talk about discharging the decree in Original Suit No. 5 of 1912, and Anantharama Iyer is stated to have asked for permission to sell the hypotheca in Original Suit No. 343 of 1906 and for a remission of part of the amount due under the decree in Original Suit No. 5 of 1912. The witness did not consent to the remission or to the sale of the hypotheca in the way proposed, as it was in his opinion worth much more than the price mentioned by Anantharama Iyer. The witness is a M. A. and B. L. of the Madras University and a practising lawyer in Kumbakonam. Anantharama Iyer is alive, but has not come forward to deny the fact of these two conversations. The second attachment by the Negapatam Sub-Court was effected at about the time of this condolence meeting, and I have already shown that the proposal to sell Anantharama Iyer's lands to the respondents' second witness' son-in-law also took place at about the same time, and that the same lands were sold to Muhamadali about a month afterwards. In these circumstances, I find that Anantharama Iyer had notice of both the attachments at the time when the adjustment in question was effected and that Exhibit A was antedated purposely.

Appeal against Appellate Order No. 70 of 1916 came on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the Court of first instance upon the issues referred by this Court for trial and Civil Revision Petition No. 863 of 1916 on the 15th August 1918.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasa Gopalachariar, for the Appellants.—The judgment-debtor had no notice of the attachment of the decree and until he gets the notice, he is at liberty to make an adjustment. The Court is bound to record it under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2, without reference to the rights of the attaching creditor. The language of Order XXI, rule 53 (6), makes that position plain.

Mr. Viswanatha Aiyar, for the Respondents.—In this case it is found as a fact that the decree-holder had notice of the attachment when the adjustment was said to have been made. He had no right to deal with the decree after attachment and the attaching creditor is not bound by any adjustment made after the attachment. Notice to judgment-debtor is not necessary to complete the attachment. The Court should issue the notice only if called on by the decree-holder to do so.

KUPPUSAMI IYER v. KUPPUSAMI IYER.

JUDGMENT.

• APPEAL AGAINST APPELLATE ORDER NO.
70 OF 1916.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The case arises out of an application by a holder of a decree to enter satisfaction under the rules of the Civil Procedure Code. That decree was attached by certain judgment-creditors of the decree-holder and these attaching creditors have been made parties to the application by the District Munsif and they are on record. The adjustment or payment was made after the decree had been attached, but it appears that no notice of such attachment was issued to the judgment-debtor. The decree-holder must have and, in fact, did have notice of the attachment.

The position taken up on behalf of the decree-holder is that until notice has been issued to the judgment-debtor upon an application made by the attaching creditor, the judgment debtor is entitled to make any payment or adjustment he likes and when once such payment or adjustment is made, the Court is bound under Order XXI, rule 2, to record satisfaction, whether the application therefor is made by the judgment-debtor or by the decree-holder and whatever the rights of attaching creditor may be.

Reliance is placed in support of the argument on clause 6 of rule 53, Order XXI. That clause says "no payment or adjustment of the attached decree made by the judgment-debtor in contravention of such order after receipt of notice thereof, either through the Court or otherwise, shall be recognized by any Court so long as the attachment remains in force." The clause is not very happily worded and I am inclined to think on the whole that the words "either through the Court or otherwise" refer to "payment or adjustment" and not to "notice". It is contended thereupon that the adjustment in this case must be held to be valid and effective. I do not think, however, that this necessarily follows. It is not a case merely between a judgment-debtor and his decree-holder but the attaching creditors of the decree-holder have also been made parties. The question before us is not merely whether the Court shall or shall not record satisfaction under Order XXI, rule 2. We have got to decide upon the rights of the parties. Here the appellant's decree was undoubtedly attached and he had notice of it. He purports to deal with that decree in spite of the attachment. Supposing instead of a decree, this case was of an ordinary property, moveable or immoveable. The owner of it, after attachment, would have no rights to deal with it and any such dealing would be invalid or ineffective as against the attaching creditor. That is the general law and I do not find anything in rule 53, Order XXI, which has necessarily the effect of overriding it. The notice to the judgment-debtor is not necessary for the purpose of completing the attachment. The attachment is complete before any such notice is issued. The Court has to issue the notice if an application to that effect is made by the decree holder, but without notice, the attachment is undoubtedly complete. Then it is difficult to conceive that the decree holder whose decree has been attached could by dealing with it affect the rights of his own creditor in the attached decree. This appeal must fail and is dismissed with costs.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree. I have some doubt regarding the proper construction of Order XXI, rule 53 (6), and I prefer to express no opinion in this case on the question whether, as between judgment-debtor and decree-holder, notice from the Court is essential to support an objection to the recording of satisfaction. I, however, adopt unreservedly the broad ground of decision on which my learned brother's conclusion rests.

1916.

The civil revision petition is also dismissed. There will be no separate costs.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1818 of 1914.

February 28, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Scott-Smith and

Musammât CHUHAR BAI—DEFENDANT

—APPELLANT

RAMA NAND—PLAINTIFF AND LOCHA

RAM—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17
—Amendment of pleadings—Party, whether can resile from statement of Pleader—Discretion of Court—Adverse possession—Possession of widow against will of sons, whether adverse.

Where in a case, after the evidence had been recorded and the case had become ripe for judgment, the Court found that the plaintiff's Pleader had, in the beginning of the trial and as a result of misinformation, made a wrong statement, and allowed the plaintiff to resile from it:

Held, that the Court was justified in exercising the wide discretion conferred upon it under Order VI, rule 17, of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 116, cols. 1 & 2.]

The possession of a small residential house by a widow, against the will of her sons in exercise of her right of residence, cannot be said to be adverse to the sons. [p. 116, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Multan, at Muzaffargarh, dated the 24th April 1914, affirming that of the District Judge, Muzaffargarh, dated the 18th of August 1913, decreeing the claim.

FACTS are clearly given in the following extracts from the judgment of the Additional Divisional Judge:—

"The facts appear sufficiently from the judgment of the learned District Judge and need not be recapitulated here. The following pedigree will be of assistance in understanding the case.

"The plaintiff, Rama Nand, who now sues for possession by partition of half a house, the whole said to have belonged originally to Matwala Ram, and described in the plaint, bought this half, the share of Locha Ram, defendant No. 1, on 18th October 1910. The present suit was instituted on 15th December 1911. Defendant No. 1 admitted plaintiff's claim. The main contention by defendant No. 2 was that defendant No. 1's father Lekhu had separated from his father, and had no share in the house, defendant No. 2 being the sole owner. The onus was clearly on defendant No. 2 to show that the house was not joint family property, Lekhu Ram being separated from Matwala Ram. The lower Court has found that the house is the joint property of the family, that it was only because the wives of both brothers, Lekhu Ram and Motan Ram, quarrelled with their mother-in-law, Musammât Chandrawal Bai, that they separated from the latter, but that the house continued to be the family property, Musammât Chandrawal Bai residing in it, having the right to do so during her life-time.

"Matwala Ram died over 30 years ago in Jeth Sambat 1938 (D-11) leaving a widow Musammât Chandrawal Bai, and two sons, Lekhu Ram and Motan Ram. Lekhu Ram died on the 22nd August 1901 (D-1). Musammât Chandrawal Bai died on 11th June 1906 (D-15); and it was about 2½ years after her death that Locha, son of the late Lekhu Ram, sold his alleged share to plaintiff together with land.

"The issues were fixed by Malik Mahram Khan, Munsif, in whose Court the case first was, on 19th January 1912. On that date the plaintiff's Pleader's statement was recorded and he stated clearly that Matwala Ram separated his sons during his lifetime, and divided the house property among them, keeping the house joint. Accordingly the first issue fixed was 'whether Matwala Ram had separated his sons during his life, and kept the property in suit for his own use?' And the 4th issue was 'whether Matwala Ram separated the father of defendant No. 1 from him, and defendant No. 2 continued joint with Matwala Ram?'

"By 2nd April 1912 the plaintiff having produced evidence closed his case. Defendant No. 2's evidence was then called, and when three witnesses had been examined the value of the house was found on plaintiff's application to be over Rs. 1,200, and so the case was transferred to the Court of the District Judge, by order dated 14th October 1912. The evidence already recorded was accepted by the parties, and plaintiff's Pleader asked to be allowed to produce some more witnesses; permission was given (though he had already closed his case), and on 17th December 1912 two more of plaintiff's witnesses were heard and then he closed his case. Some of defendant's remaining witnesses were heard on that day and for the remainder the case was adjourned to 4th January 1913, when these witnesses were heard and defendant closed his case, and the case was fixed for 21st January 1913 for arguments. In the meanwhile defendant No. 2, Motan Ram, having died, his widow Musammāt Chuhar Bai was brought on to the suit as the deceased's representative.

"From 30th January 1913 the case was adjourned to 3rd February 1913 at the request of the Pleaders, who asked for time to argue the case. It was then adjourned to 10th February 1913, as the parties said there was likely to be a compromise. Further time was given to 14th February 1913. On this date the plaintiff put in an application, saying his Pleader, Lala Nau Nihal Kishan, had made an incorrect statement on 19th January 1912, and plaintiff had corrected it in his application of 16th May 1912. This application of 16th May 1912 was made more than a month after the plaintiff had closed his evidence on the 2nd April 1912 and was to the effect that the two sons of Matwala Ram had really been joint with the latter up to his death; that after the father's death Lekhu only began to live and feed separately and soon after Musammāt Chandrawāl Bai separated Motan Das too; that there had been no partition or separation of the joint family by the father; the plaintiff's Pleader did not know the real facts and made the statement without plaintiff's knowledge. The Munsif merely passed the order shamil misl on the application of 16th May 1912. On the second application of 14th February 1913 the District Judge, after innumerable adjournments, passed an order on 29th May 1913 authorising plaintiff to correct his Pleader's statement and on payment of Rs. 165 costs to defendant agreed to take further evidence after altering issues 1 and 4 into 'whether Lekhu Ram was separate from his father and the house in suit is not the joint property of the family?'

"For defendant No. 2 it is urged the lower Court was not right in permitting the plaintiff to change from what his Pleader had stated, the plaintiff having been present when the statement was made and his evidence having been closed in the first instance.

"For plaintiff it is urged he is not a member of the family and was unaware of the facts, and that on the authority of Mrs. Martha Pool v. Secretary of State (1) the plaintiff was entitled to amend his Pleader's statement.

"After reading the authorities relied on and considering all the circumstances of the present case, I am of opinion the District Judge exercised a mere discretion in accepting the plaintiff's prayer. It is obvious the plaintiff's Pleader made a mistake from misinformation. Plaintiff's witnesses started off from the very beginning saying Matwala Ram and his sons were joint. This clearly shows a mistake was made by the Pleader, and for this mistake plaintiff has been made to pay heavily. In the plaint nothing was said about any separation.

"The evidence leaves no doubt not only that there was no regular separation or breaking up of the joint family but also that the living apart was due to the daughters-in-law not being able to pull on with the mother-in-law. Defendant No. 2 has failed to prove that defendant's father was separated by Matwala Ram and that Motan Ram alone remained joint with Matwala Ram. Admittedly Lekhu Ram and Motan Mal were the sons of two wives of Matwala Ram, and Lekhu Ram's mother died first, so it is very likely Lekhu Ram took up a separate residence from his step-mother, but there is nothing to prove really that his father turned him out and separated him completely from the joint family. No document is forthcoming re any such separation. No separation having been proved, the suit is obviously not barred by limitation. Musammāt Chandrawāl Bai, the widow, had right of residence as a Hindu widow. Obviously her possession was not adverse. Sham Koer v. Duh Koer (2) relied on by defendant No. 2 is clearly distinguishable. So also Ram Narain v. Maharaj Narain (3). In the present case the widow's possession was by mutual arrangement. It is clear from the size of the house too that it was impossible for the whole family, including the wives of Lekhu Ram and Motan Ram, to live in it, so the one who for many reasons lived separately was Lekhu Ram."

JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court, concurring with the Court of first instance, has held that the plaintiff's predecessor-in-interest had, at the time of the sale to the plaintiff, a subsisting title in one-half of the house in dispute, and has accordingly decreed the suit. This decree is attacked by Mr. Nanak Chand on the following grounds:—

(i) that the Court of first instance was not justified in allowing the plaintiff in May 1913 to resile from the statement made by his Pleader on the 19th January 1912, when the evidence adduced by both the parties had been recorded and the case was ripe for judgment, and

(ii) that the appellant's mother, Musammam Chandrawal Bai, was in adverse possession of the house, and that the title of the plaintiff's predecessor-in-interest had been extinguished before the sale in favour of the plaintiff.

On the first point the learned Additional Divisional Judge holds that the statement made by the plaintiff's Pleader in 1912 was the result of misinformation, and that the Court of first instance was, in view of that fact and the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses, which went to show that the Pleader had made a mistake in giving his statement, justified in exercising its discretion under Order VI, rule 17, Civil Procedure Code. It is to be observed that the District Judge allowed the plaintiff's application on his paying Rs. 165 as costs to the defendant, and that the latter accepted the costs without demur. Having thus taken advantage of the order he is, in our opinion, precluded from impugning its correctness, vide

Banku Chandra Bose v. Marium Begum (4). At any rate, Order VI, rule 17, confers wide discretion upon the Court to allow the alteration or amendment of pleadings, and we see no adequate ground which would justify our interference on second appeal.

As regards the alleged adverse possession of Musammam Chandrawal Bai, we find that no plea to that effect was raised at any time during the protracted proceedings taken in the Court of first instance. Further, the Courts below have held that the widow's possession was the result of private arrangement—she being entitled to the right of residence in the house. The judgments in Sham Koer v. Dah Koer (2) and Ram Narain v. Maharaj Narain (3) are clearly distinguishable, because the property involved in those cases was not only a residential house but several villages, and it is quite clear that the possession of the village could not possibly be attributed to the widow's right of residence or maintenance. In these circumstances, her possession was rightly held to be adverse to the heirs, who were entitled to immediate possession. These considerations are wholly inapplicable to a small residential house, which the widow, as stated above, was undoubtedly entitled to occupy for her residence.

For the aforesaid reasons we decline to interfere and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

LAXMAN RAO v. BHAU SAHEB.

It is only under the Bombay School of Hindu Law that a daughter succeeding to her mother's stridhan can take an absolute estate and it is peculiar to the Bombay Presidency and Berar that females who belong to the family of the propositus by birth as distinguished from marriage, take absolute interests. [p. 118, col. 2.]

There is no ground for holding that only where the Mayukha is paramount is the daughter so favoured. [p. 119, col. 1.]

In the Districts of Satara and Ratnagiri in the Bombay Presidency the Mayukha, though not paramount, is at least of ancillary authority. [p. 119, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, in Civil Appeal No. 198 of 1913, decided on 4th July 1914.

Messrs. J. Mitter and M. B. Kinkhede, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This litigation relates to a field in Mouza Bina of which the plaintiff-appellant is the Malguzar. In or about the year 1894 the field was let to Bhagirathi Bai, the plaintiff's step-sister, and subsequently occupancy right was conferred on her. It is common ground that in Bhagirathi Bai's hands the field was stridhan proper. She died in 1909 and was succeeded by her daughter Lala Bai, who died issueless in December 1910. The latter's husband Bhan Sahib, the sole respondent in this Court, took possession on his wife's death, and was, therefore, sued for possession and mesne profits. Two persons who held under Bhan Sahib were joined as defendants, but we are not concerned with them, as in the course of the pleadings Bhan Sahib took on himself responsibility for any mesne profits to which the Court might find the plaintiff entitled, and the plaintiff accepted this offer.

The plaintiff's case is that on Lala Bai's death the rightful tenant was the next heir of Bhagirathi Bai, that no heir of Bhagirathi Bai was in existence in December 1910 and that consequently he as landlord was entitled to eject Lala Bai's husband. In paragraph 3 of his written statement Bhan Sahib pleaded that the field was stridhan in his wife's hands, and that he was, therefore, her heir.

In a written reply the plaintiff contended that the holding "could not be stridhan in the hands of Lala Bai so as to confer on her absolute title" and that the defendant, therefore, could not be the heir. In supplementary oral pleadings it was admitted by both sides that they (plaintiff and defendant) are governed "by the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law" and that Bhagirathi Bai's marriage was celebrated in an approved form. It is, moreover, common ground that the letting to Bhagirathi Bai took place after her marriage.

The following are the issues, in addition to the general issue, with which we are concerned:—

(b) "Did the holding remain as stridhan in Lala Bai's hands after the death of Bhagirathi Bai?"

(c) "Can the defendant Bhan Sahib inherit the same after Lala Bai's death?"

Following the Privy Council decisions in Sheo Shankar Lal v. Debi Sahai (1) and Sheo Partab Bahadur Singh v. Allahabad Bank (2), the trial Judge held that the field was not stridhan in Lala Bai's hands. He also decided that neither under the Hindu Law nor under the Central Provinces Tenancy Act could the defendant Bhan Sahib be Bhagirathi Bai's heir. The plaintiff then obtained a decree for possession and for Rs. 100 as mesne profits in respect of the agricultural year 1911-12.

Bhan Sahib appealed to the District Judge, reiterating his contention that the field was stridhan in his wife's hands. The District Judge realised that this could succeed only if Lala Bai was governed by the Bombay School of Mitakshara Law, and considering that the pleadings of the parties were vague on this point, took statements from the legal practitioners engaged and framed the following additional issues:—

(1) By what school of law was Auna Sahib, husband of Bhagirathi Bai, governed before he came and settled in these Provinces?

(2) Did Auna Sahib adopt the Benares School of Law after he settled here?

(3) By what school was Bhagirathi Bai governed at her death and did her daughter inheriting from her take an absolute estate?

LAXMAN RAO v. BHAU SAHEB.

The further statements on which these issues were based showed that Anna Sahib belonged to Satara, married Bhagirathi Bai in 1880 and thereupon settled in Nagpur where he died in 1906, and that Bhau Sahib belongs to and resides in the Ratnagiri District. For the plaintiff it was contended that Anna Sahib adopted the lex loci of the Central Provinces on settling here and that Bhagirathi Bai was necessarily governed by the same law as her husband. The Bombay School of Law was said to be divided into two sub-schools, (1). where the Mitakshara is paramount; (2) where the Mayukha is paramount, and both Satara and Ratnagiri were alleged to be under (1). A mother's stridhan was said to cease to possess the character of stridhan on descent to daughter even in sub-school (2).

The trial Judge found on the issues remanded for trial that Anna Sahib was governed by the Bombay School of Law when he first came to the Central Provinces, but subsequently adopted the Benares School and that Bhagirathi Bai was governed by the latter school, both because she was born and bred in it and because she married Anna Sahib. As to Lalu Bai's position no finding was given. Bhau Sahib objected to these findings, and the lower Appellate Court then held that Anna Sahib was governed by the Bombay School at Satara and has not been proved to have changed his law of origin for that of his new domicile in the Central Provinces. The question of Bhau Sahib's position was not separately considered. On the strength of the decision in Dawlatrao v. Govindrao (3) Lalu Bai was held to have inherited an absolute estate from her mother, apparently because her parents were governed by the Bombay School of Law. Finally, the plaintiff was pronounced to have no case even if Bhagirathi Bai were regarded as governed by Benares Law, because her husband's father Baba Sahib (P. W. No. 3) is still alive and can succeed her both under the Hindu Law and the Central Provinces Tenancy Act. In this connection Thamman Singh v. Manjoo Manak (4) was relied on. The trial Judge's decree was accordingly set aside and the plaintiff's claim dismissed.

The plaintiff has preferred this appeal, and the first point taken for him is that the defendant should not have been given an opportunity of proving that Anna Sahib was originally governed by the Bombay School of Law. This, however, was not seriously pressed, nor am I prepared to hold that the remand was unjustifiable. I have already set out the written pleadings of the parties on the point whether the field in dispute was or was not stridhan in Lalu Bai's hands. It is only in Bombay that a daughter succeeding to her mother's stridhan can hold it as such, i.e., as absolute estate: see for Bengal Julessur Koer v. Uggur Roy (5) and Huri Doyal Singh Sarmana v. Grish Chunder Mukerjee (6) for the United Provinces and Oudh Sheo Shankar Lal v. Debi Sahai (1) and Sheo Partab Bahadur Singh v. Allahabad Bank (2) and for Madras Janakisetty Sooryudu v. Miriyala Hanumayya (7) and Muttu Vaduganatha Tevar v. Dora Singha Tevar (8). In spite of the Privy Council decisions in the Allahabad cases just cited, the Bombay High Court still holds on the strength of the cursus peculiar to the Bombay Presidency that female heirs who belong to the family of the propositus by birth, as distinguished from marriage, take absolute interests. See Bhau v. Raghunath (9), Gulappa v. Tayawa (10) and Pandharinath v. Govind (11). In the second Allahabad case (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council said at pages 492 and 493 of the report:—

"The question may be different in those parts of Bombay which are governed by the Mayukha. An exact examination of the terms of that treatise seems to have led to some diversities of view in the Bombay High Court which need not now be considered."

which gives to a daughter inheriting from either parent an absolute estate: that was a case from Nasik and there seems to be no ground for holding that only where the Mayukha is paramount is the daughter so favoured—see Dawlatrao v. Govindrao (3) and Trevelyan's Hindu Law, page 451. The legal position then being clear that except in Berar and the Bombay Presidency a daughter could not take an absolute estate in stridhan inherited from her mother, I think the lower Appellate Court was justified in holding that the trial Judge should have examined the parties as to the school of law by which Auna Sahib and Lalu Bai were governed and in itself making good the omission.

The second point raised is a new one, namely, that the law of the Bhonsla family should be followed in determining the succession to Lalu Bai, inasmuch as both lessor and original lessee (Bhagirathi Bai) belonged to it. For this no authority is cited which can be regarded as at all in point. The nature of the estate which Lalu Bai took must surely be settled by her own personal law and that is the Bombay Law, whether the succession to her mother opened before or after her marriage, Auna Sahib came from Satara and the plaintiff has failed to establish that after migration he abandoned his personal law of origin. Bhan Sahib the defendant-respondent still belongs to Ratnagiri. In both districts the Mayukha, though not paramount, is of at least ancillary authority; see Jankibai v. Sundra (12), Bhagirathibai v. Kahnuijirav (13), Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage, page 29 (8th Edition) and Banerjee's Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhan, page 396 (4th Edition).

I was referred to my own decision in Narayan Vithal v. Govind Narayan (14), as showing that the Bhonsla family who came to the Central Provinces in the 18th century cannot be regarded as influenced by decisions of the Bombay High Court delivered in 1859 and later. In my opinion, as already stated, we are not concerned with the personal law of the Bhonsla family.

Nor is the position of Auna Sahib, who did not settle in the Central Provinces till 1880, fairly comparable with that of the parties to the local case just cited, whose ancestors came to the Central Provinces in 1800 or even earlier.

Holding as I do that Lalu Bai must be regarded as having an absolute estate in the field to which this litigation relates, I need not decide the questions raised in the 7th and 8th grounds of appeal, which would arise only if her estate were a limited one. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs. In the Courts below costs will be paid as already ordered.

Appeal dismissed.

The question whether or not a document in the nature of a compromise requires registration depends upon whether or not it purports to create a fresh title in favour of any of the parties to it. Where there is in reality no creation of a fresh title but merely an acknowledgment from each of the parties of a title pre-existing in the others, the compromise does not require to be registered [p. 122, col. 2.]

HARPAL SINGH v. SUKHRANI.

Mr. Mumtaz Husain and Babu Puttu Lal, for the Appellant.

Babus Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava and Rudra Datta Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has sprung out of a suit brought by the plaintiff Harpal Singh, the object of which was to set aside a certain compromise or arrangement which had been arrived at in the beginning of the year 1907. The suit was filed on the 15th of September 1916.

In order to explain the matters in issue it is necessary to refer in the first instance to the pedigree attached to the plaint. There were two brothers who, according to the finding of the Court below, were members of a joint Hindu family. This finding is, not now in dispute, although in the Court below the plea was taken on behalf of the defendants that Lal Singh and Sheoraj Singh were separate.

Sheoraj Singh died first without having any issue. He left a widow Musammat Phul Kuar, who was impleaded in the suit as defendant No. 2. It is proved beyond all reasonable doubt that before his death Sheoraj Singh executed a Will by which he left his interest in the property to his brother Lal Singh, with the exception of 10 bighas of sir land which he appointed by way of maintenance for his wife Musammat Phul Kuar.

On the finding that Sheoraj Singh and his brother Lal Singh were joint it necessarily follows that this Will could not have any operation in law, but in view of the questions in issue between the parties it is of some importance to notice the fact that Sheoraj Singh did make a Will. Lal Singh died about a year after his brother leaving two sons Harpal Singh and Sheopal Singh, and a widow Musammat Sukhrani. This lady is the step-mother of the two sons whose names have just been mentioned. At the time her husband died she had two daughters Musammat Beti and Musammat Bitti, the latter of whom has since died.

The documentary evidence on the record shows that a dispute arose between these various parties after the death of Lal Singh as to the manner in which mutation should be made. It is clear that Musammat Phul Kuar the widow of Sheoraj

Singh put forward a claim on her own behalf. She desired to have mutation made in her favour in respect of all the property which had belonged to her deceased husband. This claim of course was based on the assumption that Sheoraj Singh was separate from his brother. Then again there seems to have been a dispute between Musammat Sukhrani and her step-sons regarding mutation. The sons and Musammat Sukhrani both of them put forward allegations for the purpose of showing that Lal Singh before his death had made an oral disposition of his property. Musammat Sukhrani insisted that under this Will she was entitled to have mutation of a one-third share of the whole property. Sheopal Singh on the other hand put forward two versions of the oral Will made by his father. One of these versions agreed with the story told by Musammat Sukhrani, the other did not. In the end, however, Sheopal Singh seems to have made common cause with Musammat Sukhrani, and he and Musammat Sukhrani filed a petition in Court by which they agreed to have mutation made in the manner suggested, that is to say, a one third share entered in the name of Musammat Sukhrani and two-thirds in favour of the sons.

At the time these mutation proceedings were going on, the present plaintiff Harpal Singh was a minor and was represented in the proceedings by his elder brother Sheopal Singh, who is the defendant No. 3 in the case. After the statements of the parties had been recorded before the Tahsildar, the case finally came up for disposal before an Assistant Collector. He passed an order which was not exactly in accordance with the agreement just referred to, for it allotted to Musammat Phul Kuar a one-fourth share in one of the Mahals of a village called Dewara in which Sheoraj Singh and Lal Singh had a share. The rest of the property was divided as arranged in the compromise between Musammat Sukhrani on the one hand and Sheopal and his brother on the other. It may be mentioned that Musammat Sukhrani was to have no powers of alienation over the property and that it was agreed that after her death the property should devolve upon Sheopal Singh and his brother Harpal Singh. All this took place in the year

HARPAL SINGH v. SUKHRANI.

1907. The present suit has arisen by reason of a claim made by Musammât Sukhrani in the Rent Court. In the month of August 1916 Sukhrani filed a suit for profits against the plaintiff and defendant No. 3 in respect of the share which stands recorded in her name. This act has led the present plaintiff to bring a suit, which was framed originally as a suit for declaration asking the Court to declare that Musammât Sukhrani had no proprietary interest in the property. Put shortly, the case for the plaintiff appellant is that he is not bound by the compromise which was filed in the Revenue Court in the year 1907. He mentions the fact (which may be taken to be proved) that he was a minor at the time, and he says he is not bound by the act of his brother Sheopal Singh who purported at that time to be his guardian. The learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the claim, holding that on the evidence before him the proper view to take is that there was in the year 1907 a family settlement between all the parties interested in the property. This settlement according to the Subordinate Judge was a reasonable settlement of a genuine dispute between the parties to the present case, and consequently he has held that the plaintiff is not now entitled to avoid it. He has found that ever since the year 1907 all these parties have been living together amicably and that the arrangement which was come to in the mutation Court has been accepted all along up till the year 1916, when Musammât Sukhrani thought fit to bring a suit for profits.

The question, therefore, which I am called upon to decide is, whether the lower Court was justified in holding that the dealing between the parties after the death of Lal Singh amounted to a family arrangement, and if the finding is that there was such a settlement then the plaintiff, although he was a minor at the time, would in my opinion be bound. It is not denied, I may mention, that Sheopal Singh was the only adult member of the family left after the death of his father Lal Singh and the family being joint, the presumption must be that he was the managing member and was in a position to represent his brother Harpal Singh in the mutation proceedings.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has attacked the decision of the Court below on various grounds. He argues in the first place that there was no bona fide settlement of a family dispute, that there could not have been in fact any bona fide claim put forward by the widows and then when Sheopal Singh made statements in the mutation proceedings (a copy of which is Exhibit A 4), he was only admitting a claim which he and everybody else knew to be a false claim. After a perusal of the evidence I am not prepared to take this view of the facts at all. It is quite true that Sheopal Singh made conflicting statements which were recorded by the Tahsildar. As already mentioned, he stated in the first place that his father Lal Singh had made an oral Will by which one-third of the property was to go to Musammât Sukhrani, while the remaining two-thirds was to go to himself and his brother. Subsequently he altered this statement by saying that his father had directed that a one fourth share in one of the Mahals of Dewara Kalan should be given to Phul Kuar. Musammât Sukhrani on the other hand was pressing the case that her husband had made an oral Will in favour of herself and his two sons. It may be noted here that while these proceedings were going on and after the document of compromise had been filed, the present plaintiff Harpal Singh attempted to intervene. He put a petition into Court saying that he repudiated the compromise to which his brother had agreed. He claimed to be of full age and to be entitled to be heard on his own account. The Court before which the proceedings were pending asked him to produce some reliable evidence to show that he was of full age. He was unable to do so and the consequence was that his petition was rejected. Subsequently he expressed his assent to the arrangement into which his brother had entered. I have already mentioned the fact that Musammât Phul Kuar was also putting forward a claim in these mutation proceedings and it is noteworthy that when Harpal Singh put in his first application it was by way of supporting Musammât Phul Kuar's claim.

To say that there was no bona fide claim on the part of Phul Kuar or of Musammât Sukhrani because it is now proved that

HARPAL SINGH V. SUKHRANI.

Sheoraj Singh and Lal Singh were members of a joint family, seems to me an argument which cannot be accepted. While it has now been made to appear that as a matter of fact Sheoraj Singh and his brother were joint, there still remains the fact that Sheoraj Singh before his death executed a Will, a fact which was altogether inconsistent with his status as a member of a joint family, and it may very well be that Musammatt Phul Kuar, who is Sheoraj Singh's widow, may have thought that Sheoraj Singh was as a matter of fact separate from his brother by reason of his having made a disposition of his property by Will. As for the position of Musammatt Sukhrani she, as I have already stated, was relying upon an oral Will of her husband. The question as to whether or not Lal Singh made an oral Will was put in issue in this case. The Subordinate Judge has found that it was not proved that Lal Singh did make an oral Will. It seems, however, from the judgment that this part of the case was really not pressed and so far as I can see, the Subordinate Judge seems to have thought that it was quite possible that Lal Singh did make an oral disposition of his property. Be that as it may, the fact remains that Musammatt Sukhrani was the second wife of Lal Singh and that she had two daughters by her husband. She was certainly entitled to look to the estate for maintenance for herself and her two daughters and if she put forward a claim in the mutation Court, I am not prepared to hold that it was not a bona fide claim merely because her husband was a member of a joint family. In short the situation appears to me to be this, that Phul Kuar on the one hand and Musammatt Sukhrani and her two daughters on the other were persons who had claims on the estate left by Lal Singh. In these circumstances it appears to me perfectly natural that the parties should have come to an agreement by which the rights of these ladies were recognized. I must dismiss altogether the argument that these ladies were putting forward claims for which there was no foundation at all and, I think, the Subordinate Judge was quite justified in coming to the conclusion that there was before him a clear case of a family settlement in which each of the disputing parties had a case and in which there was a reasonable and proper decision of all the conflicting claims. As he points out, there is no allegation of any fraud or collusion in the matter and the evidence clearly establishes that ever since the mutation was made the parties have been all living together as members of a joint family. Another point which he makes is that there is no evidence to show that Phul Kuar is now in possession of the 10 bighas which her husband purported to leave her by Will, and so there is reasonable ground for thinking that the share of Mauza Dewara which was allotted to her in the year 1907 was given to her in lieu of the maintenance which her husband had desired her to have.

The next argument is that the compromise embodied in the document required registration. This argument cannot, I think, succeed. The question whether or not a document in the nature of a compromise requires registration depends upon whether or not it purports to create a fresh title in favour of any of the parties to it. Here I think the reasonable interpretation of the document is, that there was in reality no creation of a fresh title but merely an acknowledgment from each of the parties of a title pre existing in the others.

The last point which has been raised is that inasmuch as one of the parties to the case was a minor, the compromise required the sanction of the Revenue Court, and in this connection section 432 of the old Code of Civil Procedure is referred to. With regard to this all I need say is that it has not been made to appear to me that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure apply en bloc to proceedings in Courts constituted under the Land Revenue Act. There is in my opinion no force in this contention.

It has been pointed out that Musammatt Phul Kuar was no party to the compromise to which assent was given by Sheoraj and Musammatt Sukhrani. That is so. On the other hand there was evidence before the Subordinate Judge to show that the other parties accepted the arrangement by which Musammatt Phul Kuar was put in possession of a small share in Mauza Dewara. It is proved by documentary evidence on the record that subsequent to the year 1907 Musammatt Phul Kuar mortgaged this share to one Sheoratan Lal and that subsequently the mortgage was redeemed by Sheopal and his brother Harpal. I think the Subordinate Judge was entitled to rely upon this fact for the purpose of showing that although Musammatt Phul Kuar was not formally a party to the compromise proceedings, nevertheless the order for mutation which was made in her favour was accepted by the brothers and acted upon for a considerable period after the date on which it was made.

To sum up, my conclusion is that the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that there was before him a genuine case of family settlement in which bona fide claims had been put forward. The settlement is in every way a reasonable one and must be given effect to. Affirming the judgment of the Court below I direct that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 64, scope of—Award made rule of Court—Attachment, prior, of properties allocated by award to persons other than judgment-debtors, whether avoids award—Purchase subsequent to decree on award, effect of.

Section 64, Civil Procedure Code, avoids only private transfers and not awards which have become merged in a decree of Court. [p. 124, col. 1.]

A dispute between the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 having been referred to arbitration, the arbitrator passed an award directing the delivery of certain properties to the plaintiffs. The award was filed in Court and a decree was passed in terms thereof. The properties had been attached by defendants Nos. 4 and 5 as the properties of their judgment-debtors, defendants Nos. 1 to 3, before the passing of the award, but were purchased by them in Court-auction after the decree. In a suit by the plaintiffs for possession of the properties:

Held, that as the attachment created no title in the defendants Nos. 4 and 5, it could not invalidate the award, but must be taken to be subject to the rights created by it, and that as the sale took place after the decree which was passed in terms of the award, it was subject to that decree. [p. 124, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tinnevely, in Appeal Suit No. 88 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Tinnevely, in Original Suit No. 176 of 1915.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and several others were Pangalis in some villages but were enjoying their lands separately for several years. The defendants Nos. 4 and 5 obtained a decree against defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in Original Suit No. 23 of 1911 on the file of the Sub-Court, Tinnevely, and in execution of it brought the suit properties and several others to sale and purchased them themselves. The plaintiffs preferred claims against the attachment of plaint B and C schedule properties, on the ground that they were the separate properties of themselves and were in their separate enjoyment, but the claims were disallowed. They preferred no claim against the attachment of the D schedule property. They filed the present suit to get rid of the effect of the claim orders in respect of the plaint B and C schedule properties and of the attachment and sale of the D schedule property by establishing their title thereto.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were ex parte. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 pleaded that the suit properties were the separate properties of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and enjoyed by them as such till Court delivery to themselves as Court auction-purchasers.

It transpired in the evidence that plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and the other Pangalis referred their disputes to the arbitration of a Pleader, Mr. Joseph Nadar, who passed an award declaring plaintiffs' title to and possession of plaint B schedule items Nos. 1 to 4. Originally Suit No. 13 of CHIRANJI LAL V. BEHARI LAL.

1913 was filed in the Tuticorin Sub-Court to file the award and all the Pangalis were parties to it. The decree, Exhibit B. in the suit, was passed in the terms of the award.

The trial Court decreed for plaintiffs in respect of items Nos. 1 to 4 of B schedule and disallowed their claim in respect of the other properties.

On appeal, the Sub-Judge held that the C schedule properties were allotted to the plaintiffs by the award, though, by some mistake, it was omitted in the decree Exhibit B, and so he varied the decree by including the C schedule properties in the decree to the plaintiffs.

The 4th defendant and the legal representative of the deceased 5th defendant preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Messrs. E. S. Chidambaram Pillai and P. N. Marthandam Pillai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. Ramaswami Aiyar and Gopalswami Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Though the appellants' attachment was before the date of the award which allotted the properties to the plaintiffs, their purchase was long after. Unless they are entitled to rely on their attachment as invalidating the award they must fail, as an attachment creates no title and their purchase must be taken to be subject to the rights created by the award. Section 64, Civil Procedure Code, avoids only private transfers and not awards such as the one we have here; such an award cannot be treated as a private transfer as it really only recognised plaintiffs' prior title. Furthermore, before the appellants' purchase, application had been made to the Court for passing a decree in terms of the award and a decree was so passed. The purchase was, therefore, subject to that decree.

The decree of the lower Court is right and the second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110—Appeal to Privy Council—Cross-appeals to High Court—High Court affirming part of decree and reversing part—Leave, whether can be granted.

Plaintiff's suit was decreed in part by the trial Court. There were cross-appeals to the High Court and the latter dismissed the plaintiff's appeal and accepted that of the defendant. The plaintiff applied for and obtained leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the decree by which the defendant's appeal had been accepted. He then applied for leave to appeal against the decree by which his own appeal had been dismissed and the trial Court's decree had to that extent been confirmed.

Held, that no substantial question of law being involved in the case and the trial Court's decree having been confirmed, leave to appeal to the Privy Council could not be granted. [p. 125, col. 1.]

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council under section 109, Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. B. E. O'Connor (with him the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru), for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Dr. S. M. Sulaiman (with him Messrs. Baldev Ram Dave and Haribans Sahai), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for leave to appeal to his Majesty in Council. It appears that the Court below decided partly in favour of the plaintiff and partly against. Both parties appealed. In so far as the Court below decided in favour of the plaintiff, this Court set aside the decree of the Court of first instance and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. There has been an application to this Court for leave to appeal against this decree of the High Court and by our order this day delivered we have given the usual certificate. The present application is for leave to His Majesty in Council against the decree of this Court which affirmed the decision of the Court below and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. It has been argued that inasmuch as both the appeals arose out of the same suit and that this Court did not affirm in its entirety the decree of the Court of first instance, leave should be granted to appeal to His Majesty. It seems to us that inasmuch as the decree, which it is sought to appeal against, confirms the decision of the Court immediately below this Court, we have no power to grant a certificate unless we can certify that the appeal involves some substantial question of law. In the present case we are unable to certify that any substantial question of law is involved and it was not contended that any such question was involved. The proposed respondents appear and oppose the application, contending that they ought not to be put to the expense of a second appeal unless the plaintiff is entitled to appeal as a matter of right. For the reasons stated above, we are unable to certify that the case fulfils the conditions prescribed by section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and we reject the application with costs.

Every case in which the reversioners of a deceased Hindu are sought to be bound by a decree obtained against the widow of the deceased, must be decided on its own particular circumstances, and the person who claims that the decree amounts to a bar against the reversioners must establish that the decree was fairly obtained either after a contest, or, if by consent, in such circumstances that the decree ought to be regarded as having been fairly and properly obtained. Mr. D. R. Patwardhan, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

HAYWARD, J.—The only question pressed in argument before us in this second appeal is whether the plaintiff's claim for the land in suit is barred by an award decree between his predecessor-in-interest, a widow, and the defendant, claiming by a Will from the last male owner. It has been contended on behalf of the defendant that the claim is so barred, relying upon the principle laid down by the Privy Council in the case of Katama Natchier v. Rajah of Shivagunga (1), in which their Lordships ruled at page 604 that a decree fairly obtained against the widow would bind reversioners. That principle was followed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the subsequent cases of Bhagbutti Devi v. Bholanath Thakoor (2) and Jugul Kishore v. Jotendro Mohun Tagore (3) and was extended to a daughter holding a limited estate in the case of Hari Nath Chatterjee v. Mothurmohun Goswami (4).

The contention was not accepted by the First Class Subordinate Judge, relying upon the case of Jeram Laljee v. Veerbai (5) in which Batty, J., declined to apply principle either to a compromise or an award decree. This limitation of the principle was subsequently adopted by the Allahabad High Court in the cases of Gobind Krishna Narain v. Khunni Lal (6) and Mahadei v. Baldeo (7). In a later case [Gur Nanak Prashad v. Jai Narain Lal (8)] it was, however, held that a decree fairly obtained against the widow, even though the widow did not contest the suit, would bind the reversioners. This limitation of the principle suggested by Batty, J., was again rigidly laid down by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Rajlakshmi Dasee v. Katyayani Dasee (9). On the other hand the Judges of the Madras High Court appear to have contemplated the possibility of a compromise decree against the widow binding the reversioners, though they did not act on that contemplation in the case of Bhogaraju v. Adapalli (10). The only other decision examined before us which has any bearing on this point was that of Ghelhabai v. Bai Javer (11), in which a decree fairly obtained against a widow was held to be binding on reversioners although the widow had withdrawn her appeal. It seems to me that this limitation of the principle appearing in these decisions has been founded upon the necessity of determining in each case, whether the decree could properly be said to have been fairly obtained against the widow as representing the whole estate including the rights of the reversioners, and upon the necessity of proceeding with special caution where the decree was a compromise or award decree, on the same grounds upon which it has been held that legal necessity must definitely be proved in the case of purchases from Hindu widows and that transactions must definitely be shown to have been explained and fully understood in the case of pardah women, as observed by Jenkins, C. J., in Sumsuddin v. Abdul Hussein (12). It is not necessary for the purposes of this case to go beyond this and consider whether this limitation has not been too rigidly laid down by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Rajlakshmi Dasee v. Katyayani Dasee (9) contrary to the general principle enunciated by the Privy Council.

Now it is necessary to look at the award decree to determine whether it could properly be said to have been fairly obtained against the widow as representing the whole estate including the rights of the reversioners. It there appears that the plaintiff's predecessor-in-interest, the widow Tai, was seeking to assert her claim to full ownership of the land in suit against the defendant, who was setting up title by a Will alleged to have been obtained from her deceased husband Joti. The result of the arbitration was that the widow Tai's claim was dismissed, but ample provision was made for her maintenance during her life by actual residence with the defendant or, in case she found that inconvenient, by enjoyment of a separate dwelling-house and a cash maintenance allowance of Rs. 36 a year. It was in the latter case decided that after her death even that dwelling-house should become the absolute property of the defendant. That award was by consent of the parties and in their actual presence made a decree of the Court. It seems to me that the defendant, who produced and relied upon this award decree, had not merely to produce it but, in accordance with the principles already discussed, to prove further that it was fairly obtained against the widow, as representing not only her own interests but those of the reversioners as prescribed by the Privy Council. The defendant, however, failed to prove any such thing. On the contrary the award decree is open to the obvious criticism that the widow obtained practically all that she would be likely to need during her lifetime and would not appear to have paid particular attention to the interests of the reversioners. But there is, moreover, nothing in the award decree to indicate that the matter in dispute between the parties was actually contested before the arbitrator. There was in fact no such guarantee that due regard was had to the rights of the reversioners as there would have been, had the case been actively contested in regular proceedings in the Civil Court. It would not, in my opinion, be right in such circumstances to accept this award decree as a decree fairly obtained against the widow as representing the whole estate and so binding on the reversioners. It was, therefore, in my opinion, correctly disregarded by the First Class Subordinate Judge, as not falling within the general principle enunciated by the Privy Council.

It follows that the award decree bound the widow only and not the reversioners and that as the claim here is not under the widow but by right of purchase from the last reversioner, there can be no question of res judicata under the provisions of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code.

RAMA SANTU RANDIVE v. DAJI NARU RANDIVE.

The decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge ought, in my opinion, for these reasons to be confirmed and the appeal to be dismissed with costs.

HEATON, J.—I agree. But as the case is one of importance, I will state my conclusions in my own words. The case is of importance, because we have to determine whether the principle applied in Shivagunga's case (1) applies to the facts of this case. The principle is the prevention of a multiplicity of suits on the same cause of action. It applies at least in this particular: there is no doubt that in the litigation which took place between the widow of the last male holder and the present defendant, who was also the defendant in the earlier suit, the widow did represent the estate and not merely herself or her own interest. For she sought to recover the property as the estate of her deceased husband, that is to say, she was fighting or professing to fight the battle not only of herself but of her daughter and her daughter's son, who, next to the widow herself, were those most nearly interested. Therefore, it is that we have to see whether the principle applied in Shivagunga's case (1) applies in other particulars also.

The reason for applying the principle is stated in these words, which appear at pages 603 and 604 of 9 Moore's Indian Appeals: "It seems, however, to be necessary, in order to determine the mode in which this appeal ought to be disposed of, to consider the question whether the decree of 1847, if it had become final in Anga Mootoo Natchiar's lifetime, would have bound those claiming the Zamindari in succession to her. And their Lordships are of opinion that, unless it could be shown that there had not been a fair trial of the right in that suit—or, in other words, unless that decree could have been successfully impeached on some special ground, it would have been an effectual bar to any new suit in the Zillah Court by any person claiming in succession to Anga Mootoo Natchiar." Now it appears from what is stated at page 595* in the same report that the decree of 1847 was arrived at in a suit in which a large body of evidence had in fact been given by each side and it was, therefore, quite clear that, unless something to the contrary was made out, it was a really contested suit: a suit which had really been fought out. Those being the facts, their Lordships said, "in their opinion the decree must be binding not only on the widow but on the reversioners." Now here we have a case in which it is not shown that the suit between the widow and the present defendant was a really contested suit. I will mention six circumstances which clearly appear from the judgments and which as facts are not now contested by either side. The first circumstance is that the plaintiff in the suit was a Hindu widow. The second is that the defendant was next to the widow's own grandson the nearest reversioner, was a member of her husband's family and amongst the agnates of that family was actually the nearest of all to her deceased husband. The third is that the defendant based his claim to the property on a Will of which he never obtained Probate and which has never, so far as appears, been produced in a Court of Justice. The fourth circumstance is that an arbitrator was appointed by the parties and an award was made. The fifth is that there was an unopposed decree made by the Court according to the award; and the sixth and last circumstance I mention is that by this decree the widow had her residence and maintenance assured. Where you have circumstances such as these, it seems to me that you have at once the clearest indication of a probability that the decree was not a contested matter but was arrived at by either collusion or consent. When the interests of an agnate come into conflict with those of a Hindu widow, we know very well from experience that the interests of the widow are likely to find very slender protection.

These being the facts then it seems to me that although the Judge in appeal did not base his decision on them, his decision was perfectly correct.

In conclusion, I should merely like to add that I entirely agree with what my learned brother has said that in each case where the principle applied in Shivagunga's case (1) comes to be considered, we must deal with the circumstances of the particular case; and also that when a person produces a judgment and claims, on the principle applied in Shivagunga's case (1), that the judgment amounts to a bar against the rever-sioners, he has not done enough. It still remains for him to establish, where one of the parties was a Hindu widow, that the judgment has been fairly obtained either after a contest or, if by consent, in such circumstances that the consent decree ought to be regarded as a decree fairly and properly obtained.

I agree that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Madras District Municipalities Act (IV Mad. of 1884), ss. 21, 27—Municipal Council, powers of—Disbursement of funds—Acquisition of lanes—Interference by Court, limits of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Revision—High Court, powers of interference of—Error of law or fact.

The High Court will not interfere, in revision, with the finding or decision of a subordinate Court, under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that it erred in law or fact in its appreciation of the merits. To justify the High Court's interference, there must be a want of, or a failure to exercise, jurisdiction by the subordinate Court. [p. 128, col. 1.]

Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh, 11 C. 6; 11 I. A. 237; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 559; Rafique & Jackson's P. C. No. 83; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 760, followed.

Under section 21 of the Madras District Municipalities Act a Municipal Council is a Corporation with power to contract and to do all things necessary for the purpose of its constitution, the Municipal fund being held by it under section 27 for the purposes of the Act. If the Council keeps within its authorization and acts bona fide, the Court will not interfere with its operations. It will be deemed the best judge, not only of what is most conducive to its own interest, but also of what is proper and fitting as regards third parties, and it will be left unchecked to take or not to take lands for promoting sanitation, etc. The Corporation is, however, protected only if it acts bona fide. [p. 128, col. 2; p. 129, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court, South Malabar, dated the 23rd March 1918, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 13 of 1918, preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Palghat, dated the 9th January 1918, in Miscellaneous Petition No. 4098 of 1917, in Original Suit No. 536 of 1917.

Mr. K. R. Guruswami Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—In this petition, which comes before me for admission, I am asked to revise the order of the District Judge, South Malabar, dissolving an injunction granted by the District Munsif, Palghat, restraining the Palghat Municipal Council from making a certain payment from its funds pending decision of a suit for a permanent injunction in the same terms.

The first objection to this petition is that it discloses no ground for revision, fulfilling the requirements of section 115, Civil Procedure Code. The District Judge undoubtedly had the jurisdiction, which he exercised, to set aside the District Munsif's order, and no argument has been based on his commission of any material irregularity in that exercise. If, as is alleged, he erred in law or fact in his appreciation of the merits, that is not material [Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1)]. On this ground alone the petitioner must fail.

But further the learned District Judge does not appear to me to have erred in law. The payment above referred to is to be made for land acquired for a scavenging lane. It is not alleged before me that the Council's sanction for the expenditure is not formally regular or that the provision of such a lane is not within its power and duty. The injunction is claimed on the sole ground that the lane could be opened more cheaply and conveniently in another way, suggested by petitioner. The learned Judge has held that the District Munsif had not sufficient evidence before him to justify even a provisional conclusion to that effect and, though this is only suggested at the end of his paragraph 7, that interference with the Council's discretion exercised intra vires cannot be justified.

Only the second of these reasons calls for notice in revision. Under section 21 of Act IV of 1884 the Council is a Corporation with power to contract and to do all things necessary for the purpose of its constitution,

(1) 11 C. 6; 11 I. A. 237; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 559; Rafique & Jackson's P. C. No. 83; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 760 (P. C.)

the Municipal fund being held by it under section 27 for the purposes of the Act, of which, it is not denied, the promotion of sanitation by the provision of lanes is one. And the law applicable to it, like other Corporations, is that "if it is keeping within its authorisation and acting bona fide the Court will not interfere with its operations. It will be deemed the best judge, not only of what is most conducive to its own interest, but also of what is proper and fitting as regards third parties and it will be left unchecked to take or not to take lands, etc." Brice on Corporations, 3rd Edition, 475. This statement of the law is supported by the learned author by reference to English authority and the cases relied on before me, Dundee Harbour Trustees v. Nicol (2) and Vaman Tatyani v. Municipality of Sholapur (3) afford no reason for distrusting it, since they deal only with the right of particular persons to sue, not the validity of their causes of action. "No doubt a Corporation is protected in accordance with the foregoing, only if its act is done bona fide. But this is not the test applied by the District Munsif's judgment or proposed on behalf of the petitioner here, except in so far as both depend on the illegitimate assumption that any bona fide opinion as to the acquisition must coincide with their own; and this assumption is particularly marked in connection with the former's refusal to consider the propriety of this acquisition in connection with the further one, which the Council alleged that it contemplated. In the absence of any attempt by the District Munsif to consider the Council's project as a whole and to decide whether this part of it was sanctioned, rightly or wrongly, in good faith, the injunction cannot be supported and the learned District Judge was right in setting it aside.

The civil revision petition is dismissed.

Proceedings for delivery of possession are not proceedings in connection with the execution of a decree, and, therefore, no appeal lies against an order passed in such proceedings. [p. 129, col. 2.]

Where, through no fault of the judgment-debtor, the fact that an application for delivery of possession is barred by time is kept from the knowledge of the Court, and an order is passed directing delivery of possession, the Court has, on the fact being brought to its notice, jurisdiction to review its previous order and to bring it in accordance with law, and the High Court has no power to interfere in revision with the order passed on review. Appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad, dated the 6th February 1917.

Mr. Rajendra Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mirtunjay Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Roe, J.—The facts of this case are briefly that on the 8th January 1917 the learned Subordinate Judge of Shahabad made an order for delivery of possession of property purchased in execution of a decree. On the 26th January 1917 the judgment-debtor applied to have that order set aside on the ground that the application for delivery of possession was on the face of it barred by limitation.

The matter was taken up on the 6th February 1917, and the learned Subordinate Judge, finding that the order for delivery was barred by limitation, ordered it to be cancelled. His order runs: "Objection is allowed and the delivery of possession is cancelled."

An appeal has been laid to this Court. But that appeal is obviously incompetent, for it is now settled law for this province that proceedings for delivery of possession are not proceedings in connection with the execution of a decree. We are asked, however, under section 115 to set aside the learned Subordinate Judge's order on the ground that it is made without jurisdiction. It is to be noted that the whole of the proceedings, both as conceived by the judgment debtor and by the learned Subordinate Judge, were taken under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a section which had nothing whatever to do with the matter: but it is urged before us that the Court had jurisdiction under Order XLVII to review its own order.

For the applicant reliance is placed on Sasibhushan Mookerjee v. Radhanath Bose (1). It was never suggested in that case that the Munsif had no power to review his own order erroneously made delivering possession. All that was said was that he had no power to review an order of his predecessor. It is clear from the decision in Hadjee Abdollah Rent Hessein v. Hadjee Abdollah (2) that this is a type of case in which a Court should review its own order. Through no fault of the judgment-debtor the important fact was kept from the knowledge of the learned Subordinate Judge that this application was time-barred. On the fact being brought to his notice by the judgment-debtor, the learned Subordinate Judge was, in our opinion, right in correcting his order and making it in accordance with law. We, therefore, decline to interfere. The appeal is dismissed with costs in accordance with the scale laid down. We make no order as to costs upon the application for revision.

IMAM, J.—I agree.

SHIVBAI BABYA SWAMI—DEFENDANT

versus

YESU CHEOO NAYAKIN—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 144, 151—Decree, ex parte, set aside—Sale in execution of decree, whether can be set aside—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 181—Limitation for application to set aside sale, commencement of.

Plaintiff obtained an ex parte decree against the defendant and caused the latter's house to be sold in execution and purchased it himself. The defendant subsequently got the ex parte decree set aside but on a retrial of the case a decree was again passed against him. He then applied to have the previous sale of the house set aside:

Held, (1) that the ex parte decree having been set aside, the sale which was held in execution of that decree ought itself to be set aside as being no longer based on any solid foundation; [p. 131, col. 1.]

(2) that the application to set aside the sale could be treated as one under section 47, or section 144 or section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code; [p. 131, col. 1.]

(3) that the application was governed by Article 181 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act and that limitation began to run from the date on which the ex parte decree was set aside. [p. 131, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 44 of 1915, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Rajapur, in Miscellaneous Application No. 26 of 1914.

Mr. Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

HAYWARD, J.—The plaintiff Yesu got an ex parte decree for Rs. 86 against the defendant Shivbai in 1906. Shivbai's house was sold in execution of that decree in 1910, but she succeeded in subsequently getting the ex parte decree set aside and in having the case retried. The plaintiff Yesu succeeded in the retrial in obtaining a decree against the defendant Shivbai for a sum of Rs. 87 in 1914. But Shivbai then applied to have the previous sale of the house in execution set aside. That application was granted by the Court of first instance, but was rejected by the Court of first appeal, which appears to have treated the application as one under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. Shivbai has accordingly come to get that decision set aside in second appeal.

The substantial point argued has been whether in the circumstances stated the previous sale of the house in execution could be set aside, and reliance has been placed for the finding in the negative upon the case of Shivlal v. Shambhuprasad (1). But it has been replied to that argument that that case referred particularly to the equities arising in favour of a third party being a bona fide purchaser for value without notice at the Court-sale. It seems to me that there is force in this argument, particularly in view of the remarks of the Privy Council in the case of Zain-ul-abdin Khan v. Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan (2), in which their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out at page 172 that "there is a great distinction between the decree-holders who came in and purchased under their own decree, which was afterwards reversed on appeal, and the bona fide purchasers who came in and bought at the sale in execution of the decree, to which they were no parties, and at a time when that decree was a valid decree, and when the order for the sale was a valid order." That distinction has recently been again referred to in the case of Set Umimal v. Srinath Ruy (3). It seems to me, therefore, upon the equities and upon the authorities that the previous sale of the house in execution under the previous decree which had been set aside ought itself to be set aside, as being no longer based on any solid foundation.

(1) 7 Bom. L. R. 555; 29 B. 435.

There was also some argument as to the particular rule under which such an order could be made. It seems to me that the order must be held to be made, as decided without subsequent objection by the first appeal Court, under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and if any further authority for such an order should be required, then it seems to me that a reference could be made either to section 144 or section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. It has been urged that the former section does not cover a case in which an ex parte decree has been set aside. But it seems to me that the words used are sufficiently wide to cover even such a case, though the use of the word 'varied' or 'reversed' and the reference to 'the Court of first instance' would appear on first sight to have had primarily in view proceedings in appeal. But however that may be, the case would, in my opinion, undoubtedly be covered by section

(3) 27 C. 810; 4 C. W. N. 692; 14 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 580.

151 of the Civil Procedure Code. There can, in my opinion, be no real doubt in such a case as to there being a second appeal, because the proceedings were, as already stated, under section 47 to which it has merely become necessary by reference to apply the provisions of section 144 or 151 of the Civil Procedure Code.

It was also suggested that the application ought to be regarded as time-barred under Article 166 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act. But that Article appears to be hardly applicable to the facts of this particular case. The cause of action accrued upon setting aside the ex parte decree in 1914 and taking that as the date from which limitation ran, the application would clearly be within time under the provisions of Article 181 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act.

We ought, therefore, in my opinion, to set aside the order of the first appeal Court and to direct that the previous sale of the house in execution should be set aside, but subject in all the circumstances to this condition that Shivbai pays up the amount now due from her under the second decree within three months of the decision of this second appeal.

Each party to bear his own costs throughout.

HEATON, J.—I have very little to add to the judgment just delivered. I would, however, add this. We have here a case of a wrong which has been done to the applicant, because her property was sold under an ex parte decree wrongly obtained. She was ignorant of the decree and even of the sale which thereafter took place under it and, therefore, was unable within the period allowed by limitation to get the sale set aside by the ordinary application, which must be made within one month. And if she is to get it set aside at all, it can only be either by suit or by an application of another kind. It has been decided by the District Court, and against this decision there was no appeal, that this application should be treated as one under section 47. We are, therefore, only concerned with the question whether the Court has the power to set aside the sale. That question my learned brother has dealt with and I agree to the order proposed.

Order set aside.

Appeal to Privy Council—Remand by High Court for retrial—Leave, grant of, conditions determining—Final judgment, test of—Judgment on merits on one issue and remand on another—Certificate, grant of,
in respect of portion of judgment, propriety of.

Where a High Court, on appeal, remands a case for retrial by the lower Court, there is no final judgment against which the High Court can grant a certificate to appeal to the Privy Council under section 109, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 133, col. 1.]

Where every issue of fact has been found by the Appellate Court and the remand is directed solely with a view to give the consequent reliefs dependent on the conclusions of the Appellate Court, the judgment must be regarded as final within the meaning of that expression in section 109 (a), Civil Procedure Code [p. 133, col. 1.]

The mere fact that a judgment has not been given on a preliminary point will not render it necessarily a final adjudication. The question in each case will be whether the pronouncement by the Appellate Court has given a final decision upon all the rights litigated [p. 133, col. 1.]

ORDER.—We uphold the preliminary objection that leave should not be granted in this case. The suit was for partition.
There are two sets of properties. As regards the first of them, the defence was that the defendants were the holders of the service in respect of which the inam was granted, that they were enjoying the property by doing the service, and that consequently plaintiff was not entitled to claim his share in it. As regards the second set of properties, it was contended that the parties had become divided in respect of it long ago and that it was not open to the plaintiff to claim a repartition. Issues one and two relate respectively to the two sets of properties. The other issues were general in their nature, and raise questions of limitation and res judicata. The Subordinate Judge held that the first set of properties was not divisible, that the claim of the plaintiff was barred by limitation and res judicata and dismissed the suit. He gave no specific finding on the second issue. On appeal we differed from the Subordinate Judge on the question of the divisibility of the inam lands and overruled him on the questions of limitation and res judicata. In this view we remanded the suit for disposal on the merits. The two outstanding questions on which findings of fact had to be arrived at by the Subordinate Judge related to the re-partition of the second set of properties and to the accountability of the defendants for the income of the first set of properties.

This application has been made for leave to appeal against our judgment. It was opposed on the ground, among others, that as we directed a retrial on remand, there is no final judgment against which an appeal can be preferred to the Privy Council. We think this contention is right. Mr. Narayanamurthi places strong reliance on the observations of the Judicial Committee in *Saiyid Muzhar Hossein v.
Musammat Bodha Bibi* (1). It is true that, where every issue of fact has been found by the Appellate Court and the remand is directed solely with a view to give the consequential reliefs dependent upon the conclusions of the Appellate Court, the judgment must be regarded as final within the meaning of that expression in section 109, clause (a) of the Civil Procedure Code. At the same time we are unable to agree with the learned Yakil that, unless the judgment of the Appellate Court proceeds upon a preliminary point, it should be regarded as a final adjudication. For example, there may be reversal upon a question of adoption decided by the first Court and a consequent remand for the purpose of ascertaining the extent and nature of the properties to be decreed in favour of the plaintiff. It may be that, on remand, notwithstanding the finding in favour of the plaintiff on the question of adoption, he may fail to obtain any relief whatsoever in the suit. Under such circumstances it would be futile to grant leave to appeal to the Privy Council. The decision of this Court in Tirunarayana v. Gopalasami (2) supports the view we have taken. The question in each case will be whether the pronouncement by the Appellate Court has given a final decision upon all the rights litigated. Nayari Venkataranga v. Venkatarama Narasimha (3) quotes with approval the earlier Madras case and we see no reason to differ from these two decisions. The Allahabad High Court considered the matter very fully in a recent Full Bench decision in Nuri Mian v. Ganges Sugar Works, Ltd. (4) and our conclusions are in accordance with that decision.

Mr. Narayanamurthi argued that as the judgment is final within the meaning of the Judicial Committee in Saiyid Muzhar Hussein v. Musammam Bodha Bibi (1) in respect of the first set of properties, he is entitled to prefer an appeal in regard to it. The result of upholding this contention would be to split up a suit into a number of claims and to give the party against whom a judgment has been given upon one of them a right of appeal to the Judicial Committee. Such a course would be obviously wrong. We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the judgment appealed against, notwithstanding that it gave a decision on the merits in respect of one set of properties, is not a final judgment contemplated by section 109 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code and that the leave asked for should be refused. No costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XL, r. 1, O. XLIII, r. 1 (s)—Receiver, appointment of—Objection by person in possession, dismissal of—Appeal, whether lies.

The applicant advanced money to one T., and in consideration of that was appointed manager of T.'s estate and was put in possession of it. Subsequently certain creditors of T. obtained a decree against him and in execution of that decree a Receiver was appointed and put in possession of T.'s estate. Thereupon the applicant preferred an objection to the appointment of the Receiver and to the delivery of possession of the estate, which was dismissed:

Held, that the order dismissing the applicant's objection came within Order XL, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, and was appealable under Order XLIII, rule 1 (s) of the Code. [p. 134, col. 2.]

Ashutosh Deo, Ghatwal of Rohini, and in consideration of that he was appointed manager of his estate on the 4th May 1914, put into possession, and Thakur Ashutosh Deo received apparently a monthly allowance. A little later on the applicant was served with a notice of discharge. Thereupon he instituted a suit and obtained a declaration to the effect that he was entitled to remain in possession and to collect the rent to pay off the debt in accordance with the terms of the agreement, which was a written agreement entered into on the 4th May 1914. Subsequently he appears to have advanced some further money and got a usufructuary mortgage in respect of Basuri Mahal, which was the same or part of the same property. On the 17th July Musammam Sundari and Debi Prasad Marwari obtained a decree against Thakur Ashutosh Deo for a sum of Rs. 4,725, and in execution of that decree a Receiver was appointed and he was put in possession of the property in respect of which the present applicant was already exercising, or claimed that he was exercising, rights of possession. Thereupon a written objection was filed by the applicant to the appointment of the Receiver, and to the delivery of papers and demanding a return of the papers already delivered. This objection came on before the same Court, that is, the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Deoghur, and was decided on the 27th September 1917, and the objection by the present applicant was dismissed. Now the question arises whether we are entitled under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code to exercise our powers of revision upon that order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Deoghur dismissing the objection of the applicant. The parties appear to have been somewhat uncertain themselves, whether they were entitled to come before us by way of revision or whether there was in fact an appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, and, therefore, an appeal has also been lodged, but the appeal would, in the ordinary course, come before the District Judge. The question as to which is the proper procedure to adopt depends upon Order XL, rule 1. If the order dismissing the applicant's objection comes within Order XL, rule 1, then no doubt there is an appeal from such an order, and we have got to consider in this case whether it does come under that order or not. It seems to us that the order made by the Subordinate Judge of Deoghur was clearly within the terms of Order XL, rule 1. It did in effect remove the applicant from possession or custody of the property, and that being so, the exact wording in which the order was made does not seem to be very material if it did in effect carry out the powers provided by Order XL, rule 1. In a case which was recently before this Court which has not been reported but which has been brought to our attention, an objection was taken that no appeal lies in a similar sort of case. We are informed that although the objection was taken the point was not seriously argued and the question was not thoroughly gone into before the Court, but it appears that the Court in that case seems to have said quite shortly: "This objection must be given effect to as Deo Narain was not a party to the suit" (he was the applicant) "and therefore he has no right of appeal to this Court." Thereupon the Court assumed jurisdiction under section 115 to exercise its powers of revision and issued a Rule, but that decision was given, I understand, without any real argument upon the point and I do not think the authorities were considered. But the High Court of Calcutta in the case of Rowland Hudson v. John Pierpont Morgan (1) considered this question, and in a considered judgment they came to the conclusion that in a case on all fours with the present case a right of appeal did lie. It was said in that case, as it has been said here, that as the appellant was not a party to the order, that is the order appointing the Receiver, he had no right of appeal. That point was duly considered amongst others and the Court determined that in cases of this sort a right of appeal did lie. We entirely agree with that decision and that being so, we think that the application before us to-day to review the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be entertained. The case will go in the ordinary course before the District Judge on appeal, the subject-matter of the appeal will be determined by him and this application will be dismissed. There

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 2—Execution of decree—Payment out of Court not certified—Adjustment, whether can be recognised—Sale, whether fraudulent—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 52—Mortgage suit—Transfer, pendente lite, validity of.

Plaintiff obtained a mortgage decree on foot of an unregistered mortgage and purchased the mortgaged property in execution of the decree. He obtained formal possession but not actual possession, which was with the defendant who was a subsequent mortgagee of the property. During the pendency of the suit the mortgagor executed another mortgage in favour of the defendant. Subsequently the plaintiff brought a suit to redeem the earlier mortgage executed in favour of the defendant and the latter set up the plea that the Court sale under which the plaintiff claimed title was fraudulent, inasmuch as the decree had been satisfied before the sale was held:

Held, (1) that under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code the question as to the satisfaction of the decree was a question arising in execution, which should have been tried by the executing Court under that section or, at the discretion of that Court, by suit; [p. 136, col. 1.]

(2) that in either case the Court would be precluded from recognising an uncertified adjustment; [p. 136, col. 1.]

(3) that under section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, the mortgagor who was a party to the plaintiff's mortgage suit could not transfer the property by way of mortgage so as to affect the rights of the plaintiff to bring the property to sale free from such burden. [p. 137, col. 1.]

(4) that, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the earlier mortgage held by the defendant and was not affected by the mortgage executed during the pendency of his suit. [p. 136, col. 2; p. 137 col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

SCOTT, C. J.—The plaintiff sues for possession of Survey No. 87, plot No. 1, from the defendant No. 2 or in the alternative for possession after redemption of a mortgage or mortgages upon it now vested in the defendant No. 2.

The plaintiff's father advanced Rs. 30 upon mortgage of the land in question from one Mariam, one of two female co-owners of the property. The mortgage was unregistered.

A decree was obtained on this mortgage in Suit No. 153 of 1899. The property was put up for sale by the Court in execution and on the 9th of January 1901 was purchased with the Court's permission on account of the 2nd plaintiff, then a minor, who claimed as heir of the original mortgagee.

Formal possession under the purchase was obtained on the 19th of April 1901. Actual possession could not be obtained, for the land was in possession of the father of the defendant No. 1 under a subsequent but registered mortgage by Mariam or her co-owner Zuleika. Two further mortgages in favour of the 1st defendant were effected by Mariam pending the prosecution of the proceedings in Suit No. 183 of 1899. Zuleika had died prior to the Court-sale in 1901 and Mariam as her heir and in her own right was thus entitled to the whole outstanding equity of redemption. In 1903 Mariam purported to sell to the father of defendant No. 1 her interest in, inter alia, the land in suit and the defendant No. 2 claims as purchaser from the defendant No. 1.

The defendants in their written statement alleged that the decree and sale in the suit of 1899 were fraudulent.

In the trial Court the plea of fraud was negatived and the plaintiff was given a decree for redemption of the land in suit on payment of a sum of Rs. 420 as the proportion of the mortgage debt of Mariam to the defendant No. 1 applicable to the suit land, on the footing that the mortgages pendente lite were not effectual against the plaintiff.

On appeal the lower Appellate Court found that the Court sale under the decree of 1901 was fraudulently obtained, inasmuch as money of the judgment-debtor held for satisfaction of the decree was in the hands of those appearing for the 2nd plaintiff at the time of the sale and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. From that decree this appeal has been preferred.

It is contended that the question of fraud in the execution of the decree ought not to have been investigated upon a vague plea of fraud in the written statement in a redemption suit and that the plea of satisfaction of the mortgage decree prior to the Court-sale should not have been entertained since the adjustment had not been certified, in view of the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2.

It is contended on the other side that it is only the Court executing the decree, and not the Court trying the suit for redemption, that is precluded from recognising an uncertified adjustment. If, however, the provisions of section 47 are observed, it becomes apparent that a question relating to the satisfaction of the decree is a question arising in execution which must be tried by the executing Court under that section or, at the discretion of that Court, by suit. In either case the Court would be a Court precluded from recognising the adjustment: see Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (1). It is, I think, very undesirable that a defendant should, by a plea, such as we have in this suit, be permitted after the lapse of many years to call in question a title acquired at a Court sale which was never challenged by the judgment-debtor, though she was alive at the time of the trial of this suit and may still be alive. I am not prepared to acquiesce in the suggestion that this should be treated as a suit in which the question of satisfaction, whether fraudulent or otherwise, before the Court sale may now be raised. The diametrically opposite conclusions arrived at by the trial and Appellate Courts upon the recorded evidence, relating, as it does, to events of eleven or twelve years ago, demonstrate the advantage of allowing no deviation from the strict rules of procedure in connection with the issue in question. Nothing in this judgment must be taken as throwing doubt upon the propriety of the Court in the exercise of its inherent powers allowing the investigation of a question of fraud in order to prevent injustice. Here there is no question of injustice. Any investigation of title prior to the defendant No. 1's purchase in 1903 would have disclosed the decree and Court sale in the mortgage suit of 1899. The defendants, therefore, cannot complain if redemption is allowed on the footing of their interest, as mortgagees still subsisting. The trial Court was right in holding that the mortgages effected during the prosecution of proceedings in the suit of 1899 were ineffectual as against the plaintiff.

We set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court with costs in the lower Appellate Court and this Court on the defendants.

SHAH, J.—I entirely agree.

I desire to add that, apart from fraud, there can be no doubt about the plaintiff's right to redeem the mortgages now vested in defendant No. 2. The mortgage of 1884 was unregistered and, therefore, not entitled to priority over the subsequent registered mortgages in favour of defendant No. 1's father, according to the provisions of section 50 of the Indian Registration Act. The plaintiff should have joined the subsequent mortgagees as a party to the suit of 1899 in view of section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act then in force; but the omission to join him does not involve the consequence that he loses his rights as a purchaser at the Court-sale with the leave of the Court in execution of his decree. It is needless to refer to the cases cited in the course of the arguments. On the facts it is clear that the plaintiff is entitled to redeem the mortgages in favour of defendant No. 1 as the purchaser of the right, title and interest of Mariam, who was undoubtedly entitled to redeem them at the date of the Court sale.

The last two mortgages out of the five in favour of defendant No. 1's father were effected during the pendency of the plaintiff's suit of 1899 and of the execution proceedings in that suit. It is clear that the plaintiff was actively prosecuting the suit and the execution proceedings from the date of the suit to the date of the Court sale. Under section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, Mariam, who was a party to the suit, could not transfer the property by way of mortgage so as to affect the rights of the plaintiff to bring the property to sale free from such burden. These mortgages clearly affected the plaintiff's right under the decree, which he could resist as a purchaser at the Court sale in execution of that decree. The decisions in Shivjiram Sahebram Marawadi v. Waman Narayan Joshi (2) and Rachappa v. Mangesh (3), though not under section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, clearly support this view.

The mere fact that a pre-emptor is suing not only for his own benefit but also for the benefit of persons who are not entitled to pre-empt the property, does not disentitle him from exercising his right of pre-emption [p. 139, col. 1.]

Poor and rich alike are equally entitled to the privileges of pre-emption and to hold that a poor man cannot seek the financial assistance of others in prosecuting his suit would be, in many cases, to disqualify him from the exercise of his rights. [p. 139, col. 1.]

A mere omission to comply with Order XLI, rule 27 clause 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, does not render the additional evidence taken in second appeal inadmissible especially when no objection is taken by the opposite party. [p. 138, col. 1.]

Section 23, Civil Procedure Code of 1882, does not authorize a review of a decree which was right when it was made on the ground of the happening of some subsequent event. The proper course in such cases is to request the Court to accept additional evidence regarding the subsequent event and the Court is justified in taking such evidence into consideration. [p. 138, col. 2.]

Civil miscellaneous petition for review of the decree and judgment of the Punjab Chief Court, in Civil Appeal No. 2739 of 1914, reported as 43 Ind. Cas. 177, decided by Mr. Justice Scott-Smith and Mr. Justice Leslie Jones on 3rd November 1917.

The Hon'ble Pundit Sheo Narain, Messrs. Munohar Lal, Duni Chand and Morton, for the Petitioners.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, Dr. G. C. Narang and Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, who are 20 in number and occupancy tenants of their village, sued for pre-emption in respect of a sale of 4,493 bighas 14 biswas, being the whole of the village of Kagsar. They stated the market price to be Rs. 15,000, which they were willing to pay. The first Court granted them a decree for Rs. 23,000, which was duly deposited and a final decree was granted in their favour. The vendee appealed to the Chief Court and additional evidence being put in to show that plaintiffs were not suing for their own benefit alone, but also on behalf of other non-agriculturists, the appeal was accepted and the suit dismissed with costs. Against this decision an application for review was preferred and has been argued at length before us. To understand the points involved, it is necessary to refer to the original pleadings of the parties.

In reply to the plaint the vendee stated in paragraph 8 of the jawab-i-dawa that the plaintiffs were not entitled to relief as they had brought the suit at the instigation of other persons, who had supplied them with funds, and that they were litigating for the sake of other persons. The plaintiffs totally deny these allegations, stating that they had not instituted the suit at the instigation and for the benefit of other persons, and that under any circumstances, if they had taken money from other persons, this could make no difference in their rights. An issue was duly framed; but no evidence was produced on the question involved and the decision thereon was in favour of the plaintiffs. The decision of the lower Court was dated 13th August 1914. After the institution of the appeal to this Court, mutation was about to take place in favour of the plaintiffs, when they requested that it should be effected also in the names of other persons on the ground that these persons were partners with them in the pre-emption suit. This application was at first refused but finally sanctioned by the Commissioner. The net result has been that approximately one-third of the land in suit has been mutated in the names of the plaintiffs and the remainder in the names of non-agriculturists of their village. The defendant vendee, on obtaining information of these proceedings, requested permission on 9th July 1917 to put in an additional ground of appeal to the effect that the suit had been brought in the interests of third persons, who were non-agriculturists and had no right of pre-emption. In support of this ground of appeal the vendee put in subsequently on 17th December 1917 copies of the mutation proceedings. This additional evidence was admitted subject to all just exceptions. The appeal came on for hearing in due course, and Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents having been recently engaged, and being inadequately prepared, asked for time especially to consider the new evidence put in. He was granted an adjournment for one hour and then proceeded to argue the case. It is admitted that he made no objection to the admission of the new evidence tendered; and it was on this evidence that the decision of the appeal was based.

It is now sought to review the previous judgment on the grounds (1) that the additional evidence should not have been admitted; and (2) that the decision of the Bench is opposed to the well-accepted law on the subject. On the first point Counsel for the petitioners first referred to the fact that the Appellate Court had not complied with the provisions of clause 2, Order LII, rule 27. This objection was not seriously pressed; and we do not consider that mere omission to comply with the rule renders the evidence inadmissible, especially in view of the fact that no objection was taken by Counsel for the respondents. Counsel then proceeded to refer to various authorities, in which the admission of additional evidence was disallowed. The first three authorities were Kessou i Issur v. G.

I. P. Railway (1), Krishnama Chariar v. Narasimha Chariar (2) and Garden Reach Spinning and Manufacturing Co. v. Secretary of State (3). The first two authorities are not in point, as the additional evidence desired to be produced was in existence at the time of the decree and it was held that under such circumstances the proper remedy was under section 623 of the old Civil Procedure Code by way of review. As for the 3rd case, the additional evidence had come into being after the decree, and though this fact was noted by Fletcher, J., it was apparently overlooked at the time of writing judgment. On the other hand, the Privy Council in Kotagiri Venkata Subbamma Rao v. Vellanki Venkatorama Rao (4) has clearly laid down that section 623 of the old Civil Procedure Code does not authorise review of a decree which was right when it was made, on the ground of the happening of some subsequent events. It is clear, therefore, that the appellants took the proper course in requesting the Court to accept additional evidence regarding the subsequent events and that the Court was justified in taking such evidence into consideration. The strongest ground, however, for not accepting the application for review on this point is that at the hearing of the appeal no objection whatever was made to the admission of this evidence by Counsel for the respondents.

As for the merits of the case, we have no doubt that the decision sought to be reviewed did not give a correct exposition of the law. The judgment was based on certain obiter dicta contained in Brij Nath v. Jita (5) and on Ramsukh Das v. Faizuddin (6) and it was held that as plaintiffs, according to their own admission, were not suing for themselves alone but for themselves and other persons, they were not entitled to a decree. It is clear that the remarks of Bullocks, J., in Brij Nath v. Jita (5) were in no way necessary for the decision of the suit; and it is also to be noted that his learned colleague did not share his opinion. In the Punjab Record No. 19 of 1898 [Ramsukh Das v. Fazl-ud din (6)] the head-note is misleading and moreover that judgment could only be referred to as an authority in the case of a benami plaintiff, viz., a person suing entirely for the benefit of another. In the present case, it is clear that the plaintiffs were suing mainly, at any rate, for their own benefit. Both of these judgments were discussed in Mahmud Bakhsh v. Hassan Bakhsh (7), which contains, in our opinion, a correct exposition of the law. There are many other authorities on the same point, e.g., Ramsukh Das v. Fazl-ud-din (6), Jiwan Singh v. Sher Singh (8), Manohar Lal v. Pars Ram (9) and Ahsan-ullah v. Jowahir Lal (10). It is argued on behalf of the vendee-respondent that the main object of pre-emption being to exclude strangers from the village and non-agriculturists from purchasing land and plaintiffs, having joined with themselves persons disentitled to pre-empt, have made themselves parties to the defeat of the principles for which they contend, and that if the other partners had been made plaintiffs, they could not have succeeded. We are not impressed with the force of this argument. At the worst, if the other partners in the litigation had been made plaintiffs, the plaint would have been ordered to be amended by the exclusion of their names, vide Murad v. Mine Khan (11) and Hira Lal v. Ibrahim (12), or a decree would have been granted in favour of the entitled pre-emptors alone, vide Sharaf v. Pir Baksh (13). Nor do we consider that the action of the plaintiffs in joining with them other persons as purchasers can be considered as defeating the principles on which the pre-emptive right is based. Poor and rich alike are equally entitled to the privileges of pre-emption, and to hold that a poor man cannot seek the financial assistance of others in prosecuting his suit would be, in many cases, to disqualify him from the exercise of his rights. This is not the intention of the law, nor is there any authority of this Court to this effect.

We hold, therefore, that the previous decision of this case proceeded upon an incorrect exposition of the law and that the plaintiffs' suit should not have been dismissed on the ground that other persons were helping them in the litigation. We, therefore, accept the application for review and as all the grounds of appeal were not dealt with in the previous judgment, we direct the appeal to go before the Bench for their decision. Parties can bear their own costs of to-day's hearing.

C. M. P. No. 628 of 1918

CONVERTED INTO C. R. P. No. 399 of 1918.

Petition, under section 107 of the Government of India Act, to direct the Court of the Sub-Judge, Mayavaram, to take proceedings against the 2nd respondent herein for contempt of Court in having unauthorisedly dealt with the said jewels in the said Original Suit No. 1 of 1916.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Petitioner in both.

Messrs. N. Chandra Sekara Aiyar and E. Vinayaka Row, for the Respondents in both.

JUDGMENT.—In Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 627 of 1918 we are asked to direct the lower Court to take steps for the recovery from the 2nd counter-petitioner of certain jewels in order to their delivery to plaintiff, a Receiver appointed, inter alia, to have the custody of them pending disposal of Original Suit No. 1 of 1916 on the lower Court's file.

A preliminary objection has been taken to the form of the petition, on the ground that this Court's order appointing plaintiff Receiver provided that he should work under the lower Court's direction and that this Court consequently cannot itself issue directions to him or the lower Court in the matter and can interfere with the directions given by the lower Court only by way of revision and within the limits prescribed by section 115, Civil Procedure Code. It is true that, although the judgment directing appointment was passed in appeal against the lower Court's order refusing to appoint, the formal order drawn up contained the provision relating to the Receiver working under the lower Court's direction, as though the Receiver had been appointed as this Court's Receiver in a proceeding pending before it. There was, however, nothing corresponding with that provision in the judgment and, since, strictly read, it would clearly have been inappropriate, we think that it must be construed as entailing nothing beyond what would follow from the appointment which we made in appeal, the Receiver's subordination to the lower Court. So reading it, we think ourselves at liberty to deal with the petitions before us as presented in revision and to consider them with reference to section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The petitioner was appointed Receiver to take charge of certain jewels. His allegations are that he could not get possession of them, though 2nd respondent had them, and that when he moved the lower Court to enquire into those allegations, it told him, he could sue and on his suing postponed enquiry until the trial of the suit, in which the appointment was made.

Authority is clear that the lower Court was bound to assist the petitioner in the execution of his duties by issue of all necessary orders to the parties to the litigation and by enforcing them; if necessary, by contempt proceedings, and its refusal to take action or postponement of it was, therefore, a clear refusal to exercise jurisdiction, such as section 115 contemplates. This is not disputed. The object of the Receiver's appointment was that he should have custody of the jewels pending the trial, and, unless he obtains them, his appointment will be useless. In these circumstances we set aside the lower Court's order, dated 6th November 1917, and direct it to restore petitioner's petition to file and proceed to enquire into it and dispose of it according to law in the light of the foregoing without further delay. Respondent will pay petitioner's costs in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 627 of 1918 (Civil Revision Petition No. 398 of 1918) in this Court. His costs to date in the lower Court will follow the result of his petition.

Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 628 of 1918 (Civil Revision Petition No. 399 of 1918) is for a direction to the lower Court to take proceedings against 2nd respondent for contempt and is premature at present. It is dismissed.

Petition No. 627 allowed;

Held, that this was only a colourable pretence of exercising the jurisdiction vested in the Court by law to ascertain the actual value of the property and record it in the sale proclamation and that the Court should ascertain the value of the property by a reference to the rent-roll and to the Record of Rights showing the extent of the zirais and bekasht lands of the village.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the learned Subordinate Judge has directed that the value of the property should be reckoned at twenty times the Government Revenue. This we can regard only as a colourable pretence of exercising the jurisdiction vested in him by law to ascertain the actual value of the property and record it in the sale proclamation. We should have been willing to ascertain the value for ourselves, but the learned Vakil for the decree-holder asks for a remand that the matter may be properly enquired into. We, therefore, direct the learned Subordinate Judge to ascertain the value of this property by a reference to the rent-roll and to the Record of Rights showing the extent of the zirais and bekasht lands of the village. C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 45, applicability of—Sir lands—Mortgage registered before commencement of Act—Award of Conciliation Board after passing of Act, effect of.

A mortgagee of certain villages including sir lands obtained the usual preliminary decree for foreclosure in a suit on the mortgage on 30th June 1899. The matter was then referred to a Conciliation Board which made its award on 20th February 1905, which provided that the amount payable under the said decree should be considerably reduced, that the reduced amount should be paid in the manner therein stated, and that in default of payment only seven of the mortgaged villages should be foreclosed. No mention was made of sir lands. The award was filed in Court under section 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and a decree was passed in terms of the award, and on 18th June 1910 that decree was made final as the foreclosure decree, in which the names of the seven villages to be foreclosed were given, but no mention was made of the sir lands. In execution the mortgagee decree-holder claimed actual possession of the sir lands in the seven villages:

Held, (1) that the conciliation award was a fresh origin of rights between the parties, and that although it came into existence in consequence of the registered mortgage and the transactions thereunder, it was, both for the purpose of enforcement and for the purpose of the application of section 45 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1898, as amended by Act XXI of 1899, the transaction between the parties which was the foundation of their rights; [p. 146, col. 2; p. 147, col. 1.]

(2) that sub-section 1) of section 45 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act must be applied to the case and that, therefore, in spite of the terms of the award, the mortgagor could not so transfer his right to occupy sir lands as to divest himself of his right as an occupancy tenant under the Act: [p. 147, col. 1.]

(3) that consequently, the mortgagee could only obtain symbolical or constructive possession of the sir lands, the actual possession remaining with the mortgagor as occupancy tenant of the lands. [p. 147, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment and decree of Mr. Batten, A. J. C., and Mr. Stanyon, A. J. C., Nagpur, dated the 8th May 1911, in First Appeal No. 94 of 1910.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of Mr. Batten, A. J. C., and Mr. Stanyon, A. J. C.:—

NARAYAN GANESH GHATATE v. BALIRAM.

"It is expedient to state, as far as possible in chronological order such facts of this case as are material to the question raised by this appeal.

On the 17th January 1881 a deed of mortgage by way of conditional sale was executed by two brothers Ganpati and Tukaram in favour of Gopal Narayan Ghatate and Gopal Hari Bhide. The consideration for this deed was a debt of Rs. 16,000 and the property mortgaged comprised 15 villages, and some cattle and grain. Again, on the 11th December 1884 the same mortgagors executed another deed of mortgage by way of conditional sale in favour of the same mortgagees, whereby they incumbered practically the same property with another Rs. 2,000 as principal. The original mortgagors are now represented by their sons, the present respondents Baliram and Parashram; and the original mortgagees are now represented by the son of one of them, Ganpat Gopal Ghatate, the present appellant. On the 16th February 1898 the mortgagees sued to enforce the said mortgages, and obtained a foreclosure decree nisi on the 30th June 1899—also dated 8th July 1899—for Rs. 86,106-8-0 due on the mortgages, and Rs. 2,177-11-0 as costs. Future interest at 6 per cent. per annum was also awarded. The dies datus was 30th December 1899. The decree in gave effect to the mortgage, by including the property governed thereby the cultivating rights of the mortgagors in the sir and khudkasht lands. The judgment-debtors sought by appeal (Appeal No. 52 of 1899 in the Court of the Judicial Assistant to the Commissioner) to have the decree modified, at least as to some of the villages, so as to secure for the mortgagors an ex-proprietary tenant right in sir lands under section 42 of Act IX of 1883. The appeal was dismissed on the 6th November 1899. An application by the judgment debtors for an extension of time having been refused by the first Court, was allowed in appeal (Appeal No. 30 of 1900 in the Court of the Divisional Judge, decided on 27th November 1900). Time was extended to the 15th May 1901. No payment having been made, the decree-holder applied on the 17th June 1901 for an order absolute, and this was granted to him on a date which, from the order sheet, we find was the 24th July 1901. An appeal (No. 84 of 1901) was made to the Divisional Court, which, in view of impending proceedings by a Conciliation Board, set aside the order absolute on condition that the mortgagee-decree-holder should remain in possession of the mortgaged estate, and be accountable for the profits, pending disposal of the case by the said Board. Subsequently the Board dealt with the matter, and, having obtained a proper reference from the parties, made an arbitration award on the 20th February 1905.

This award showed the liability of the judgment debtors, up to the 31st December 1902, to be as follows:—

	Rs.	a.	p.
Decretal sum ...	88,281	3	0
Interest ...	19,409	10	6
Total ...	1,07,693	13	6
Costs of village management ...	2,592	10	6
Total ...	1,10,286	8	0
Amount realised ...	39,821	15	3
Gross Balance ...	70,464	8	9
Struck off by Board...	56,714	8	9
Net balance ...	13,750	0	0

Future interest on this sum was settled at 6 per cent. per annum, and the scheme for re-payment was as follows:—

(1) The debt to be paid in nine annual instalments commencing from the 1st May 1905.

(2) The first three instalments to consist of interest on the above sum only. The 4th instalment to be Rs. 6,750 plus interest on the whole debt. The remaining five instalments to be Rs. 1,400 each plus interest on the whole sum outstanding due.

(3) In default of any two instalments the whole sum to become exigible, and if not paid, the mortgaged property mentioned in the award to be foreclosed.

(4) Interest at 6 per cent. per annum to run on instalments in default from the date of default.

The following condition was also entered in the award, the word sahukar having reference to the decree-holder:—

"That the sahukar has the same right to the mortgaged property which he had before the award by virtue of the mortgage deed. In case of default of the instalments entered in the award, the conditions of the mortgage deed shall be enforced in connection with such debt as has been entered by us in column 5 of the award."

The award having been signed by the arbitrators, the following 'Notes' were appended to it:—

NOTE 1. This award is exempt from stamp duty under Government of India Resolution No. 2305 of May 1903.

2. In accordance with section 525, Civil Procedure Code, this award will have to be filed in the Court of competent jurisdiction within 6 months of the date of receipt thereof for obtaining a decree.

As regards the collateral security, the terms of the award ran thus:—

"On failing to pay any two instalments, the whole sum to be paid at once, and the villages mentioned below to be foreclosed. The remaining villages, in which the sahukars had an interest under their mortgage deeds, be excluded from the claim."

The villages named in the award are: (1) Garada, (2) Malkazari, (3) Kambazari, (4) Arabkasa, (5) Chorkhamara, (6) Pindkepar, and (7) Sukli. It was in the course of these proceedings that the present appellant bought out his co mortgagee and decree-holder, and became the sole owner of the mortgagees' rights under the award.

On the 12th August 1905 the decree-holder applied that the award be filed under section 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and a decree be passed under it. This was done by the District Court on the 18th September 1905, when a decree nisi in terms of the award was made and delivered. The sanguine hopes of the philanthropic administrators which had led to conciliatory proceedings between debtors and creditors were not realized in the present case, and, on the 14th August 1908, the decree-holder applied for an order absolute as a sequel to the decree nisi of 18th September 1905. The judgment-debtors remaining absent, the decree was made absolute, in their absence, on the 19th September 1908. A subsequent application by the judgment-debtors to re-open the case having been disallowed on the 21st November 1908, the judgment-debtors appealed to this Court—Miscellaneous Appeal No. 53 of 1908. On the 21st September 1909, Skinner, Additional Judicial Commissioner, set aside the decree absolute and extended time for payment of the decretal sum, now over Rs. 20,000, till the 6th October 1909. No payment was made, and a further application to Skinner, Additional Judicial Commissioner, for time, made by the judgment-debtors, was referred down, with certain observations, for disposal by the lower Court. Eventually, on the 16th June 1910, the decree of 18th September, 1905, based on the award, was once more made absolute. Against this latest decree, Baliram, one of the judgment-debtors, made an appeal—First Appeal No. 65 of 1910—to this Court, and we dismissed that appeal on the 5th instant.

Meanwhile, on the 11th January 1909 (under the previous decree absolute which Skinner, Additional Judicial Commissioner, set aside), the decree-holder had applied for possession of the foreclosed estate. These execution proceedings were stayed on the 3rd March 1909, in obedience to an order from this Court issued by Skinner, Additional Judicial Commissioner. After the decree had again been made absolute, warrants for possession were once more ordered to issue on the 23rd July 1910. These warrants directed possession of the villages, but made no express mention of any sir or khudkasht lands or of any houses. The decree-holder construed them as excluding, from the property to be delivered to him, the dwelling houses and home farms of the judgment-debtor. He, therefore, paid no process fees, and the warrants did not issue. When the case came up for hearing on the 6th August 1910, the decree-holder filed an application which we reproduce so far as it refers to the question now before us:—

1. The Court had on 16th June 1910 ordered the decree-holder to take possession of the mortgaged property, and accordingly a warrant for possession of the mortgaged property was issued. But the Nazir refused to give the decree-holder possession of the villages with sir and khudkasht fields or houses (as they) were (not) mentioned in the warrant. The decree-holder, therefore, declined to take possession of the villages excluding sir and khudkasht fields and houses. The decree-holder's agent then orally requested the Court to issue warrant for possession of the villages with sir and khudkasht fields and houses mortgaged with him. But the Court refused the decree holder's prayer, and again on 23rd July 1910 ordered warrant to issue for possession of the mortgaged villages excluding sir and khudkasht fields and houses.

2. The villages together with sir and khudkasht lands and houses were mortgaged with the decree-holder. The decree-holder had obtained decree for foreclosure in respect of the same. The Conciliation Award gave to the decree-holder the same rights as he possessed under the mortgage and original decree obtained by him. The Court's decree based on award could not affect his rights under the mortgage or the original decree. The decree-holder is, therefore, entitled and prays to be placed in possession of the whole of the property inclusive of the right to cultivate sir and khudkasht lands and houses of the different villages foreclosed in his favour.

'The decree-holder prays further that the decree based on award, if decided to be ambiguous and not consistent with the terms of the award, may be amended and the specific terms be embodied in the decree.'

On presenting this application, the agent for the decree-holder added that, unless khās possession of the sir and khudkasht lands was ordered, he did not want any possession of the villages at all.

Under these circumstances the Court below passed the following order:—

'The decree does not specify transfer of the villages with the sir and khudkasht land. It mentions only the villages, and the decree-holder cannot, therefore, be put in possession with the sir and khudkasht rights. Hence possession of the villages without these rights was ordered. As, however, the decree-holder declines to take such possession, the application is struck off. Costs on the decree-holder.

'As regards the prayer for amending the decree, the decree-holder must make a separate application. Such an application cannot be entertained in these proceedings. 'Struck off as wholly infructuous.'

It is against this order that the present appeal is made, upon the single ground that 'upon a right interpretation of the decrees, mortgage-deeds, and award, the decree-holder was entitled to possession of the sir and khudkasht lands, and the houses, as prayed for.'

There can be no doubt that if the rights of the parties, inter se, were governed only by the contract of mortgage and the decree which had replaced it, the complete success of this appeal would be inevitable. The deed of mortgage, and the original foreclosure decree based thereon, gave the mortgagees, inter alia, a contingent right to physical possession of the sir and khudkasht lands and all the houses of the mortgagors. The Conciliation Award expressly preserved for the mortgagees all their rights under the original mortgage, in respect of the seven villages to which the mortgage was confined; and the decree absolute now standing is intended to be in accordance with the award.

But the matter does not rest entirely upon the contract between the parties and the decree of the Court in enforcement thereof. We have to consider how far, if at all, it is affected by section 45 of Act XI of 1898. Sub-sections (1) and (6) thereof are those with which we are concerned. They are as follows:—

(1) Notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary, and save where sanction has been given under sub section (2); a proprietor who, after the commencement of this Act, temporarily or permanently loses (whether under decree or order of a Civil Court or a Revenue Officer or otherwise), or transfers his right to occupy sir land as a proprietor, shall, at the date of such loss or transfer, become an occupancy tenant of that sir land, and the rent payable by him, as such, shall be the sum determined at the current settlement as the rental value of such land, unless and until, on the application of either landlord or tenant, the rent is fixed by a Revenue Officer.

* * * * *

'(6) Nothing in this section shall affect a document duly registered before the commencement of this Act; and, on any surrender or transfer, such as is described in sub-section (1), being made, decreed, or ordered, in pursuance of such a document, the rights of the parties to occupy the sir land shall accrue as if this Act had not been passed.'

An explanation suffixed to the section provides that 'for the purposes of this section a transfer includes a mortgage and a lease.'

The effect of these statutory provisions upon the rights of the parties to the present case is not free from difficulty. The language of the enactment leaves something to be desired. There is no mention of any surrender in sub-section (1), and we assume that the word 'surrender' contained in sub-section (6) is singularly misused as synonymous with what is called 'loss' in the former sub-section. It is clear that subject to the saving provisions of sub-section (6), the only condition necessary for the application of sub-section (1) to cases where sanction under sub-section (2) has not been obtained is that the loss or transfer of the proprietary interest should have taken place after the 21st October 1898, when the enactment embodying it came into force. It is also manifest that the mortgage deeds of 1881 and 1884, in this suit, and the foreclosure decree of 30th June 1899 made in pursuance of them were covered by the proviso contained in sub-section (6). But those deeds and that decree were extinguished by the Conciliation Award of February 1905, which had the same legal effect as an entirely fresh contract. The fact that some of the terms of the previous contract or decree were repeated would not keep such contract or decree in legal existence. The award became as much a fresh starting point as a novation would have been. Suppose, instead of resorting to arbitration, the parties had adjusted the foreclosure decree of 30th June 1899 by the execution of a fresh deed of mortgage, executed in February 1905, duly registered and embodying all the terms contained in the award. From the date of such deed, the rights and liabilities of the parties, inter se, would rest upon this deed, without power of reversion to the decree extinguished by it. For the purpose of subjection to Statute Law, the contract would date from February 1905. In the same way, the mortgage rights of the decree-holder now arise out of, and rest on, the award and, whether we treat the proprietary interest of the mortgagors as transferred on the 20th February 1905—the date of the award—or as lost on the 16th June 1910—when the final decree was made—the change took place after commencement of the Act, and sub-section (1) aforesaid operated to create an ex-proprietary occupancy tenant right in favour of the mortgagors. It makes no difference that neither the Conciliation Board nor the parties were aware of this, and intended to preserve the original rights. Such preservation, on novation in 1905, was beyond the power of contract, and, therefore, beyond the power of arbitration award. The decree-holder did not realize that, in giving up his decree of 30th June 1899, for an entirely new arrangement made in 1905, he was finally giving up his right to obtain cultivating rights in the sir land; and the loss of such rights, by application of sub-section (1), may even be inconsistent with the practice of the Legislature in regard to vested interests if the decree-holder's right over sir land under the decree of June 1899 could be called a vested interest: but there is the Statute, and we are bound to give effect to it. The award of February 1905 was neither 'a document duly registered before the commencement' of Act XI of 1898: nor did it make, decree, or order, any surrender or transfer 'in pursuance of such a document.' It substituted something for that which died with its birth, and we think that it cannot by any straining of language be brought within sub-section (6) of the said section 45, so as to prevent the application of sub-section (1).

We, therefore, hold and declare that from and after the 20th February 1905 the judgment-debtors became entitled to occupancy tenure of the sir fields in the mortgaged villages, and though this tenure remained merged while they held proprietary right in such fields, it emerged into active life on the 16th June 1910 when the proprietary interest passed to the decree-holder by foreclosure absolute. Hence the decree-holder can only obtain symbolical or constructive possession of the sir land in the mortgaged villages, physical possession remaining with the judgment-debtors as occupancy tenants. The order of the lower Court is inaccurate and misleading, because it does not distinguish between the proprietary possession of the decree-holder and the occupancy tenure under him of the judgment-debtors.

The inclusion of khudkasht lands with sir land by the lower Court is quite unwarranted by law. The decree-holder's claim to possess such khudkasht lands as are not sir is of course irresistible, and the District Judge ought to have seen that. This error must be corrected in any future execution proceedings.

Then as regards houses. As to these the order appealed against is silent, and it appears advisable to point out the law. Such houses as stand on the sir land remain with the judgment-debtors as occupancy tenants of those lands. Though the decree-holder, as the landlord, is now the proprietor of them, they remain subject to the occupancy tenure of the judgment-debtors. As regards houses in the abadi, the rights of the judgment-debtors now rest on the wajib-ul-arz, and the decree-holder, though undoubtedly owner of the soil and possibly, by operation of the law of mortgage, owner also of the houses standing on the soil, cannot evict them while they remain occupancy tenants. As to houses neither in the abadi nor on sir land, the decree-holder's claim for possession cannot be resisted, and the Court must, when required, give effect to it.

We have endeavoured to point out the rights of the parties inter se as a result of the final decree of 16th June 1910; but though the lower Court was in error concerning the khudkasht lands and houses, this appeal must nevertheless fail. The lower Court rightly refused to order khas possession of the sir land, and the decree-holder abandoned his execution application unless, inter alia, that was given to him. Therefore his application was validly dismissed, and cannot be restored in appeal. If and when the decree-holder is ready to accept possession of the villages which have passed to him, subject to the judgment-debtors' rights under the Tenancy Act and the wajib-ul-arz, he may apply again for execution.

We dismiss this appeal, but under the circumstances we direct that each party do bear his own costs thereof as incurred."

Mr. De Gruyther, K. C. (with him Mr. J. M. Parikh), for the Appellants, submitted that the two registered mortgages of 1881 and 1884 and the decree, dated the 30th June 1899, were not extinguished, and all further proceedings, viz., reference to the Conciliation Board, their award, the decree on the award, were all proceedings under that decree. Only the two mortgages could be foreclosed and they expressly included sir land. Reference was made to Act XI of 1898, section 2; Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1881 (Act XVIII of 1881), section 4, and the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 (Act IV of 1882), sections 67, 86 and 87.

The respondents did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SUMNER.—This is an appeal against a judgment of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, which affirmed an order of the District Judge made in execution proceedings on a foreclosure decree. The point has been very clearly argued, but their Lordships do not think it necessary to take time to consider the matter further.

The history of the case, which is rather complicated, is set out chronologically and very conveniently in the judgment appealed against. The point for decision is one dependent on the construction of section 45 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act of 1898, Chapter IV, "Of Occupancy Tenants", and particularly sub-section 6 of that section.

The substance of the decision of the Court below was that the Conciliation Award of February 1905 was, for the purposes of this case, a fresh origin of the rights between the parties, and that although it came into existence in consequence of the mortgages of 1881 and 1884 and transactions thereunder, it was, both for the purpose of enforcement and for the purpose of the application of this particular section, the transaction between the parties which was the foundation of their rights. Accordingly they concluded that the transfer made or decreed by the proceedings under review could not be said to be in pursuance of the older mortgages of 1881 and 1884 which, as documents expressly providing for the transfer of the right to occupy sir land as a proprietor within sub-section 6, would have been saved from the operation of sub-section 1, but that in truth sub-section 1 of section 45 must be applied, and that, therefore, in spite of the terms of the award, which in virtue of the agreement of reference became the agreement of the parties, the mortgagor could not so transfer his right to occupy sir land as to divest himself of his right as an occupancy tenant under the Act.

The reasons, their Lordships think, are sufficiently and fully given in the judgment appealed against and do not require repetition. It is a question of construction, not incapable of being argued and even decided either way, but their Lordships see no reason to differ from the decision appealed against, and will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be dismissed, but without costs, as the respondents have not appeared.

Appeal dismissed.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier.

CHINNASWAMI PILLAI AND ANOTHER—

versus

APPASWAMI PILLAI AND ANOTHER—

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Surrender of life-interest by limited owner—Surrender by widow and daughter in favour of next reversioner with reservation for maintenance, validity of.

A surrender by a Hindu widow and her daughter of their life-interest in the property of the last male owner in favour of the next reversioner, with a condition that they should be maintained by the latter, is valid and operative and accelerates the inheritance of the reversioner making him full owner of the property on that date. [p. 148, col. 2; p. 149, col. 2; p. 150, col. 2.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J. (Napier, J. dubitante).—The principle that onerous obligations attached to a surrender by a widow will invalidate the surrender does not apply to the case of a daughter who inherits as next heir. The only condition which can be imposed on principle upon any female heir other than the widow is that the surrender should be of the whole estate. The act of a daughter who, being the next heir, surrenders the whole estate, vests the absolute inheritance in the next male heir, even if she reserves as consideration for her surrender the full enjoyment of the property during her lifetime. [p. 149, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—A stipulation for her own maintenance by the widow will not affect the legal result of the surrender. [p. 148, col. 2.]

A Hindu female who surrenders an estate does not become civilly dead from the date of the surrender for any purpose, except for making the person in whose favour the surrender is made heir to her husband's estate. [p. 149, col. 1.]

Per Napier, J.—A surrender by a limited female owner need not necessarily be in favour of the next heir if that heir agrees to be passed over, and it is immaterial whether the next heir is a party to the deed of surrender or executes a deed of surrender for herself or simply consents to being passed over. [p. 149, col. 2.]

Where an arrangement made at the time of surrender, though retaining a benefit for the person surrendering or even conferring a benefit on some person not entitled, is an obviously fair and just arrangement for the maintenance and benefit of the person surrendering, then the surrender is not vitiated by the arrangement. [p. 150, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 376 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Ariyalur, in Original Suit No. 542 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. B. Ramachandra Aiyar (with him Mr. T. R. Krishnaswami Aiyar), for the Appellants.—The surrender by the widow in this case is not to the next heir, who is the daughter, so as to fall within the principle upholding the validity of a surrender by a limited owner to the next reversionary heir. Nor is it an unconditional surrender. There is a benefit retained to the surrenderors, viz, the provision for their maintenance. The condition or reservation falls within the mischief of the rule in Sriramulu Naidu v. Andalarn mal (1). It is not a surrender in good faith. The widow must become civilly dead on the date of the surrender.

CHINNASWAMI PILLAI v. APPASWAMI PILLAI.

Mr. P. Nagabhusanam, for the Respondents.—The surrender does not militate against any principle of Hindu Law. It is immaterial that another limited owner entitled to succeed next after the widow joins in the surrender. The reservation as to maintenance is not an onerous condition so as to vitiate the surrender. It was a fair arrangement seeing that one of the surrenderors, the daughter, was entitled to be maintained by the surrenderee who is her own son. The whole estate was surrendered and there was no provision for a return of the property to the persons surrendering.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. On the date of the suit they were the reversionary heirs of one Chandram Pillai who died in about 1890, leaving a widow as his next heir and a daughter as the next expectant heir after the widow. A son was born to the daughter in 1893. When he was a year old the widow and the daughter executed the surrender deed Exhibit I, dated 2nd April 1894, in his favour, he being represented by his father and guardian, the 1st defendant. That document was a complete surrender of all the rights of the two executants in the estate of the last male owner Chandram Pillai. But there is a provision in the document that the 1st defendant as guardian of his infant son and the infant himself after he attained majority, should protect the two executants, meaning evidently that they should be maintained. The infant died about 2 years afterwards, say in 1896, and the plaintiffs now sue for the recovery of the properties from the 1st defendant, the widow and the daughter having died. The question is, whether the deed of surrender, Exhibit I, accelerated the inheritance to Chandram Pillai's estate of the 1st defendant's infant son and made him the full owner of the property on that date.

That a widow could surrender her limited interest in her husband's estate to the next reversioner so as at once to vest the property in the next reversioner is now settled law, provided that the whole estate is surrendered. The point argued for the appellants is, that the present case is not a surrender by the widow to the next reversionary heir but it is a surrender by the widow and the next reversionary heir, who is also a female, to the second reversionary heir. Even regards the question I think there are observations in Mulugu Kotayya v. Mudigonda Chandramowli Sastri (2). See also Prolab Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Sreemutty Joy Monee Dabee (3), which establishes the rule of law that a surrender by a widow with the consent of the next female heir to the secondary male heir can be treated as a joint surrender by both and that such a joint surrender might be treated as a surrender by the widow to the next female heir, which vests the property in the next female heir for a moment, and an immediate surrender of the property so vested for a moment in the next female heir by the latter to the next male heir, the result being to vest an absolute title in the secondary male heir. Next, it is objected that if the widow reserves any benefit for himself when making the surrender, the surrender is not one made in good faith in consonance with the principles of Hindu Law and hence it is invalid. In the present case the widow stipulated that the male reversioner's guardian and the male reversioner after attaining majority should support herself and her daughter. Taking first the provision for her own maintenance I do not think that a stipulation for her own maintenance by a widow can affect the legal result of the surrender. The language of the judgment in Sriramulu Naidu v. Andalammal (1) suggests that if a widow making a surrender imposes on the reversioner nothing more onerous than the obligation to maintain the widow, such a surrender would be valid and would vest the title in the reversioner. This is also in conformity with the principles of Hindu Law, a surrender being allowed by that law, as stated by Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in Nachiappa Gounden v. Rangasami Gounden (4), in order to give relief to female heirs (supposed to be incapable of prudent management) in respect of the management of the property. The theory that a widow becomes civilly dead when she makes a surrender has no basis in any text of Hindu Law. The loose expressions in some judgments as to a widow being civilly dead, when read with the context, can mean only that the next reversioner succeeds in such a case as if the widow died at the moment of surrender. She neither actually nor civilly dies then. This is also clear from the expression about civil death being followed in one of the judgments by the illustration based upon the widow's re-marriage. A woman who surrenders is clearly not civilly dead for any other purpose than for the purpose of bringing in the next reversioner as heir at once to her husband's estate. She continues to own her Stridhanam and the obligation of all persons who take her husband's estate to maintain her, which is an absolute obligation thrown by the Hindu Law, cannot be destroyed by her surrender thereof. She does not become a Sanyasi, because she surrenders her husband's estate. She is entitled to acquire properties, to retain her Stridhanam and to bring suits, and she remains competent to enter into contractual and other legal obligations.

Then coming to the provision for the maintenance of the daughter, the daughter is not (like the widow) under the Hindu Law obliged even as a moral obligation to starve and stint herself because her father is dead and she inherits her father's property. The extension of the doctrine of the so-called life-estate from the widow to the other female heirs is itself an unwarranted extension of the commentators which, however, being the present law could not be criticised to any useful purpose. When a daughter surrenders to the next reversioner, it is arguable that even she should surrender the whole estate and should not retain any portion of the estate of the last male owner to herself in order to vest the full ownership in the next reversioner. But the principle on which it was held in Sriramulu Naidu v. Andalammal (1) that if the widow imposes any onerous obligations upon the surrenderee for her own benefit or for the benefit for her servants or for charity, the surrender is not valid, does not apply to the daughter who inherits as heir. The only condition which can be imposed on principle upon any female heir other than the widow is that the surrender should be of the whole estate. Whether, therefore, the case in Chilla Subbiah Sastri v. Palury Pattabhiramayya (5), which went further than the decision in Sriramulu Naidu v. Andalammal (1) and which held that the imposing of an obligation upon a reversioner to convey back a portion of the property to the widow's brother did not invalidate the surrender, can be supported or not—in parenthesis I may here state that that case and the case of Karetti Brahmanai-kudu v. Kareti Mahalakshmi (6) have been followed even to that extent by a very recent case, Gopala Krishnayya v. Gangayya (7), decided by Abdur Rahim and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ.—I am clear that the act of a daughter who, being next heir, surrenders the whole estate, vests the absolute inheritance in the next male heir even if she received consideration for her surrender of the full enjoyment of the property during her lifetime.

It follows that the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

NAPIER, J.—I agree that this second appeal fails.

I have had considerable difficulty during the hearing of this appeal in ascertaining what are the true limits laid down in the cases to the right of surrender. I think that it is clear on the latest authorities that the surrender need not be definitely to the next heir if that next heir agrees to be passed over. That has been decided in Mulugu Kotayya v. Mudigonda Chandramowli Sastri (2) and in Satyalakshmi Narayana v. Jagannadham (8), and it seems to me to be immaterial whether the next heir is a party to the deed of surrender or executes a deed of surrender for herself or simply consents to being passed over. The difficulty I have found is on the question whether an agreement for maintenance by the person who is passed over is sufficient to invalidate the transaction. Now, it is perfectly clear that, according to the school of thought which is to be found in the reasoning of Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair in Challa Subbiah Sastri v. Palury Pattabhiramayya (5), it is absolutely immaterial what reservations are made at the time of surrender by a widow or indeed by any person surrendering. The view taken by him is that you have to treat the document of surrender by itself and when once the estate is vested, it is immaterial whether or not by a contemporaneous agreement provision is made for returning even a greater portion of the estate to a person who may not even be in any way connected with the original holder. Sankaran Nair, J., treats it as being analogous to an adoption with a contemporaneous agreement to transfer. Whether that analogy is sound,—and arguments by analogy are frequently dangerous—I cannot but view with alarm the proposition which comes to this, that a person holding a limited interest can enter into an arrangement with the then existing next heir, who may be in impecunious circumstances and prepared to lend himself to any arrangement for the sake of some ready money, by which the greater part of the property will be diverted from the person who at the falling in of the estate would be entitled to the whole. As my learned brother has pointed out, this view has been accepted in the cases reported as Karetti Brahmaiahkudu v. Kareti Mahalakshmi (6) and in Gopala Krishnayya v. Gangayya (7). Speaking for myself, if such an invasion on the whole doctrine of surrender is to receive the sanction of the Court, I should like to see it so laid down by a Full Bench of this Court. There is, however, a modified rule to be spelt out from these cases which might be that where the arrangement, although retaining a benefit for the person surrendering or even conferring a benefit on some person not entitled, is an obviously fair and just arrangement for the maintenance and benefit of the person surrendering, then the doctrine that such a surrender is not vitiated by the arrangement should be upheld. But that is not the view taken by a very eminent Hindu Judge of this Court, Subramania Aiyar, J., in Sriramulu Naidu v. Andalammal (1). He never considers this aspect of the case at all and he lays down that if the surrender is coupled with onerous conditions thrown on the person whose estate is accelerated, liabilities which are not such as would naturally devolve on him, in connection with persons to be benefited, that surrender is bad. The cases he mentions are conditions not only for the maintenance of the transferor, who was in that case a widow, but also a condition to pay a sum of money to certain dependants and to maintain a charity for all time at a certain expense and on her death to make payments of different amounts aggregating to $\frac{1}{4}$ th of the estimated value of the properties. This, as far as I gather from the language used by him in his judgment in Challa Subbiah Sastri v. Palury Pattabhiramayya (5), would have been upheld by Sankaran Nair, J., as a good surrender. Taking, therefore, this narrower view of Subramania Aiyar, J., and applying it to this case as we are asked to do, do the facts fall within the mischief of the doctrine? My learned brother is of opinion that a surrender by a daughter reserving the right of maintenance would be good, although there is not the direct legal liability for the support of a daughter incumbent on the estate. I hesitate to express a definite opinion on that point. But the facts of this case being that the reservation was made by both the widow and the daughter in the deed of surrender and that it was for the protection and maintenance of the mother of the infant child in whose favour the surrender was made, I am inclined to think that such a reservation is not within the mischief of the doctrine laid down by Mr. Justice Subramania Aiyar, and it would certainly be covered by the suggested modification of the rule laid down in Challa Subbiah Sastri v. Palury Pattabhiramayya (5).

For these reasons I concur in holding that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for disposal in this appeal is whether or not the Courts below should have given the plaintiff-appellant a decree for ejectment of the defendant respondent from certain lands which were in dispute. The suit arose out of ejectment proceedings which were taken in the Revenue Court. The taluqdar, who is the plaintiff-appellant, issued a notice against the defendant-respondent on the footing that he was a tenant who was liable to be ejected by notice. In the Revenue Court the defendant relied upon a document which had been executed in his favour in the year 1901 by a lady, Thakurain Ikhlas Kuar, who was at that time in possession of the taluqi for a life-estate. This lady died in the year 1911. The Revenue Court cancelled the notice apparently on the basis of entries which had been made in the revenue papers, entries which went to show that the defendant Bechan Singh was a mortgagee of the lands in dispute. The result is that the taluqdar has now brought a suit asking for a declaration that the defendant has no proprietary or under-proprietary rights in the lands. Amongst the other reliefs sought is the ejectment of the defendant,

The Courts below have given the plaintiff a declaration that Bechan Singh has no proprietary or under-proprietary rights in the lands in dispute, and this finding has not been contested. Both Courts, however, refused to make an order for ejectment, on the ground that the Civil Court was not competent to make such an order having regard to the position of the parties.

Now in second appeal it is contended that a decree for ejectment ought to have been made on the ground that the defendant is a trespasser, being in possession without title.

The whole question turns upon the nature of the relation now existing between the parties. If it is found that the relation of landlord and tenant exists, then it is obvious that the Civil Court has no power to order ejectment. The nature of the legal relation between the parties has to be determined with reference to the document upon which the defendant bases his rights. This document, as I have already said, was executed in the year 1901 by Thakurain Ikhlas Kuar. It is a matter of some difficulty to ascertain what the document really purports to be. In the opening words the document is described as "patta qaul qarar birt rahni." The document then goes on to recite that the taluqdar has received a sum of Rs. 300 from the grantee and that the latter has been put in possession of lands described in the document, for which he has to pay an annual rent of Rs. 12 8 0. So far as I am able to see, it is quite impossible to describe this document as a document of mortgage and I have no doubt that the decision of the Revenue Court on this point was erroneous. The Assistant Collector merely relied upon some entry which was made in the village papers. It is true that the use of the expression birt rahni does prima facie indicate the creation of some relation of mortgagor and mortgagee, but having regard to the language of the document as a whole, I am unable to understand what the significance of these particular words is. Read in its entirety, the document appears to me nothing more than a lease; and it is to be noted that it is also described as a lease or patta,

OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE T. MAHOMED HADI.

The lessee paid a premium of Rs. 300, and in consideration of this payment he was given a tenancy of the land subject to a rental of Rs. 12-8-0 a year. There is not a word in the document to indicate that the grant was being made by way of security for any loan. There is no undertaking to repay any mortgage money, and altogether it seems to me that this document must be construed as a lease and nothing else. In this view, therefore, I must take it that the relation of landlord and tenant exists. It is, of course, the fact that the lease was granted by the lady who had only a life estate in the property, but it is not open to the plaintiff-appellant here to contend that Bechan Singh is a mere trespasser. Once Bechan Singh was admitted to a tenancy, it follows that his ejection can only be had in a Revenue Court on one or other of the grounds described in the Oudh Rent Act.

I have heard some argument with reference to the point of registration. The deed is not a registered deed and I was at one time inclined to doubt whether in view of its not being registered, it could be treated as creating a tenancy. Section 156, however, of the Rent Act exempts from the operation of the Indian Registration Act pattas which are granted for any term not exceeding seven years by a landlord to tenants to whom section 36 or 37 of the Act applies. It seems to me that Bechan Singh was admitted to an ordinary tenancy under the sections just mentioned and consequently the deed did not require registration.

I am satisfied, therefore, that in the present circumstances the plaintiff is not entitled to obtain from the Civil Court an order for the ejection of the defendant. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XL, r. 1—Administrator, insolvency of—Receiver, appointment of.

Where a person, who holds certain property partly in his personal and partly in a representative capacity as an administrator, becomes an insolvent, his personal share in the property vests in the Official Assignee and the latter, as trustee for the creditors of the insolvent, is entitled to have a Receiver appointed of the whole of the property till the share of the creditors is determined. It is immaterial that the bodies for whom the insolvent holds the property as administrator are content to leave their shares in his hands. [p. 153, col. 2.]

Messrs. Cowasjee and A. B. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Giles, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—This is an application by the Official Assignee for the appointment of a Receiver to collect the rents and profits and take charge of a certain property until further orders.

The property in question is at present being held by the respondent partly in his personal and partly in a representative capacity as administrator de bonis non. In his personal capacity the respondent is an insolvent, and, therefore, his personal share vests in the Official Assignee, who sued the insolvent as heir and as administrator for the determination of his share and its delivery to him. The Official Assignee obtained a decree on the 23rd August 1917. The insolvent has appealed and by consent the taking of the accounts has been stayed pending the hearing of the appeal without prejudice to this application for a Receiver.

The insolvent states that he is keeping accounts and this is not denied, nor is any mismanagement alleged.

The suit was filed at the end of 1915 and no decree was passed for nearly two years. During the whole of this time the Official Assignee was content to leave the management of the property in the hands of the administrator and never applied for a Receiver. The respondent has been in possession for nearly forty years, and so far as the papers before me show, has managed it without giving cause for complaint; and none of the persons or bodies for whom he is administering join in the application. The Official Assignee is joint tenant with the administrator to the extent of the insolvent's personal share. As such he is entitled to be protected from waste, but none is alleged. The sole ground for the application appears to be his insolvency.

Johnson, In re, Steele v. Cobham (1) shows how loth the Court is to allow an insolvent to manage another's estate. It was an administration action brought by a creditor against an administrator who subsequently became in his personal capacity insolvent. A Receiver was appointed apparently as a matter of course, on the ground that the Court could have no confidence in the insolvent. There, however, the administrator became insolvent on the 18th January 1866, and the plaintiff in the administration suit took out a summons at once. Here the insolvent was adjudicated on the 7th August 1912, and no application was made till the 21st December 1917, and though the Official Assignee sued in 1915 to have the insolvent's share defined and partitioned and prayed for a Receiver, no application was ever made in the suit till now.

Hopkins, In re, Dowd v. Hawtin (2) is an authority to the same effect, but there also action was taken as soon as the administrator became insolvent. If similarly prompt action had been taken by the Official Assignee my course would have been plainer, but when the beneficiaries have been content with his administration for nearly forty years, are content with it still despite his insolvency and when his creditors as represented by the Official Assignee have despite the same fact been content with his management for nearly six years, the matter is less easy. On the whole, however, I do not see how I can allow him to continue managing a property, an undefined portion of which belongs to his creditors, except with their consent. He manages for the Official Assignee who is a trustee for the creditors and is, therefore, a trustee for them himself and as Jessel, Master of the Rolls, said in Hopkins, In re, Dowd v. Hawtin

(2) (1882) 19 Ch. D. 61; 30 W. R. 601.

(2) it is not fit that a man who is a bankrupt should continue to be a trustee without the consent of the cestui que trustent. These did consent up till now, but do not consent any longer and there is nothing more to be said. They are entitled to have their share protected; what their share is it is impossible to determine at present. Till it is determined, they have rights over the whole and there must, therefore, be a Receiver of the whole despite the fact that the charities and other bodies for whom the respondent holds as administrator are content to leave their shares in his hands. The application must, therefore, be allowed with costs, two gold mohurs.

Application allowed.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Separation—Revenue papers, entry in, weight of—Evidence, whether conclusive—Females, position of—Maintenance allowance, measure of—Court, duty of.

Where the name of the widow of a deceased member of a Hindu family is entered in the revenue papers in respect of the joint share belonging to her husband in the family property, such entry cannot, in the absence of any very definite evidence as to the manner in which that entry came to be made, be treated as conclusive evidence of the fact that the family separated although there was no actual division of the property, especially when it appears that the entry was disputed immediately after it had been made. [p. 156, col. 2.]

In fixing the maintenance allowance for a Hindu female, the Court has to look to the circumstances of the joint family, i. e., to the value of the joint family property, to the income of the family, and to the number of people who have claims to be supported out of the said property. Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 13th July 1917,

SUNDARA DEBIA v. SHEO RAM.

Mr. St. George Jackson and Babu Sulig Ram Sinha, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaraj Nath Misra and Babu Parag Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this suit were one Sheo Ram and his son Rameshwar. Sheo Ram is the son of one Dwarka Prasad and the defendant Musammatt Sundara Debia is the widow of Ram Shankar, who was also a son of Dwarka Prasad.

This man, Dwarka Prasad, died some 7 or 8 years before the present suit was brought and Ram Shankar, the husband of the defendant, died 8 months before the suit was brought. The case for the plaintiffs is that at the time of Ram Shankar's death they were joint in estate with him. It was alleged that the defendant, on the assertion that her husband Ram Shankar was separate, had taken possession of certain immoveable property and had also got possession of certain bonds, which, according to the case for the plaintiffs, were part of the joint family property.

It may be explained here that Sheo Ram and his brothers were natives of a village in the Unao District. It is admitted that they carried on a money-lending business in the District of Mymensingh in Bengal, and on the evidence there can be no doubt that one or other of the brothers used to reside in Mymensingh for the purpose of superintending the family business. Money-lending transactions were also carried on in the District of Unao.

The case set up for the defendant was that very soon after the death of Dwarka Prasad, the two brothers Sheo Ram and Ram Shankar decided to separate, and accordingly a division of the household goods was made at the village of Rajpur. It is stated that there was no actual division of the landed property, because it was thought more economical to keep the property intact. It is also stated that there was no division of the various sums which were owing to the brothers by various people to whom money had been advanced on loan.

The principal issue in the case, therefore, was whether or not at the date of Ram Shankar's death he and his brother Sheo Ram had been separate in estate for a period of nearly 7 years. The burden of proving this issue was very properly laid upon the defendant. She called a number of witnesses who supported her story. The plaintiffs on the other hand produced a number of witnesses all of whom stated that the two brothers were joint up till the time of Ram Shankar's death. A number of documents have also been filed in the suit, the bearing of which is of considerable importance when we come to consider the value of the oral evidence put forward by either party. This oral evidence is of the description usually found in cases of this kind and little reliance can be placed on it as a whole. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the defendant had failed to discharge the burden of proof which rested upon her; and the principal argument in appeal is that on the evidence this finding of the Subordinate Judge is wrong.

Before the issues were framed in the suit the defendant's Pleader made a short statement of his case to the Court. He said that Sheo Ram and Ram Shankar had made a partition some 7 years before the date of the suit and that this partition had been carried out "without the intervention of any third person." The Pleader also stated that at the time the division was made lists of the property allotted to each of the brothers were prepared. The Pleader admitted that Musammatt Sundara Debia could not produce the list of the property which had been assigned to her husband at the time of division.

The two principal witnesses put forward by the defendant for the purpose of showing that a division of the household goods took place were Ram Lal and Ballu. The latter, it may be observed, is the father of Sundara Debia and his evidence is certainly open to suspicion on the ground that he is a deeply interested party. Indeed the case for the plaintiffs is that Ballu has instigated the defendant to put forward the false claim that her husband was separate from the rest of the family and in pursuance of this claim to assert her rights to a half share of the family property.

The Subordinate Judge has described the statements of these two witnesses as being vague and unconvincing, and after a careful perusal of what was said by each of them, I think his opinion is correct. In the first place, it is not made to appear why these two men were summoned from their homes in order to be present at this alleged division of the family property. Ram Lal professes to be a somewhat distant relation of the two brothers. He tries to make out that a message was sent to him calling upon him to come and to be present at the partition. He admits, however, that when he was summoned to the family house he was not called upon to do anything. In fact, as the Subordinate Judge observes, he seems to have sat there as a mute witness of all that took place. He is unable to give any precise details as to the manner in which the property was divided, and this is all the more remarkable when it is borne in mind that he was deposing to an affair which had taken place at no very great interval of time. Ballu was also vague in his statements. He professed to have been in attendance only for one of the two days which, it is said, were taken up in effecting the partition. It is admittedly a very unusual thing for a man to visit the house of his son-in-law and this was conceded by Ballu in the course of cross-examination. He admitted that only some urgent circumstance would justify a visit of this kind and it is not made to appear what urgency there was for asking him to be present. According to his own statement he did nothing whatever. He took no part in the division of the property. He suggested no course of action, nor was he called upon to settle any disputes between the brothers. He admits clearly that written lists of property were prepared.

So far then as this evidence goes, I think any Court might well hesitate to draw from it a conclusion that there had in fact been a division of the family property. The strongest point against the story is the non-production of the written list of property said to have been assigned to Ram Shankar. Both the defendant and Ballu say that such a list was prepared, and no satisfactory explanation has been given as to why it was not put forward. There is indeed a vague sort of suggestion that the plaintiffs, after the death of Ram Shankar, managed to get hold of all the family papers. I am not disposed to believe the story, for it is an admitted fact that when Ram Shankar died in Unao, the plaintiffs were away in Bengal and did not come to Unao till a week or ten days after Ram Shankar's death. It is also admitted that immediately after Ram Shankar's decease the property which was in the family house, consisting of account-books, documents and the like, were taken to the house of one Sheo Sahae. It is hardly possible to believe that if Ram Shankar had in fact separated entirely from his brother, his widow or her father would have tamely handed over all the documents and books to the plaintiffs.

As for the other evidence adduced for the defendant it is of a very general character. The witnesses state in a broad way that the two brothers were separate, that they occupied separate portions of the family house, that they performed shradh separately and that on occasions of ceremony invitations were sent to the brothers separately. Bearing in mind the fact that one or other of the brothers was always away from home attending to the business in Bengal, this evidence is of no value at all and may be discarded as being entirely useless for the purpose of proving separation.

The defendant relied very strongly upon one circumstance for the purpose of showing that her husband had separated. It seems that a mortgage had been executed in favour of the brothers while the family was joint, and it is said that after the brothers separated the mortgage debt was discharged by Matadin, the son of the mortgagor. The defendant stated that when this debt was paid up, half of the money owing under the bond was made over to her. This fact is admitted, but the plaintiff's account of the affair was that he had been compelled by a show of force or by threats to hand over half of the money to his sister-in-law. The plaintiff's case on this point is not borne out by the evidence of Matadin who was called as a witness. What he says is that having been pressed by the plaintiff Sheo Ram to pay off the debt, he took the money to Sheo Ram's house. He was told that the money could not be received at that time inasmuch as Sundara Debia had gone off to live with her father and was not present. Accordingly Matadin was told to come on another date. He says he did so and on that day the money was handed over to the parties in equal shares. Matadin observes that in any case he would not have handed over the money to one of the parties separately. It is hard, therefore, to believe that Sheo Ram was compelled to hand a share of this money over to the defendant. At the same time there is evidence to show that although Sheo Ram was the elder of the two brothers, the chief duties of management of the family property were made over to Ram Shankar, who is said to have been the more clever man of the two, and it may be that Sheo Ram is an easy-going person who would have handed over half of this money to his brother's wife without trying to make any trouble over the matter.

The plaintiffs called a number of witnesses, all of whom stated that the brothers were joint to the time of Ram Shankar's decease. I do not set any great value upon this oral evidence either, but I have been much impressed by the statement of the plaintiffs' witness No. 8, a man named Chandar Nath, who, so far as I can see, is a disinterested party. This man too carries on business in Bengal and he knew all about the money-lending business which these two brothers were carrying on in those parts. He speaks of one or other of the brothers coming at times to Bengal to look after the business, and he was able to point out in the account-books which were produced in Court the various entries which were in the writing of Sheo Ram and Ram Shankar respectively. There is certainly nothing in the cross-examination of this witness which affords any ground for supposing that he has any particular interest in supporting the case for the plaintiffs. I am inclined to believe his evidence and to hold that it is quite sufficient to rebut the story which was put forward for the defence.

To turn now to the documentary evidence in the case, it is an admitted fact that after the death of Ram Shankar the name of his widow was recorded in the khewats of the villages in which the parties own immoveable property. These khewat entries have been produced before me, and there can be no doubt that orders were passed in the month of April 1916 directing that the name of the defendant should be entered in place of that of her deceased husband. How then are these entries in the khewat to be accounted for? The case for the defendant-appellant is that they afford conclusive proof of the defendant's story that the two brothers had separated although there had been no actual division of the landed estate. There is no documentary evidence before us to show in what way these entries came to be made. The defendant gave evidence in the case, and her story is to the effect that after the death of her husband she went to the plaintiff, Sheo Ram, and said that she would have her name entered in the village papers in the same way as her husband's name had been entered. The plaintiff said that she might do so if she chose. On the other hand according to the allegation in the plaint the name of Sundara Debia was allowed to be put in the village papers merely by way of consolation (tasalli). There being no very definite evidence as to the manner in which these entries in the lady's favour came to be made, it is hardly possible to treat them as conclusive evidence of the separation; and in this connection it is important to observe that the quarrel arose almost immediately after mutation had taken place. There seems to be no doubt that what brought the parties into Court was an attempt made by the defendant to make collections of the rents of the shares which are recorded in her name. In her statement which was taken on commission the defendant stated that ever since the time of separation, that is to say, for 7 years before this case came into Court, the two brothers had regularly divided the profits of the immoveable property. She could not, however, give any details of any occasion on which there had been any settlement of accounts and she was unable to produce any documentary evidence in the shape of account-books for the purpose of proving her story. It has been argued here that the learned Judge of the Court below has attached too much importance to this failure of the defendant to produce books of account. Indeed it was suggested that she had made over all the accounts and papers to the plaintiffs shortly after her husband's death. That, however, is not the story which the defendant herself tells. She admits that she had a number of account-books in her possession which she handed over to her mukhtar, and the fact remains that those books were not placed before the Court. It is hardly possible to believe that if a separation took place Ram Shankar would not have kept some record of his separate account of the profits of the zemindari property. The parties are people who make a living out of money-lending and they are in the habit of keeping accounts. Some of these books have been produced in Court and show that two sets of account-books were kept, one in Bengal and one in Unao. But there is nothing in any of these books to indicate that Ram Shankar's share was in any way separate from the rest of the family property. On the other hand, certain entries have been referred to which all point the other way. There is for example an entry in the cash book (Exhibit 41) which was kept up in Bengal, showing various items of expenditure incurred jointly on behalf of Ram Shankar and the second plaintiff Rameshwar. It is also proved that in connection with the money-lending business which the parties carried on two ledgers were maintained, one called the home ledger and the other the Bengal ledger, and an examination of these two books shows that there are common entries in the accounts indicating that a double set of ledgers was kept up on account of the same business. This seems to me to be a very strong piece of evidence in support of the plaintiffs' case. Then we have the admitted fact that after the date of this alleged separation documents were on some occasions executed in the names of both the brothers. In particular there are three documents, namely, deeds of sale (Exhibits A-2, A-10, and A-11), all executed on the 30th of August, 1912, that is to say, long after the date of the alleged partition. It would, I think, be a very unusual circumstance for two brothers who had separated in the manner described to have joint dealings of this kind after separation; and although such a case is not inconceivable, it would at any rate be supposed that in any dealings of this kind after partition had taken place the shares of the brothers would be specified in the documents. There is nothing of this kind here and no satisfactory explanation has been placed before me to account for the fact that these properties were purchased in the joint names of the two brothers. I do not think it necessary to examine in any further detail the evidence produced on this issue of separation. It seems to me that the only possible conclusion is that the defendant failed to prove the separation which she alleged and this being so, the plaintiffs' claim was bound to succeed. I agree with the finding of the Court below on this issue.

The only other matter argued before me was the question of the allowance for maintenance which should be made to the defendant. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that she ought to receive an annuity of Rs. 10 a month. Having found, however, that previous to the suit she had collected a sum of between six and seven hundred rupees to which she had no right, he set off this amount in making his calculation and reduced the amount of the annuity to Rs. 7 a month. It has been argued strenuously on behalf of the appellant that this is a wholly inadequate allowance for the lady, considering the value of the family property. I have very little doubt that these two brothers were in very comfortable circumstances and that they had extensive money-dealings, and I am inclined to agree with Mr. Jackson's contention that the sum which has been allowed to the widow is in the circumstances insufficient. It is difficult to assess the amount of the allowance which should be made in these cases. I have been referred to several rulings of the Calcutta High Court, in which various sums were allowed in cases of this kind. It is not possible, I think, to lay down any hard and fast rule in the matter or to say that in no circumstances ought a widow to receive more than a certain proportion of the income from the joint property. A great deal depends upon the number of people who have claims to be supported out of the joint family property. In the present case we have the fact that the only persons with claims on the property are the first plaintiff and his son with their families. It has been stated in evidence that the income of the family is between seven or eight hundred rupees a year. It is probably considerably more than this. On the whole I think the claims of the lady will be fairly met by awarding her an allowance of Rs. 12 a month. This is to be irrespective of the money which she has realized according to the Subordinate Judge's finding.

I allow the appeal, therefore, to this extent that I direct that in place of the annuity of Rs. 7 a month there be awarded to the defendant a sum of Rs. 12 a month for her maintenance. In other respects the appeal fails. The defendant-appellant will pay 3/4ths of the costs incurred by the respondents in defending this appeal.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 58, 92 (4)—Mortgage registered—Subsequent agreement for payment of less than stipulated consideration—Oral evidence, admissibility of—Admission of agreement in pleadings, effect of.

A subsequent agreement to take less than is due under a registered mortgage is an agreement modifying the terms of a written contract, and, if it has to be proved, oral evidence is inadmissible under proviso (4) to section 92 of the Evidence Act. [p. 158, col. 2; p. 159, col. 2.]

Per Wallis, C. J., and Oldfield, J., (Seshagiri Aiyar, J., dubitante).—Where, however, the oral agreement is admitted in the pleadings of the other party it need not be proved, as no question of the admissibility of evidence, oral or documentary, arises when proof is dispensed with in consequence of an admission in the pleadings either under section 58 of the Evidence Act or under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. [p. 158, col. 2.]

Per Wallis, C. J.—The plain language of section 58 of the Evidence Act should not be unduly restricted by reference to considerations of public policy. The admission of a party in his pleadings as to an oral arrangement modifying a written contract gets rid of the danger which it is intended to guard against, by the prohibition against the admission of oral evidence contained in the 4th proviso to section 92 of the Evidence Act. [p. 159, col. 1.]

Per Oldfield, J.—The acceptance of a statement in an unregistered writing as evidence of the modification of a registered contract is contrary to public policy, as tending to defeat the provisions of the Registration Act, though the language of section 58 of the Evidence Act is unqualified. [p. 159, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—There is no justification in principle for not applying proviso (4) to section 92 of the Evidence Act to all cases other than those in which there has been a perfected discharge by payment. [p. 160, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—A subsequent agreement to take less than is due under a registered mortgage is clearly an agreement modifying the terms of a written contract, and if it has to be proved, oral evidence is inadmissible under the 4th proviso to section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, which is designed to protect parties to registered instruments from false cases of subsequent modification of the original contract being set up and supported by oral evidence. If the subsequent agreement in this case has to be proved, oral evidence is clearly inadmissible. The contention, however, is that it has not to be proved, as it is admitted in the pleadings. Part II of the Evidence Act deals with proof, and Chapter III, which is the first Chapter of Part II, with "facts which need not be proved." Under section 58 of this Chapter among the facts which need not be proved are facts admitted in the pleadings, such as the subsequent agreement now in question. Evidence is tendered in proof of facts in issue, and no question of the admissibility of evidence, oral or documentary, arises when proof is dispensed with in consequence of an admission in the pleadings either under section 58 or under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. Where, as in Othenbasapa v. Lakshman Ramchandra (1), the Legislature had enacted not only that an unstamped promissory note should not be receivable in evidence but also that it should not be "acted on", it was held that the Court was precluded from acting on the note by giving a decree on it, even though execution was admitted. It has not been shown that, in giving effect to the subsequent agreement admitted in the pleadings in the present case, we should be contravening any express statutory provision such as that contained in the Stamp Act, and I do not think that in the present case we are at liberty to restrict the operation of the plain language of section 58 or of the Code of Civil Procedure by reference to considerations of alleged public policy. Here the subsequent agreement is one by the mortgagee to take less than was due to him under the terms of the mortgage, and I do not think we should be justified in refusing to give effect to the section merely because, if the plaintiff had not admitted the subsequent agreement but put the defendant to the proof of it, there does not appear to be any admissible evidence by which it could have been proved. Further, I do not consider that in a case of this kind there is any public policy in refusing to give effect to the subsequent written agreement, because I think that the plaintiff's admission in the pleadings gets rid of the danger which it was intended to guard against by the prohibition of oral evidence in the 4th proviso to section 92. Different considerations might arise if the admission were that more than was provided for in the mortgage bond should be due under it. I would agree with Bakewell, J., and dismiss the appeal with costs.

OLDFIELD, J.—With all due deference I cannot follow the judgment just delivered, so far as it lays down that acceptance of a statement in an unregistered writing as evidence of the modification of a registered contract is not contrary to public policy, as tending to defeat the provisions of the Registration Act. Those provisions are, as I understand them, intended to facilitate the investigation of titles by compelling their registration and by fixing the offices, in which they must be registered and to which, therefore, investigation can be restricted. This intention would be frustrated, if the investigation had to be wider; and nonetheless so, if it had to be extended not only beyond those Registration Offices, but also to pleadings in the records of Courts. This, however, does not affect the validity of the broader ground of decision, which is available, the unqualified nature of the language used in section 58 of the Indian Evidence Act, and I, therefore, concur in dismissing the appeal with costs.

SESHAGIRI Aiyar, J.—I agree with the conclusion at which the learned Chief Justice has arrived.

The suit is on two mortgages executed by the defendant to the plaintiff. In or about March 1914 plaintiff threatened to sue on the bonds. Then certain mediators intervened. An oral agreement was come to by which the plaintiff agreed to accept in full satisfaction Rs. 1,400 in cash. Rs. 1,000 was paid within a week's time and the other Rs. 400 within three months thereafter. There was a further stipulation that if the Rs. 400 was not paid within three months, an additional sum of Rs. 100 was to be paid by the defendant. This settlement was not reduced to writing. The question for consideration is whether this arrangement is admissible in evidence. There is a further question whether the admission contained in the counter-statement of the plaintiff is not sufficient for the disposal of the case. On the first question I feel no doubt that the admission of this oral arrangement would contravene proviso 4 to section 92 of the Evidence Act. The effect of the arrangement is to alter the terms of the two documents in question and as the original documents were in writing and registered, oral evidence of the arrangement is within the mischief of proviso 4. The decision of this Court in Karampalli Unni Kurup v. Thekku Vittil Muthorakutti (2), which was followed by the learned Chief Justice and Benson, J., in Kattika Bapanamma v. Kattika Kristnamma (3), covers this point. Sitting with Kumaraswami Sastri, J., I acted on the principle enunciated in the above decisions [Namagiri Lakshmi Ammal v. Srinivasa Aiyangar (4)]. The contention of the learned Vakil for the respondent that the admission would not vary the document is unsupportable. The cases he drew our attention to all relate to actual payments under documents which discharged the liability thereunder. An agreement which in future will have the effect of putting an end to the liability must be regarded as a subsequent agreement modifying the original contract. I am in entire agreement with the view enunciated by Mr. Justice Boddam in Goseti Subba Row v. Varigonda Narasimham (5). The learned Judge says referring to, proviso 4 of section 92: "The words of the proviso are perfectly clear and, in my opinion, apply to any agreement, whether executory or executed." I am unable to see any justification in principle for not applying the proviso to all cases other than those in which there has been a perfected discharge by payment. I agree with Sadasiva Aiyar, J., on this question.

On the second question I felt doubts whether section 58 and the Chapter in which it appears should not be restricted to admissions in pleadings which do not contravene the express provisions as to the mode of proof contained in the other sections of the Evidence Act. At the same time, I realise the force of the learned Chief Justice's observation that the language of the section takes the facts admitted in the pleadings out of the category of proof altogether.

The rule of law enunciated in Slatterie v. Pooley (6), which accepted oral admissions of every kind as proving documents, has no doubt been departed from in India [See section 22 of the Evidence Act and sections 59 and 65 (b)]. It is open to argument that admissions in pleadings are in the nature of secondary evidence and that the prohibitions in section 22 applies equally to pleadings as well. Otherwise parties may compel a Court by statements in pleadings to pronounce judgment upon evidence which is not legally admissible. There is the further fact that, notwithstanding the admission in the pleadings, the Court may call upon the party to prove a fact. In such cases the proof must be restricted to the modes mentioned in the Act. It is, therefore, with hesitation that I agree in the conclusion arrived at by the learned Chief Justice on this point.

ORDER.—The lower Appellate Court has set aside an auction sale on the ground that the judgment-debtors had no saleable interest in the property at the date of the sale. The auction-purchaser is a stranger. Admittedly there is no second appeal in the case. Assuming that the conclusion of law arrived at by the Court below is wrong in law, this is no ground for revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code: Balakrishna v. Vasudeva Aiyar (1). Before prosecuting a person under section 264 A of the Madras District Municipalities Act for failure to comply with a notice issued under section 207 of the Act, it is not necessary that the Municipal Council should have called on him to provide moveable receptacles under section 217 or should have constructed the latrines themselves under section 264 (1).

The Public Prosecutor, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The notices, so far as they require persons having no backyards to their houses to provide latrines in their non-existing backyards, are clearly bad and we dismiss the appeals in which the respondents are owners of houses having no backyards. Criminal Appeal No. 176 of 1918 is also dismissed, the respondent being dead. It appears that the respondents in the 12 Appeals Nos. 158, 164 to 167, 171, 174, 175, 177, 181, 182 and 184 of 1918 do own backyards to their houses and could have complied with the notice issued under section 207 of the District Municipalities Act (Act IV of 1884) to provide latrines in their several backyards.

We are unable to follow the reasoning of the majority of the Bench that the Municipal Council ought to have called upon the accused to provide moveable receptacles under section 217 of the Act before proceeding to take action under section 264A. We are also unable to accept the arguments of the respondents' learned Vakil that the Municipal Council ought to have constructed the latrines themselves under section 264 (1) before prosecuting under section 264A for failure to comply with the notice under section 207. We are unable to find any such duty imposed by the Act on the Council as a necessary condition precedent to the institution of prosecutions under section 264A.

We, therefore, convict the respondents in these 12 appeals and impose a fine of one rupee on each of them, dismissing the other appeals.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Applicants.

The Government Pleader, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the Munsif of Hardoi, directing the prosecution of Ram

RAM ANUJ V. EMPEROR.

Anuj, Tilak and Baldi, the first named on charges under sections 193 and 209 and the latter on a charge under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code.

In 1917 Ram Anuj filed a suit against Likha Singh for the recovery of the price of bullocks alleged to have been sold in 1321 Fasli. The defence was that the bullocks had been purchased 6 or 7 years prior to the suit and that the price had been paid up. Baldi and Tilak gave evidence in that case, supporting the claim of Ram Anuj. On behalf of Likha Singh, Lone Singh was examined. The Small Cause Court, which tried that suit, decreed the claim.

Ram Anuj then filed a suit against Lone Singh, alleging that the latter had similarly purchased a bullock in 1321 Fasli. He was apparently confident that, Lone Singh having admitted in the suit against Likha Singh that both had purchased bullocks at the same time, and Likha Singh having failed to satisfy the Court, a decree against Lone Singh was certain to be passed. Lone Singh, however, succeeded in proving that at or about the time of the alleged purchase he was in jail. Fearing discomfiture, Ram Anuj applied for an amendment of the plaint but was unsuccessful. He thereupon withdrew the suit.

The Court then directed notices to issue to Ram Anuj to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for perjury and similar proceedings were subsequently taken against Tilak and Baldi also, with the result that their prosecution was ordered.

If the facts found by the Court below be taken to be correct, Ram Anuj would be prima facie chargeable with the perpetration of systematic fraud and perjury, and his witnesses, Tilak and Baldi, with giving false evidence in support of his claim against Likha Singh. The learned Counsel for the applicants contends that, so far as Tilak and Baldi were concerned, the commission of the alleged offence was not noticed by the Court till after the judicial proceeding in which it is said to have been committed was over. He relies on the decisions in Aiyakannu Pillai v. Emperor (1) and Begu Singh v. Emperor (2), wherein it was held that the power conferred by section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure could be exercised by the Court which tried the case only in the course of the judicial proceeding in which the alleged offence was committed or at its conclusion or so soon after it as to make it really a continuation of the same proceeding. Such a restricted interpretation does not seem, however, to be justified by the language of section 476 of the Code, for there is nothing in it to limit the exercise of that power within any period or at any particular time. The power can be exercised at any time when an offence is committed before a Court in a judicial proceeding, or when the commission of it is brought to its notice in the course of that judicial proceeding or in any other. The discovery of the commission of such an offence may not be brought to the notice of the Court, before which it was committed, till an enquiry is made in some cognate matter in any other judicial proceeding, and it would be stultifying the scope and intention of section 476 to hold that a Court would not be competent to deal with such a commission, unless a discovery is made in the judicial proceeding in which the offence was committed. In Girwar Prashad v. Emperor (3) it was accordingly held that the words "brought under its notice" were wide enough to cover an offence committed in another forum and on some previous occasion, but it must be an offence brought to the notice of the Court holding the enquiry. In Tilak Pandey v. Emperor (4) it was similarly held that there was nothing in section 476 to require a Court to take action, if at all, immediately after the conclusion of the case in which the offence was to have been committed or within any fixed time thereafter. In Lakshmidas Lalji, In re (5) a similar view was taken. The circumstances set forth by the Court below render an enquiry into the charges laid against the applicants eminently desirable. The application is rejected.

In a case of rioting where the dispute arises over the possession of a piece of land and the Crown admits the possession of the accused and the accused themselves, urge the plea of private defence, it is the duty of the Sessions Judge, to explain to the Assessors the legal aspect of the plea put forward by the accused, and to direct their attention to it by putting specific questions to them on the point. [p. 165, col. 2.]

In such a case general questions such as "Has the offence of rioting been proved against any of the accused?" are utterly insufficient. [p. 166, col. 1.]

Cases of rioting in which a plea of right of private defence is raised should be decided strictly on their own facts and previous decisions are only useful in so far as they indicate the general principles which may apply to an approximately similar set of facts. [p. 166, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Saran.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

MANUK, J.—The appellants, five in number, have been convicted at a trial held by the Sessions Judge of Saran with the aid of Assessors as follows:—

Sunder Bux Singh, appellant No. 1, has been convicted under sections 148 and 326 of the Indian Penal Code and been sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment under section 326, there being no separate sentence under the other section. The other four appellants, Ram Khelawan Singh, Rekha Singh, Ram Tahal Singh and Patti Singh, have been convicted under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment each. The common objects set out in the charge under section 148 were to enforce the right or supposed right of Sunder Bux to a field the gram crops of which Ghan-sham and Biran were harvesting and to assault them. In their appeal to this Court the learned Counsel on their behalf has raised an important question involving the right of private defence of both property and person, which calls for a narration of the facts in some detail. As the success or failure of such a plea invariably turns upon the facts found, it is necessary to clear the facts before we proceed further.

The case for the prosecution was that on the day in question, in the morning at 2 gharies after sunrise, Biran Singh, Prosecution Witness No. 1, and Ghansham Ahir, P. W. No. 2, were cutting gram in a field in Hakma village, which field Ghan-sham Ahir claims as his, when Sunder Bux, appellant No. 1, came with a mob of 16 or 17 persons, including the other four appellants before us, armed with various weapons, such as swords, garansas and lathis. Sunder Bux asked Ghansham why he was cutting the crops. Ghansham replied that he was cutting the crops because he held the field on batai under the surpesh-gidar and, on being requested to leave the field, Ghansham refused to do so. Sunder Bux and his companions then prepared to assault Ghansham and so the latter retreated a little way from the field. Sunder Bux then hit one Biran Singh, who was with Ghansham, with a sword on the left side of the head causing an incised injury, for which Biran was treated in hospital for over 20 days. The second appellant Ram Khelawan also hit Biran a slight blow with a gransa on the top of his head. Biran fell and received other injuries including a spear wound on the leg. Ghansham ran away and Biran remained lying in the field unconscious. When he recovered consciousness everyone had gone. According to the medical evidence, except the injury on the head which was severe all the other injuries were slight in nature.

The Crown case in the lower Court was somewhat different from the above version, which was really the case alleged by the private prosecutor. The Crown case was that besides Biran and Ghansham who were actually cutting the crops, there were also a number of men armed with weapons on their side in the field and that when Sunder Bux turned up with his party, a fight ensued in the course of which Beni Singh was killed by one of Ghansham's men and Sunder Bux and Ram Tahal, the two appellants before us, were assaulted and received several injuries, whilst on the other side Biran received the injuries mentioned above.

With regard to the possession of the field there was also a complete conflict between the case of the private prosecutor and the case of the Crown. Into the details of that dispute it is not necessary for us to go, for it has been found by the learned Sessions Judge, and accepted by the Crown here as it was in the lower Court, that Sunder Bux had all along been in possession both de jure and de facto of the field in question up to the morning of the occurrence, when Ghansham's party unlawfully trespassed upon the field in the absence of Sunder Bux and began to get the crops cut.

The defence version of the occurrence may best be stated by quoting Sunder Bux's own first information in the counter-case lodged at Garkta Thana at 11.30 in the morning of the 23rd March, on which date the occurrence took place. A summary of that report is as follows:—

At about 2 gharies after sunrise on the 23rd March he was informed by his nephew Ram Khelawan, one of the appellants, that Ghansham, Biran, Narsingh and Din Dayal were cutting his gram crop, so he went there alone to remonstrate. They threatened to kill him so he returned to the village and then came back to the field with his servant Beni Singh (subsequently killed in the riot) and with Rekha Singh son of Beni and Ram Khelawan, his nephew. He saw a number of men, including one Ram Kishun Singh, armed with various deadly weapons sitting upon the eastern boundary of the field. He asked them why they were getting his field looted; Ghansham then assaulted Sunder Bux with a lathi; then Beni Singh pushed Sunder Bux aside and remonstrated with the people. The mob on the Bundh stood up and Ram Kishun Singh ran up and struck Beni with a garasa on the left side of the neck and killed him on the spot. The assailants then ran away.

It is important to mention here that the Thana is $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the place of occurrence, which in its turn is something under a mile from the village in which the appellants reside. It is also an admitted fact that Sunder Bux, after seeing the prosecution party on his field interfering with his crops, sent one Mohit, Chonkidar of the village, to the Thana with a report of what was going on. That report was recorded by Muhammad Rafique, Writer Head Constable, a witness in this case, at 10.30 that morning in the Station Diary. No explanation of his somewhat dilatory journey has been elicited. It appears that the Writer Head Constable with two constables then proceeded to the spot and on the way met Sunder Bux, Reka and Ram Khelawan with the corpse of Beni Singh. The Writer Head Constable took the party back to the Thana and recorded Sunder Bux's first information report at 11.30 at the Thana. The counter-first information was not recorded till 8 o'clock that night.

In this conflict of the evidence with regard to the incidents of the actual occurrence which led to a serious breach of the public tranquillity and to the death of one man and the causing of grievous injuries to several others, we expected some assistance from the findings and conclusions arrived at by the learned Sessions Judge who had the advantage of hearing the witnesses and appreciating their truthfulness, but on turning to the judgment for assistance on this point we are much disappointed to find that the judgment in this respect was of little or no use to this Court in helping it to come to a conclusion on the facts. It is obvious that if possession is once conceded, as it has been conceded, and was conceded at the trial in the Sessions Court, to the appellants, the findings of fact on the sequence of events which led up to the occurrence are of the utmost importance in deciding the question of law as to whether the appellants were protected by the provisions of the Code with regard to the exercise of their right of private defence of property, or person, or both. The learned Sessions Judge has no doubt in one part of his judgment discussed in a superficial manner this question of the right of private defence. He observes:—"Now I am of opinion that Sunder Bux was not justified in his collecting a number of men in this way, and in going to the field in order to prevent the crop from being cut. The Thana was close at hand (about a mile or $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles away)." He then proceeds to say that as Sunder Bux had sent Mohit Chowkidar to the Thana, he should certainly have awaited the arrival of the Police, and further that as the Police arrived on the scene shortly afterwards and only a very small quantity of gram was actually cut, Sunder Bux was not justified in acting as he did. Now, these general observations are of no use when it is first necessary, as we have said, to come to precise findings both with regard to the sequence of events and the part played by each party to the occurrence.

Getting no assistance from the learned Sessions Judge's judgment, we appealed to the learned Government Pleader, who finds himself in the difficult position of being compelled to admit that it is impossible from the judgment to gather what are the findings of facts so important to the decision of the question of the right of private defence. He, therefore, invited us to enter into the evidence of the witnesses and constitute ourselves a Court of first instance in order to supplement the judgment of the lower Court. We have heard those portions of the evidence which he wished to place before us, read out, but they gave us little or no assistance having regard to the admitted fact that the witnesses from whom they come are obviously witnesses of untruth. They come to support a totally false story of Ghansham's possession. The Crown itself has had to reject their version on this point. Their narrative of the events both before and during the occurrence is unconvincing and their attempt to fix upon Sunder Bux, the principal accused, the only serious injury caused to one of their party is, to say the least of it, extremely suspicious. We, therefore, deem it highly dangerous to accept their evidence as a basis for our findings. Nor would it be fair to the appellants to do so, having regard to the fact that the learned Sessions Judge has, so far as we can gather, preferred the version given by Sunder Bux himself in his first information report. I say "so far as we can gather" advisedly, because even this is not clear from the judgment. He has used it as against the appellant Sunder Bux for another purpose, but, as the learned Judge nowhere indicates that he does not accept this version, we are of opinion that it is only fair and proper for us to accept it as the foundation for our findings. It is in any case the most reliable evidence to act on in this record.

Failing to get any assistance from the learned Government Pleader through no fault of his, for he has, in his usual courteous, fair and able manner helped us to the best of his ability, we were anxious to know what the Assessors had thought of the evidence on the important questions of fact involved in the case. On turning, however, to the record of their opinion to be found at the head of the judgment, we were once again disappointed to find that though they were asked numerous questions, nothing specific as to the incidents of the occurrence had been put to them and that, therefore, they, as laymen, had naturally floundered in the generalities of such questions as "are any of the accused persons guilty of any offence?" "Is the offence of rioting proved against any of the accused?" Now, whatever may be said as to the sufficiency of these general questions in an ordinary case of rioting, there can be no two questions that they are utterly insufficient in a rioting case in which the Crown has admitted the possession of the accused and the accused themselves have strenuously urged the plea of private defence. It should be remembered by the Sessions Judges of our province that Assessors are laymen to whom the niceties of the law of private defence are a sealed book. Without assistance, in the shape of specific questions, concerning the facts upon which the law will turn, they would naturally, in answer to questions such as I have quoted above, reply, as they have replied: "It appears to me proved that he committed rioting." "In my opinion all the accused persons are guilty." These are verbatim extracts from the record of their replies. It is, however, interesting to see that in spite of the absence of any assistance from the learned Judge, one of the Assessors undoubtedly had at the back of his mind a dimly conscious feeling that merely because there had been a breach of the public tranquillity and people had been injured, it did not follow that the accused, were, in the circumstances of this case, guilty. To the question: "Is the offence of rioting proved against any of these accused?" the first Assessor answered as follows: "Sunder Bux Singh collected a mob for his own field." There is a distinct indication in that answer that the Assessor was of opinion that the mob had been collected not necessarily with an unlawful common object but in order to protect the property of Sunder Bux. That answer should have given the learned Sessions Judge a clue to what was working in the mind of the Assessor, namely, a desire to be instructed as to the facts on which the question of the guilt of the accused, in the circumstances of the case, might turn. But instead of welcoming this indication the next question the learned Sessions Judge put was: "Is it proved that Sunder Bux Singh committed rioting?" And the answer was only what one might expect. "It appears to me that he committed rioting." It is difficult to see how the Assessor could have got out of giving this answer having regard to what he had just said, namely, "Sunder Bux Singh collected a mob for his own field." Speaking for myself, I hold very strong views about the duties of Sessions Judges as regards the questions they should put to the Assessors, especially in cases of this class where the eventual decision turns on a mixed question of fact and law. I speak from personal experience in a case conducted in this province before a learned Sessions Judge and Assessors in which the accused raised a plea of the right of private defence. The Assessors, who were ignorant of the law of private defence, were asked general questions. Their replies were in the same general terms unfavourable to the accused. On my pressing the learned Sessions Judge to expound to them even shortly what the position would be having regard to the provisions of the law of private defence or to put them more specific questions, he readily acceded, with the result that the Assessors immediately turned round and said that in that case they found the accused not guilty. It is, therefore, that I have entered into this question at some length in the hope that these observations from this Court will bear fruit.

To turn to the case itself, the only question that remains is to decide whether, even accepting the first information report of Sunder Bux as the true version of the occurrence, it is open to the accused to successfully raise the plea of the right of private defence of property or person, or both. Mr. Sinha, for the appellants, has strenuously urged that Sunder Bux did all he possibly could do and showed great forbearance, although confronted with a dishonest and criminal interference with his rights; that he sent information to the Thana and that it was not his fault that before the Thana authorities arrived on the scene a breach of the public tranquillity was forced on his party. The learned Government Pleader on the other hand has equally strenuously urged that it behoved Sunder Bux to wait quietly in his village before taking any steps and to wait on, apparently for an indefinite amount of time, until the Police authorities arrived. He, therefore, argues that the appellants are barred by section 99, clause (3), of the Indian Penal Code from raising the question of the right of private defence. Now, cases in which this question is raised must be decided strictly on their own facts and previous decisions are only useful in so far as they indicate the general principles which may apply to an approximately similar set of facts. No hard and fast rule can be laid down and the boundary line is often so fine that a single circumstance may turn the scales either in favour or against the party asserting this right. The answer to the learned Government Pleader's contention in my opinion is that if Sunder Bux, after sending information to the Thana, had quietly remained in the village till the Thana authorities appeared, it was more than possible that those who trespassed on his field would have carried away the whole or a portion of his crops before the authorities could arrive. He was, therefore, justified in collecting his men and arming them, if necessary, sufficiently to prevent the crops being removed from his field in the event of the Police not arriving in time.

The next question is, and this to my mind is the crucial question in the case, what happened when Sunder Bux and his party arrived on the field? As I have said, we accept the version given by Sunder Bux in his first information report, even as the learned Judge has apparently accepted it. That being so, we find that when he arrived on the field with his party, Sunder Bux asked the trespassers why they were getting his field looted. This was a perfectly legitimate question for him to put. On this Ghansham immediately assaulted him with a lathi. We are of opinion that the moment this assault on Sunder Bux took place, the right of private defence of person certainly and of property as well probably immediately arose and that for the subsequent events the prosecution party in this case is to be held entirely and solely responsible. Had Sunder Bux on reaching the field immediately ordered his party to assault the trespassers, I might not have been disposed, speaking for myself, to accede to the plea of the right of private defence having yet arisen; but the circumstances here are entirely different. The quarrel was forced on Sunder Bux, when he went merely to protect a possession which was his. He was, therefore, entitled, if violence was used, to meet violence with violence and there is nothing whatever to indicate that he would not have been prepared to wait for the arrival of the Police, if the initial violence had not proceeded from the prosecution party. Had the Thana been further away or public authority more difficult of access, I would have been prepared to hold that Sunder Bux had a right to drive the trespassers from his fields provided he did not exceed that right.

Under these circumstances we are of opinion that the convictions and sentences in this case must be set aside and we hereby do so; and direct that the appellants be immediately released or discharged from their bail.

I desire to add one more word, on the question of the sentences. In the counter-case (Criminal Appeal No. 120 of 1918) in which my learned brother has just delivered judgment, with which judgment I am in entire agreement, the learned Sessions Judge imposed sentences of two years' rigorous imprisonment on each of the only two persons who were convicted out of the 17 persons put on trial. We find it difficult to appreciate the learned Judge's methods of apportioning sentences. On the side of Sunder Bux one man was killed, as I have said, two others received several injuries. On the other side only one man had a severe injury. Possession of the field lay admittedly with Sunder Bux, and on the learned Judge's own findings the riot which occurred originated with the wrongful acts of Ghansham and his party. Yet we find that in this case the learned Sessions Judge has thought fit to sentence one of the appellants to three years' rigorous imprisonment and the others to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment each. It is sufficient to say that these sentences, in our opinion, are, even if the accused could not have successfully pleaded the right of private defence owing to some technicality, much too severe and based upon a complete misappreciation of the extreme and sustained provocation which the accused in this case received.

ATKINSON, J.—I concur.

Convictions and Sentences set aside.

A charge of criminal breach of trust of a sum of money can be tried under section 235 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, at the same time with one of falsification of accounts made to conceal the act of misappropriation as part of the same transaction, but a charge of criminal breach of trust cannot be legally tried together with one of falsification relating to a distinct act of misappropriation committed in a separate transaction. [p. 169, cols. 1 & 2.]

Emperor v. Jiban Krishna Bagchi, 20 Ind. Cas. 412; 40 C. 318; 14 Cr. L. J. 426, followed.

The accused was jointly tried of offences falling under six different charges, viz.:

(1) Criminal breach of trust of a sum during the period 17th September 1914 to 25th March 1915.

(2) Criminal breach of trust of a sum during the period 26th March 1915 to 31st March 1916.

(3) Criminal breach of trust of a sum during the period 1st April to 31st May 1916.

(4) Criminal breach of trust of a sum during the period 1st June 1916 to 9th October 1916.

(5) Preparation of a false balance sheet of the Lahore Electric Supply Company for the year ending 31st March 1915.

(6) Preparation of a false balance sheet for the year ending 31st March 1916; and was acquitted. Government preferred an appeal to the Chief Court against the acquittal.

Held, (1) that charges (1) and (5) could have been tried together, because the preparation of the false balance sheet for the year ending 31st March 1915 was effected to conceal the criminal breach of trust which had been committed during the period ending 25th March 1915; [p. 169, col. 2.]

(2) that similarly charges (2) and (6) could have been tried together and charges (4) and (5) could also have been tried together in one trial, as they related to two offences of the same kind committed within the space of 12 months; [p. 169, col. 2.]

(3) but that the trial of all six charges in one trial was contrary to section 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code and was quite illegal; [p. 169, col. 2.]

(4) that charge (2) contravened section 222, Criminal Procedure Code, and the trial of that charge was in itself quite illegal; [p. 169, col. 2.]

Subrahmanya Ayyar v. King-Emperor, 25 M. 61; 11 M. L. J. 233; 3 Bom. L. R. 540; 28 I. A. 257; 5 C. W. N. 866; 2 Weir 271; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 160 (P. C.), followed.

(5) that the Court before the commencement of the trial should have recorded an order to the effect that it was trying such and such charge or charges and should have proceeded to take all the evidence relating thereto, the trials should have been quite distinct and the accused should have been apprised as to which charges were being tried in each trial and the opinions of the Assessors should have been recorded separately in each; [p. 169, col. 2; p. 170, col. 1.]

(6) that it would not be fair to the accused, who had been acquitted, to order a retrial simply because the trial was illegal on account of misjoinder of charges, unless the Court was satisfied that the order of acquittal was obviously erroneous or was not one which should be maintained owing to the trial

Court having omitted to consider material evidence for some other sufficient reason; [p. 170, col. 1.]

(7) that the onus was on the prosecution to prove affirmatively that the accused received any sums beyond those entered by him as having been received; [p. 171, col. 2.]

(8) that it could not on the evidence be said for certain that the accused was in charge of all the money received by the Company; [p. 172, col. 2; p. 174, col. 1.]

(9) that in view of all these facts it was not one of those exceptional cases where, supposing the trial had been legal, the Chief Court would reverse the order and convict the accused and that, therefore, a retrial should not be ordered. [p. 174, col. 2.]

One of the cardinal principles of cases based upon circumstantial evidence is that in order to justify the inference of guilt, the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other hypothesis other than that of his guilt. Appeal from the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated the 29th October 1917, acquitting the respondent.

Lala Mul Chand, R. S., Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Mr. Ganpat Rai, for the Electric Supply Company, Lahore, Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi and Mr. Haq Nawaz and Lala Raghu Nath Sahai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the Crown from the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahore, acquitting the accused Jagat Ram of four separate charges of criminal breach of trust under section 403, Indian Penal Code, and of one charge of falsification of accounts under section 477A, Indian Penal Code. The facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment of the learned Additional Sessions Judge and from the evidence of Mr. Robinson, late Secretary of the Lahore Electric Supply Company, recorded by the Committing Magistrate and of Mr. Ganguly (P. W. No. 15), and it is unnecessary for us to repeat them.

The first ground taken by Mr. Mul Chand on behalf of the Crown is, that the joint trial of all the offences together was illegal and in particular that the charge relating to criminal breach of trust covering a period from the 25th March 1915 to the 31st March 1916, a period exceeding one year, is contrary to the provisions of section 222, Criminal Procedure Code. The Sessions Judge in his judgment says that there were six charges, and not five as appears from the record, the extra one being a second charge under section 477A, Indian Penal

EMPEROR V. JAGAT RAM.

Code, and relating to the falsification of balance sheet of the 31st March 1916, and that in all of these charges evidence was taken together with the consent of Counsel on both sides. There is, however, nothing on the record to show that there were separate trials and that the evidence was recorded in one of them. What is apparent from the record is that there was really one and only one trial. The charges framed by the Committing Magistrate were, as stated by the Sessions Judge, as follows:—

(1) Criminal breach of trust of the sum of Rs. 2,948-6-0 during the period 17th September 1914 to 25th March 1915;

(2) criminal breach of trust of the sum of Rs. 10,069-9-1 during the period 26th March 1915 to 31st March 1916;

(3) criminal breach of trust of the sum of Rs. 3,447-1-9 during the period 1st April to 31st June 1916 (sic);

(4) criminal breach of trust of the sum of Rs. 2,225-14-9 during the period 1st June 1916 to 9th October 1916;

(5) preparation of false balance sheet of the Lahore Electric Supply Company for the year ending 31st March 1915;

(6) preparation of a false balance sheet for the year ending 31st March 1916. There is, however, no such charge as this last one upon the record and none appears to have been framed by the Committing Magistrate.

At the end of the trial it appears from the record that Counsel for the Crown stated that the charge under section 477A actually framed ought to have had reference to the balance sheet for the year ending 31st March 1916 and not for the previous year, but in spite of this the Court made no amendment of the charge. It also omitted to amend charge No. 3. There is no such date in the calendar as 31st June 1916 and it is explained, and is quite clear, that the date ought to have been 31st May 1915. It is to be regretted that the Court below did not carefully scrutinize the charges at the commencement of the trial and amend them where necessary. Now it was held in Emperor v. Jiban Krishna Bagchi (1) that a charge of criminal breach of trust of a sum of money can be tried under section 235 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, at the same time with one of falsification of accounts made to conceal the act of misappropriation as parts of the same transaction, but that a charge of criminal breach of trust cannot be legally tried together with one of falsification relating to a distinct act of misappropriation committed in a separate transaction. In accordance with this authority it is clear that charges Nos 1 and 5 could have been tried together, because the preparation of the false balance sheet for the year ending 31st March 1915 is said to have been effected to conceal the criminal breach of trust which had been committed for the period ending 25th March 1915. Similarly charges Nos. 2 and 6 could have been tried together, and charges Nos. 4 and 5 could also have been tried in one trial, as they related to two offences of the same kind committed within the space of twelve calendar months, but the trial of all six charges in one trial was contrary to section 234, Criminal Procedure Code, and was quite illegal. Moreover, charge No. 2 contravenes section 222, Criminal Procedure Code, and the trial of this charge was in itself quite illegal. See the well-known judgment of the Privy Council reported as Subrahmanya Ayyar v. King-Emperor (2).

The Court before the commencement of the trial should have recorded an order to the effect that it was trying such and such a charge or charges, and should then have proceeded to take all the evidence relating thereto. Thereafter it should have taken up one of the other charges or set of charges and the evidence of witnesses already taken in the first case, so far as it was material to the second one, could have been read over and put in with the consent of Counsel, and any fresh evidence specially bearing upon the charge or charges then being tried should have been taken. Similarly with the third case, but the trials should have been quite distinct, and the accused should have been apprised as to which charges were being tried in each trial, and the opinions of the Assessors should have been recorded separately in each.

Mr. Mul Chand suggested that without going into the merits of the case we should set aside the trial as illegal and order a re-trial, but we considered that it would not be fair to the accused who has been acquitted to do this, unless we were first satisfied that the Court's order of acquittal was obviously erroneous, or was not one which should be maintained owing to its having omitted to consider material evidence or for some other sufficient reason. In this connection we have borne in mind the principles enunciated in King-Emperor v. Chatter Singh (31), the leading authority of this Court on the subject of appeals from orders of acquittal. We have, therefore, heard lengthy arguments on the merits, and after long and anxious consideration have come to the conclusion that this is not one of those exceptional cases where a High Court should interfere with an order of acquittal. In addition to bearing in mind the principles in King-Emperor v. Chatter Singh (3), we cannot in the present case, lose sight of the fact that the Judge who presided over the trial was an officer of wide experience in accounts, having recently been Liquidation Judge in Lahore for several years, and that his opinion coincided with that unanimously expressed by three intelligent and well-educated Assessors one at least of whom, Mr. Framji, is a merchant.

Briefly the charge against the accused is that he, when accountant and treasurer or cashier in the employment of the Lahore Electric Supply Company, committed criminal breach of trust in respect of the sums of money set forth in the charges, and that in order to conceal his misappropriations he framed or assisted in framing false balance sheets. The method in which the money was misappropriated is described with great clearness in the evidence of the late Secretary, Mr. Robinson, recorded by the Committing Magistrate and in that of Mr. Ganguly (P. W. No. 15) and in the latter's report, Exhibit P. W. No. 8. When the balance sheet had to be prepared for the years ending 31st March 1915 and 1916 respectively, there was a difference between the cash balance as appearing in the Company's general ledger and in the pass book of the Bank of Bengal, and this had to be reconciled. All money was sent or was supposed to be sent to the Bank of Bengal up to the 31st May 1916. After that date the Company dealt with the Punjab National Bank, and on this account two charges have been framed in regard to the misappropriations said to have occurred between the 1st June 1916 and 9th October 1916. Mr. Ganguly's evidence and report explain very clearly how the balance as appearing in the Company's books was reconciled with that shown in the Bank pass book.

The first and most important question in the case is, who had charge of the money and cheques received from consumers of energy and other debtors of the Electric Supply Company. The accused, Jagat Ram, was appointed accountant in March 1914. At that time one Jiwan Ram was treasurer and his services were dispensed with a few months later owing to certain defalcations in cash and stores belonging to the Company. He used to receive all payments and give receipts, but under the new system inaugurated after his dismissal the receipt clerk Gian Chand, P. W. No. 4, received payments and gave receipts. He entered these payments in the energy and his miscellaneous cash registers, from which the general cash register and the general ledger were prepared. The general cash register was prepared by various clerks in the office and the general ledger was prepared by the Secretary. None of these registers were in the charge of the accused. The allegation of the prosecution is that Gian Chand on the evening of each day, or at latest on the morning of the following day, took the amount received by him to the accused who sent it, or should have sent it, to the Bank along with the paying-in-slips. Gian Chand and his successor, Charan Das, who relieved him on the 16th April 1916, say that they always paid the whole amount, and gave all the cheques received by them, to the accused and kept nothing in their own possession. It has, however, come out in the evidence that money was often spent by them out of the current income in order to meet current expenses and also that they did not always hand over the money to the accused on the day of receipt. They were recouped for the sums thus spent by them by Company's cheques, and these they say were made over to the accused who should have paid them into the Bank. It is, however, admitted that they were not so recouped till some days later, and it is, therefore, obvious that the total daily receipts could not have been made over daily to the accused, and if partial receipts were made over to him, one would certainly have expected to find that he would have given some acknowledgments to the receipt clerks. He might, for instance, have initialled in the receipt counterfoil books or in the cash registers the items actually received by him, but he never acknowledged anything in writing at all.

It was said that when he took the money and cheques from the receipt clerks he compared the amounts with the registers kept up by the latter, but if so, why did he not sign in them in token of having received them? The evidence as to whether he compared the receipts with the entries in any register is conflicting. Rai Bahadur Narinjan Das, Managing Director, P. W. No. 1, says that he used to see accused making comparisons with the entries in some books, but his evidence on the point is not very definite and Hans Raj, P. W. No. 5, says that he used to see Gian Chand paying over the money to the accused but that no book or register was shown to the latter at the time.

Now what the accused says is that the receipt clerk brought him so much money in cash and cheques, and he entered particulars thereof on the paying-in-slips and then sent the money and slips to the Bank. He came to know that the monies paid to him by the receipt clerks were not all that they had received up to date. This he reported to the Secretary who, he says, told him that the receipt clerks could not make over the full amount of the day's receipts to him as they had to spend out of the current income. He told accused that he himself was responsible and that accused need not worry. He also says that he made entries on the back of the paying-in slips in accordance with the statements made to him by the receipt clerks and with the permission of the Secretary. These notes at first were made in ink and stated that the remittances were of receipts up to such and such date, but after some time they were made in pencil and merely showed that the receipts of certain dates were still outstanding. These pencil notes were of the following sort, e. g., O. 25, 26, which meant that the receipts of the 25th and 26th of the current month were still outstanding. A great deal has been said about these notes in argument, and it has been contended that they are a clear indication of the accused's guilt. There is, however, a good deal to be said for the lower Court's view that it is not likely that the accused, if misappropriating the money, would have kept the record of his defalcations on the back of the paying-in-slips which were subsequently sent to the Bank and open to everybody's inspection. In our opinion, the accused's object in making these entries on the slips might have been to shew that he was not responsible for anything more than the sums actually sent to the Bank. The entries are in a sense his acknowledgments of having received the amounts entered in the slips and nothing more from the receipt clerk.

We agree with Mr. Shafi, Counsel for the accused, who has argued that the onus was on the prosecution to prove affirmatively that the accused received any sums beyond those entered by him in the slips. The evidence of Rai Bahadur Lala Narinjan Das and other prosecution witnesses that they used to see monies being counted over to the accused is quite compatible with his statement that he only received the sums entered in the slips and forwarded by him to the Bank. There is no evidence on the record that he received more than these sums beyond that of the receipt clerks, and as the learned Sessions Judge remarks: "They have to save themselves and are, therefore, highly interested witnesses." It has been urged by Mr. Mool Chand that at first, when the amount withheld by the receipt clerk was small, the accused might have thought that things were all right, but that when the amount reached Rs. 13,000 odd at the end of March 1916 he must have suspected something to be wrong. The accused says that about the end of September 1914 the receipt clerk did not bring any money for some days for remitting to the Bank, and that he brought this matter to the notice of the Secretary who, as already noted, replied that as the receipt clerk was authorized to spend from the daily collections, he could not remit the complete amount unless he was recouped. The Secretary further told him that he would himself check the accounts from time to time and would take over charge of the general ledger and the Bank pass book. Accused says that again in October 1914 he brought to the notice of the Manager and the Secretary that the receipt clerk was not regular in sending the amounts of payments to the Bank. He says that the Secretary also told him that it was his (the Secretary's) duty to see whether the amounts were going regularly to the Bank or not. Mr. Robinson denies that he had any such conversation with the accused, but as there appear to be good grounds for considering that either he or the accused was privy to the embezzlement, it is the word of Mr. Robinson against that of the accused, and the evidence of the former must, therefore, be received with great caution. If the accused did bring this matter of short remittances to the Secretary's notice as he says he did and was answered as he says he was, there was no need for him to worry further in the matter even where the amount held back by the receipt clerk became large. He says that he was never appointed cashier or treasurer of the Company, and he was certainly never shown as such in the list of the employees of the Company and no security was ever taken from him. Rai Bahadur Lala Narinjan Das no doubt says that he had to perform the duties of the cashier, but he was also forced to admit that specific duties were not assigned to the various employees of the Company. Charan Das says that he was appointed treasurer in March 1916, but he never took over the duties of the treasurer because he could not give the security demanded of him. It is extraordinary that the accused should have been allowed to remain as treasurer without security being demanded from him. He kept none of the registers which we should have expected him to keep had he really had charge of, and been responsible for, all money received by the Company. In our opinion it cannot on the evidence be said for certain that the accused was in charge of all the money so received.

We next proceed to consider what are called the reconciliation statements, and Mr. Mul Chand has stated repeatedly in his argument that they furnished the main reason for considering accused's guilt to be proved. These statements were prepared in connection with the annual balance sheet of the Company and the object of them was to reconcile the balance as appearing in the Company's general ledger with that shown in the pass book of the Bank of Bengal. It was necessary to prepare these statements in any case, because even if there had been no misappropriations at all, the balance shown in the Company's ledger would not correspond with that shown in the Bank pass book on any particular date because

(1) there would be outstanding cheques drawn by the Company in favour of their creditors and not yet presented to the Bank to be cashed, and

(2) there would be remittances of cheques made to the Bank and not yet credited because of non-realization. It is admitted that such cheques were not credited until after realization. These reconciliation statements show remittances of certain dates as in transit to the Bank when in fact there had been no such remittances. Mr. Mul Chand asks, why did accused show that the amount of certain remittances should be added to the balance when, according to his own statement, he knew the amount represented receipts of certain dates which were still in the hands of the receipt clerks which had not yet been remitted at all. Mr. Robinson explained that the entry should really have been "collections" and not "remittances." Now as a matter of fact up to 31st March 1915 and 1916, respectively, certain remittances had been made to the Bank of Bengal which had not yet been credited in the pass book. The actual amount misappropriated as on those dates was considerably less than the amount shown as remittances of certain specified dates not yet credited by the Bank,

EMPEROR V. JAGAT RAM.

The entry in the reconciliation statement should really have been neither 'remittances' nor 'collections'. Part of the deficiency consisted of remittances actually made but not yet credited, and the rest represented collections actually made but not yet remitted to the Bank. A mere misdescription of this sort in these statements would not necessarily be dishonest or fraudulent. What, however, does appear to be dishonest in them is that in their preparation certain sums representing the exact amount of defalcation as on those dates were taken into credit twice over (see in this connection Mr. Ganguly's report, Exhibit P. W. 8). To put it shortly, the amounts shown as remittances to the Bank but not yet credited include sums which had been really credited by the Bank. The crux of the whole matter really is, "who prepared these statements?" Now the learned Sessions Judge is wrong in thinking that both were in the handwriting of Mr. Robinson. That of 1915 is in his handwriting, but that of 1916 is in that of the accused. Mr. Robinson says that he prepared the statement of 1915 in accordance with the figures supplied to him by the accused which he did not check, whereas the accused says that he wrote out that for 1916 under the instructions of Mr. Robinson; in other words, each wants to shift the responsibility to the other. Now these statements were prepared, as already stated, in connection with the annual balance sheets. These latter were prepared by the Secretary and he was primarily responsible for their correctness. It was, therefore, incumbent upon him to reconcile the balance as appearing in the Company's ledger with that appearing in the Bank pass book, and it can hardly be believed that he left this duty entirely to the accused. He certainly should not have done so. He himself maintained and kept in his possession the general ledger, and Mr. Ganguly has stated (see page 172 of the record) that the reconciliation statement for 1916 could have been prepared without reference to the paying-in-slips as the necessary information could be gathered from the general ledger and the Bank pass book. Mr. Mul Chand urged that this was wrong and that no one could have prepared the statement without reference to the paying-in-slips. We have carefully examined the general ledger and we find that both the reconciliation statements could easily have been prepared by a reference to it and the Bank pass book. No reference to the paying-in-slips was necessary for the preparation of these statements. None of the books which had to be used in their preparation were in the custody of the accused. All of them were with the Secretary. The statement of 1915 is in his handwriting and every item is tick-marked by him. We see no reason why we should assume that the accused must have had the chief hand in its preparation. Once it is admitted that Mr. Robinson prepared the reconciliation statement for the period ending 31st March 1915, it is not difficult to hold that he probably prepared that for the period ending 31st March 1916 also, even though it is in the handwriting of the accused. It is certainly not shown beyond doubt that the accused prepared either of these statements and the probabilities, in our opinion, point to the view that Mr. Robinson prepared them. It, therefore, appears to us that these reconciliation statements, upon which Mr. Mul Chand has laid such very great stress, do not at all necessarily shew that the accused must either have been guilty of the misappropriations or have abetted the misappropriations. No doubt the accused or Mr. Robinson was privy to the embezzlements, but the facts, as appearing from the evidence, cannot be said to be inconsistent upon any reasonable hypothesis with the theory of the accused's innocence.

Another point upon which some stress was laid by Mr. Mul Chand was the accused's conduct when first taxed with the deficiency. The deficiency with which he was taxed was that relating to the period between the 1st June and the 9th October 1916. The amount entered in the charge relating to this period represents short remittances made to the Punjab National Bank, and the accused who was ill at the time and absent from duty was made to pay it up. He did so under protest. He is said to have stated at first that there must have been some mistake in the books and that he would see to it when he returned to office. He did not at that time disclaim all responsibility and say that the cash was not in his charge at all. What he said at that time rests mainly upon the evidence of Mr. Robinson and the receipt clerks who are interested witnesses, but in any case we do not think very much stress should be laid upon the accused's conduct at that time. He was ill and absent from the office and was faced with a very serious charge. It is quite possible that he got frightened and in that condition made the statements ascribed to him.

The matter to which the learned Sessions Judge might have given more attention is this, that after the 31st March 1916 no pencil notes were made on the back of the paying-in-slips by the accused. He should, in our opinion, have been asked why he ceased to make those notes. He also should have been asked whether, when Charan Das took over the duties of the receipt clerk from Gian Chand on the 16th April 1916, he informed him that the collections of certain dates were still outstanding and asked him to look into the matter. Accused made good the amount outstanding in the accounts of the Punjab National Bank, but he did so under protest and his conduct in doing so certainly does not prove anything against him.

The main charges relate to the embezzlement of Rs. 16,000 odd which should have been, but was not, paid into the Bank of Bengal. We cannot hold that it is proved beyond all reasonable doubt that the accused must have embezzled all this money, or have been privy to the embezzlement. It is not, in our opinion, proved, as we have stated above, that the accused had charge of all the monies paid into the Company. The other evidence on the record is purely circumstantial, and one of the cardinal principles of cases based upon circumstantial evidence is that in order to justify the inference of guilt, the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. See Wills on Circumstantial Evidence, 6th Edition, page 311. In our opinion, so far as the evidence goes, we consider it just as likely that the embezzlements were committed by the receipt clerks with the connivance of the Secretary, Mr. Robinson, as that they were committed by the accused with or without the help or connivance of any one else. In addition to this we cannot ignore the facts that an experienced Judge and three educated Assessors have concurred in holding that the accused's guilt is not proved and that the accused has been acquitted. We are very clear that this is not one of those exceptional cases where, supposing the trial had been legal, we should reverse the order and convict the accused, and in these circumstances we decline to order a retrial.

We feel it to be our duty before closing this judgment to say that the commission of the frauds and the apparent impossibility of bringing responsibility home with certainty to any one were due to the utter lack of system in the affairs of the Company and to the want of supervision in the office. The Secretary at the end of each financial year should have counted the cash and cheques in the hands of the persons who had charge of them, and he could then easily have seen whether there was any deficiency in the balance in their hands. If Mr. Robinson was not himself a party to the frauds, he obviously exercised no supervision at all over his subordinates in the office. Had he exercised any, he could not have failed to discover the frauds which would have been nipped in the bud. It is also clear that Pandit Balak Ram (P. W. No. 13) of the firm of Messrs. Basant Ram and Sons, Auditors, must have performed his duty of auditing the accounts of the Company in an extremely perfunctory manner. He audited the accounts of the Company for the years ending the 31st March 1915 and 1916, and yet he failed to discover anything amiss. He saw that there was a difference between the balance as appearing in the books of the Company and in the pass book of the Bank of Bengal, and he saw how this difference was reconciled. It was perfectly easy for him to see by a careful examination of the general ledger and other registers whether the reconciliation statements were correct or not, but he apparently accepted the explanation of the employees of the Company without making any thorough examination on his own account.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Gaya.

Mr. Muhammad Hasan Jan, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Panchanan Banerji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In consequence of an information lodged before the Police on the 13th January 1918 by one Musammat Chamela, the house occupied by the petitioner Badrul Hasan, his son Nurul Hasan and the petitioner Musammat Haku, the wife of Nurul Hasan, was searched and a quantity of jewellery and one 10 rupee note, which were claimed by the prosecutrix Chamela, were seized by the Police. Subsequently Nurul Hasan was arrested while going along a road in Gaya town and a sum of Rs. 230 in currency notes was found upon his person. This sum of money was also seized by the Police and sent to the Magistrate along with the other property. Nurul Hasan and Badrul Hasan were then prosecuted on a charge under section 411, Indian Penal Code, but Nurul Hasan having died after the commitment enquiry Badrul Hasan alone was prosecuted before the Sessions Court. He was acquitted on the 7th March 1918, on the ground that it had not been established that there had been any theft or dishonest retention of stolen property. Thereupon an application was made to the Sessions Judge by Badrul Hasan and Musammat Haku, who claimed to have succeeded to the estate of Nurul Hasan, for an order to deliver to them the currency notes of the value of Rs. 230 which were found upon Nurul Hasan's person. The Sessions Judge refused the application and directed the petitioners to apply to the Magistrate. The petitioners applied to the Magistrate, but upon objection being made by the prosecutrix Musammat Chamela the Magistrate on the 8th April 1918 directed the notes to be made over to Musammat Chamela on the ground that they were her property. The petitioners then moved the Sessions Judge, Mr. Foster, who had succeeded the officer who tried the original case. Mr. Foster has declined to revise the order of the Magistrate on the ground that section 520 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1898 does not appear to confer any power of restitution. The petitioners now invoke the revisional jurisdiction of this Court for an order directing restitution of the notes. Although the affidavit attached to the petition before me states that the notes in question were marked as an exhibit in the Sessions trial and that it was, therefore, within the competence of the Sessions Court to deal with them under section 517 of the Code and although a similar statement appears in the order passed by Mr. Foster, I find on referring to the record itself that the notes were not before the trial Judge and that they were certainly not marked as an exhibit. That being so, the trying Judge was right in declining jurisdiction under section 517 of the Code and in directing the petitioners to apply to the Magistrate for necessary action. In this connection I desire to observe that the affidavit is worthless as the person swearing the same was not in a position to state the source of his knowledge in regard to the averment in question, and I desire to draw the attention of parties to the necessity of complying with the rules of this Court in this important matter. The notes were, however, made an exhibit in the trying Magistrate's Court and, therefore, that officer had full jurisdiction to make the order which he did under section 517. The only question is, whether Mr. Foster was right in declining to make an order for restitution on the ground that section 520, although it gave him the power to interfere with the Magistrate's order, did not permit him to make an order for restitution. In my opinion section 520 differs from the corresponding provision in the Code of 1882 and contemplates that the Court of reference or revision shall order restitution, if justice so requires. The words "and may make any further orders that may be just" seem to me to be very wide and to have been inserted for the purpose of meeting cases such as that now before me. No express judicial authority has been shown to me on the point since the Code was amended, but having regard to the language of the amendment and to the fact that the amendment was made in spite of decisions under the Code of 1882 laying down that restitution could not be made by the Court of reference or revision, it seems to me clear that the contention of the petitioners before me is correct.

Then arises the question as to how restitution is to be enforced. In my opinion where a remedy is allowed by law, it must be assumed that the Legislature intends that the tribunal invested with jurisdiction shall enforce its order in the manner it considers most suitable, even though there is no express provision for doing the same. In the case before me there is, however, express provision in section 547 of the Code for realising the money value of the notes as a fine, and I take it that it would also be competent to the Sessions Court to enforce its order by putting the penal law in motion relating to the disobedience of lawful orders. In my opinion it is eminently just and proper that the currency notes found upon Nurul Hasan should be returned to his representatives-in-interest and that on default restitution should be made by payment to them of the money value thereof. The learned Magistrate's view that the notes were the property of Musammal Chamela appears to me to be based upon no judicial evidence whatsoever. I fail to see how the learned Magistrate, in the face of the finding of the Sessions Court that there had been no theft or dishonest retention, could substitute a finding of his own at variance with that of the trial Court.

The learned Vakil for the opposite party contends that the order of the learned Magistrate was made under section 523 of the Code and that it is in the nature of an executive or administrative order which is not revisable by the High Court. In my opinion the order is clearly one under section 517, but even if it had been an order under section 523 it must be viewed as a judicial order and the provisions of the Code as regards revision are, in my opinion, clearly applicable.

It is not clear whether the petitioners have established their right to administer the estate of the deceased Nurul Hasan. The order, therefore, that I shall make is that upon the petitioners establishing within three months from this date before the learned Sessions Judge that they are entitled to administer the estate, the learned Sessions Judge will make an order of restitution in their favour in the terms proposed. On their failure to establish the necessary title, the application will be rejected.

Order accordingly.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 23rd February 1917.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to the construction of a Will, purporting to have been executed by Ganga Prasad on the 14th May 1878. Ganga Prasad had a son, Ram Narain, who had died in his lifetime, leaving a widow, Musammat Batasi Kuar. He had also a wife, Musammat Dula Kuar, and a daughter, Musammat Mithana, both of whom survived him. By the Will he declared that Musammat Dula Kuar and Musammat Batasi Kuar were to be the owners and possessors (malik wa qabiz) of his property after his death, that if a son was subsequently born to him by his present wife or by another wife whom he might thereafter marry, that son would inherit his estate, and that in the event of none of these existing (dar surat na hone in sabhon ke) his daughter would be the owner and possessor thereof.

Ganga Prasad died on the 23rd November 1886. On his death Sheo Shankar Bakhsh, the present plaintiff No. 1, and Mahabir Prasad, the father of the other three plaintiffs, took possession of the entire estate of the deceased and got mutation of names effected in their favour. Musammat Dula Kuar and Musammat Batasi Kuar sued them for possession on the strength of the aforesaid Will and got a decree, which was confirmed by this Court on the 16th September 1890 (Exhibit A-3). In that suit no question was raised as to the nature of the rights conferred by the Will. Musammat Batasi Kuar died on the 15th November 1904, leaving Musammat Dula Kuar surviving her. Musammat Dula Kuar remained in sole possession of the disputed property till her death on the 2nd February 1905. On the death of Musammat Dula Kuar, Musammat Mithana, the daughter of Ganga Prasad, applied for mutation of names in her favour but was resisted by the present plaintiffs. She succeeded.

In the suit which has given rise to this appeal the plaintiffs sued for possession of the disputed property, alleging that according to the custom of the family and the conditions laid down in the wajib-ul-arz, daughters and their issue were excluded from inheritance and that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed to the estate on the death of Musammat Dula Kuar. The defendant denied the existence of the alleged custom and pleaded that she succeeded to the property on the death of Musammat Batasi Kuar and Musammat Dula Kuar under the Will of Ganga Prasad above mentioned, and that the plaintiffs had no right to sue. There was a further plea that the claim was barred by the rule of res judicata; but that plea was later on abandoned.

The learned Subordinate Judge did not go into the question of custom. He found that under the Will of the 14th May 1878 Musammat Batasi Kuar and Musammat Dula Kuar had a life-interest in the property bequeathed and that on the death of the latter Musammat Mithana succeeded to an absolute interest therein by virtue of the said Will.

We are unable, however, to accept the construction put by the learned Subordinate Judge on the said Will. After stating that he shall remain in proprietary possession of his property till his death and that after him his widow and the widow of his predeceased son shall be the owners and possessors thereof, the testator said: "In the event of a son being born to me in my lifetime from my present wife or from a second wife, whom I may marry, such son shall be the owner and possessor; and in the event of none of these existing, my daughter will be the owner and possessor." The estate, which the testator was conferring on a son, who may be born to him, or if no son was born to him, on his widow and the widow of his predeceased son, and in the absence of all of them on his daughter, was described by the same terms, namely, that they were to be the owners and possessors of his property. If the son, who might be born to him, was to be the full owner of his property after his death, his widow and the widow of his predeceased son were equally to be the full owners thereof, if no such son was born; and if those widows were to be the full owners in case no such son was born, it is difficult to conceive how an ulterior disposition in favour of the daughter could have been within the contemplation of the testator. In any case, the Will does not say so. All that it provides is that in the event of there being none of the persons previously mentioned his daughter shall get his property, implying thereby that she would only get it if she survived him and the others did not. Section 107 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) lays down that a legacy bequeathed in case a specified uncertain event shall happen does not vest until that event happens. Till that event happens, the interest of the legatee is only contingent. Section 21 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), which applies to transfers inter vivos, recognises the same principle and declares that an interest created in favour of a person to take effect only on the happening of a specified uncertain event becomes a vested interest, when that event happens or when the happening of it becomes impossible; but till then it remains contingent.

In the present case both Musammat Dula Kuar and Musammat Batasi Kuar survived the testator. He had no son born to him after the execution of the Will. There was no occasion, therefore, for the contingent interest given to the daughter coming into operation.

As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Surajmani v. Rubi Nath Ojha (1), which was followed in Tikram Singh v. Chet Kunwar (2) and again in Fateh Chand v. Rup Chand (3), the use of the word "malik", unless qualified in any way by the context, indicates the grant of an absolute estate. Musammat Batasi Kuar was not even an heir of the testator, and as both the estates granted to the son, if any was born, and that granted to Musammat Dula Kuar and Musammat Batasi Kuar were described in the same terms, there can be no doubt that the grant of a full estate was intended by the testator, whoever the eventual legatee might be.

The learned Counsel for the defendant-respondent contends that the testator intended to grant successive estates, but such an interpretation is absolutely inconsistent with the express terms of the Will, which provides that if the testator left a son that son would be the absolute owner of the state, that if he left no son, his widow and the widow of his predeceased son would be the owners and possessors thereof, and that in the event of there being none of them, his daughter would get his property. Had a son been born and survived the testator, it could hardly have been intended that the daughter of the testator should get his property after the death of that son, in case he died leaving other heirs. Where an absolute estate is granted, the grant of an ulterior disposition is moreover void. On either ground, therefore, the defendant-respondent has no right to claim the disputed property on the strength of the Will.

It is suggested that even if Musammat Dula Kuar was entitled to an absolute estate under the Will, the defendant-respondent would be entitled to inherit that property as an heir to her stridhan. That point was not expressly pleaded or tried by the Court below, and its determination may depend upon the decision of the question of custom upon which no evidence has hitherto been taken. On the death of Musammât Dula Kuar, the property in dispute would devolve on her daughter, if she was not excluded by custom.

Let the Court below be, therefore, directed to determine, after taking such relevant evidence as the parties may adduce:—

1. Whether there was any family custom excluding the defendant-respondent from inheriting the property of her father or mother.

2. Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to sue and have a right to any of the reliefs claimed.

It may be noted that on the 7th February 1915 two applications were made by the plaintiffs for the amendment of the plaint, which were allowed by the Court below, but no amendment has actually been made. This omission should be rectified.

Limitation Act (IX of 1903), s. 19—Receiver, appointment of, by Court "to do all things necessary for the preservation of firm"—Power to acknowledge—Acknowledgment by Receiver, whether saves limitation.

A Receiver may be an agent authorised to make an acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19, Explanation II, of the Limitation Act. The language of the section is general enough to include an agent appointed either by Statute or by Court, provided he is authorised under the law to make acknowledgments. [p. 181, col. 1.]

A Receiver appointed "to do all things necessary for the preservation of the assets of a firm" has authority to make acknowledgments on behalf of the firm, if they are necessary for the preservation of the firm's assets and if the Receiver acts bona fide with that object. [p. 181, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in Original Suits Nos. 19 and 32 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Appellant.—The acknowledgment by the Receiver is not sufficient to save limitation under section 19 of the Limitation Act. It is not an acknowledgment by an agent within the meaning of Explanation II to the section. The section refers to agents appointed by an act of the debtor, i. e., by a contractual act. As section 21 deals with other classes of agents, section 19 must be understood as referring only to agents authorised by the debtor. Whitley v. Lowe (1).

Again, under the terms of his appointment the Receiver had no authority to make the acknowledgment. He had power only "to do all things necessary for the preservation of the estate of the said firm." It cannot be for the benefit of the firm to make acknowledgments.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachariar, for the Respondents.—The Receiver is an agent within the meaning of Explanation II to section 19 of the Limitation Act. The section is not restricted to agents appointed by the debtor. Statutory agents also fall under the explanation.

The Receiver had power to make acknowledgments under the terms of his appointment order. He prevented suits by the firm's creditors and saved the firm's assets from being burdened with Court costs. That was an act necessary to preserve the assets of the firm.

JUDGMENT.—The first defendant was a minor. There was a suit for dissolution of the firm, and in that suit a Receiver was appointed under order of the Rangoon Court in these terms:—"It is ordered that M. A. R. A. R. Ramanathan Chetty be, and he is hereby appointed, Receiver to take charge of the property of the Chetty firms of M. L. R. M. A. and A. L. A. S. R. M. pending the decision of this suit for dissolution of partnership, with power to collect outstandings and do all things necessary for the realization and preservation of the assets of the said firms." The question we have got to decide in the appeal is whether an acknowledgment of a debt due by the firm under dissolution made by the Receiver was valid.

It is contended that section 19 of the Limitation Act is limited, so far as the signing of an acknowledgment by agents is concerned, to agents appointed by an act of the debtor himself, or in other words, by a contractual act. Explanation II does not cover the case of an agent who is otherwise appointed. Explanation II says, "For the purposes of this section 'signed' means signed either personally or by an agent duly authorised in this behalf." Reference is made to section 21 which deals with the case of a person under disability, and lays down that the expression 'agent duly authorised in this behalf' in section 19 shall include "his lawful guardian, committee or manager, or an agent duly authorised by such guardian, committee or manager to sign the acknowledgment". Section 21 is a new section which has been introduced, as is well known, in view of conflicting decisions as to whether section 19 covers the case of an acknowledgment made by a guardian. The argument advanced by Mr. K. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar is to the effect that although Explanation II does not say by an agent duly authorised by him, that is, by the person sought to be bound by the acknowledgment, yet it must be taken to mean that inasmuch as all other cases are dealt with by section 21. Section 21, however, only says that, in the case of a person under disability, "agent" shall include his lawful guardian, etc. It does not lay down that there can be no other agent duly authorized to make acknowledgment in the case of persons under disability. The words "by an agent duly authorized in this behalf" in Explanation II in section 19 were in force before the enactment of section 21, and we cannot accept the contention that by section 21 the Legislature intended in any way to narrow the scope of section 19. It is unnecessary for us to say whether section 21 has widened its scope or not, or it has merely explained what was contained in section 19 itself.

The authorities seem to be uniform against the appellant's contention. The matter is fully dealt with by a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court consisting of the Chief Justice, Sir Lawrence Jenkins, and other learned Judges in Annapagauda v. Sangadig-yapa (2), where it is laid down that the agent in Explanation II, section 19, need not derive his authority from any contract. That was the case of a guardian, and it was ruled that the guardian appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act was an agent within the meaning of Explanation II, if the terms of his appointment gave him authority to make acknowledgments. English cases are then noticed and the statement of law on the subject as given by Lord Westbury in Chinnery v. Evans (3) is cited to show that the law in England is also to the same effect. In Beti Maharani v. Collector of Etawah (4) their Lordships of the Privy Council upheld an acknowledgment made by the Court of Wards as being operative under section 19, and that decision must be taken to be based on the principle that the agent mentioned therein may be one appointed under a Statute and need not be appointed under contract. There are similar decisions of this Court in Kondamodalu Linga Reddi v. Alluri Sarvarayudu (5), of the Calcutta High Court in Rashbehary Lal Mandar v. Anand Ram (6) and of the Allahabad High Court in Ram Charan Das v. Gaya Prasad (7). We may mention that in the Calcutta case the question raised was with reference to an acknowledgment made after the new Limitation Act had come into force. The learned Judges, however, proceeded not on the words of section 21, but of section 19. We may also mention that there is a dictum of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., of this Court in Venkataramiah Pantulu v. Subramaniam Pillai (8) supporting the same view, and there is a very recent decision of the Bombay High Court reported as Abdulali Badrudin v. Ranchodlal Trikamlal (9) which proceeds on the same view of the law.

Some reliance was placed on behalf of the appellant on Whitley v. Lowe (1), but that case is distinguishable inasmuch as there the Receiver was only authorized to get in the assets of the partnership and to pay the assets realized into Court.

We hold on the authority of the cases referred to that a Receiver may be an agent authorized to make an acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19, Explanation II. The language is general enough to include an agent appointed either by Statute or by Court, if he is authorised under the law to make acknowledgments.

The next question in this connection is whether the Receiver appointed in this case had in fact authority to make an acknowledgment. If he had such authority, it must have been under the power "to do all things necessary for the preservation of the assets of the said firm." It is strongly urged on behalf of the appellant that making an acknowledgment cannot be for the preservation of the assets of the firm. We cannot, however, accept this contention. We can well imagine cases in which an acknowledgment of a debt may be a necessary act to save the estate from loss. This is recognized in one of the cases already referred to—Kondamodalu Linga Reddi v. Alluri Sarvarayudu (5)—and in support of the interpretation of the order, Exhibit I, we may point to the fact that the Receiver was appointed not of a firm which had already been dissolved but of a going concern. We have no hesitation in holding that the act of the Receiver in this case, if it was necessary for the preservation of the assets of the firm, would be within the scope of Explanation II of section 19. The Subordinate Judge says that "in the course of such management when the creditors pressed for payment or threatened to sue, he averted the evil by acknowledging receipts and making part payments." It does not appear, however, where he got this from, for none of the parties before us have been able to point to any evidence which bears this out. The point does not seem to have been properly understood in the lower Court. We think it, therefore, necessary that we must have a finding whether at the time the acknowledgments were made by the Receiver, such acknowledgments were acts necessary for the preservation of the estate, that is to say, the plaintiffs ought to satisfy the Court that the Receiver in making the acknowledgments was in the circumstances of the time acting bona fide for the preservation of the assets of the firm.

The Subordinate Judge will return the finding within three months. Fresh evidence may be adduced. Ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

We make no order for costs at present

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura submitted the following

FINDING.

1. The High Court has directed this Court to submit a finding on the point:—

"Whether at the time the acknowledgments were made by the Receiver, such acknowledgments were acts necessary for the preservation of the estate, that is, for the preservation of the assets of the firm."

2. The plaintiff in Original Suit No. 32 of 1914 alone has recalled and examined plaintiff's third witness. No other evidence has been adduced in both the suits. Plaintiff's 3rd witness has sworn that the Receiver was collecting the outstandings of the firm and paying off debts, that the outstandings were over 40 lacs of rupees and the debts due were about 20 lacs of rupees; that he (witness) demanded from the Receiver payment of his firm's debts, saying that otherwise he would file a suit therefor; that the Receiver thereupon told him to wait for sometime for payment, representing that it would be inconvenient and disadvantageous to the firm if the witness should file a suit, as the debtors of the firm might not pay or might ask for remissions out of their debts, and that there would also be some hubbub and apprehension about the firm, and that he should, therefore, wait for receiving payment, and that he further said that he would acknowledge the debt by signing in the signature book. The witness adds that the Receiver then signed Exhibit E-1 and that he (witness) sent Exhibit D to the plaintiff mentioning the acknowledgment by the Receiver. It is clear from the above evidence of the witness, which stands unopposed or unchallenged, that the Receiver apprehended serious inconvenience, disadvantage or loss to the estate or the firm, if the plaintiff's 3rd witness should have filed the suit for the recovery of his debt, as the firm had very large outstandings to collect and to meet liabilities to the extent of about half the outstandings. If the plaintiff's third witness and the plaintiff in the other suit had rushed into Court with suits, other creditors might also have followed and the credit of the firm would have been in great risk or jeopardy, and it would not have been possible to collect outstandings, as the debtors, taking advantage of the condition of the firm, would have refused payment or put off payments, and the loss to the firm would have been immense. By making the acknowledgments of the debts the threatened suits by plaintiff's third witness and the other plaintiff were not filed and the risk to the firm's assets was averted. I, therefore, hold that in the circumstances of the case, the acknowledgments by the Receiver were acts necessary for the preservation of the estate, that is, for the preservation of the assets of the firm, and find the issue accordingly.

These appeals and the memorandum of cross-objections filed by the 1st respondent in Appeal No. 93 of 1915 coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred to by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

APPEALS NOS. 92 AND 93 OF 1915.

We accept the finding and dismiss the appeals with costs.

THE MEMORANDUM OF OBJECTIONS IN APPEAL No. 93 OF 1915.

With reference to the memorandum of objections, the decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge will be modified by allowing interest at six per cent. per annum on the amount decreed from the date of the plaint to the date of payment.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 60, 61—Claim proceedings—Investigation of claims—Court, duty of Order XXI, rules 60 and 61, Civil Procedure Code, lay down the lines on which the investigation of claims preferred to properties under attachment should proceed. The Court should consider whether at the time of attachment the property was in the possession of the judgment-debtor as his own property, and not on account of any other person or in trust for him. If this entails a consideration of the bona fides of a sale in his favour set up by the objector or the legal effect of the deed of conveyance including the circumstances of its registration, such matters should be gone into. [p. 183, col. 1.]

Mr. MacDonnell, for the Applicant.

Mr. Ormiston, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

HARTNOLL, OFFG. C. J.—The respondents had many decrees against the Chetty firm of K.P., and in execution of such decrees attached certain immoveable properties. The applicant firm applied for removal of the attachments, alleging that they had purchased the properties by registered deed of the 23rd June 1912 and since then had been in possession. Respondents contested the application and alleged that the sale was a bogus one. The District Judge would not in his judgment consider whether the sale was a genuine one, nor did he come to any definite finding as to who was in possession at the time of the attachments. He said: "It is quite possible that it may ultimately be found that at the time of the attachment some of the properties were in the possession of the K. P. firm and some were not." He went on to say: "It seems to me quite possible that the K. P. firm may have had some attachable interest in at any rate some of the properties, if not in all of them." He refused to remove the attachments and considered that a regular suit should be brought.

It seems to me that the District Judge has not dealt with the case according to law. Order XXI, rules 60 and 61, lay down the lines on which his decision should have been based. He should have considered whether at the time of the attachments the K. P. firm was in possession of the properties or any of them as its own property, and not on account of any other person, or whether the properties, or any of them, when attached, were not in possession of the firm, or that being in possession of the K. P. firm they were in its possession not on its own account or as its own property but on account of or in trust for the appellant firm. If this entailed a consideration of the bona fides of the sale, or the legal effect of the deed of conveyance including the circumstances of the registration of it, such matters should have been gone into.

I would set aside the order of the District Court and remand the case back to it to deal with it according to law, namely, on the lines set out by me.

I allow applicants the cost of this application—three gold mohurs. I set aside the order passed by the Court as to costs. Costs in that Court will abide the result of the further investigation now ordered.

TWOMEY, J.—I concur.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 53—Decree for mesne profits and costs, whether immovable property—Attachment of decree—Decree, whether can be sold—Procedure.

In a suit by a mortgagee the Court passed a decree in favour of the mortgagee for recovery of possession of the mortgaged property, unless the persons in possession of the property redeemed the mortgage by a certain date. There was also a decree for costs and mesne profits in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants redeemed the mortgage, so that the only decree which remained subsisting was for mesne profits and costs. This decree was attached and sought to be sold by a creditor of the mortgagee in execution of a decree obtained by him against the mortgagee.

Held, that the decree as attached was a decree for money within the meaning of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code and that the only procedure which the attaching decree-holder could adopt was to execute the decree under Order XXI, rule 53. [p. 185, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Arrah, dated the 15th December 1917.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—This is a second appeal which raises an interesting point of law. The execution creditor before us is one Lachman Ojha, who has got a money decree against the respondent Chariter and others. Now, Chariter had a decree against Radha, Sheodani and others, which in execution of his decree Lachman Ojha attached. Lachman's claim against Chariter is about Rs. 500, while the decree which Chariter has against Radha and others is one for costs amounting to Rs. 278-8-0 and for mesne profits which have not yet been ascertained, but which are estimated to be of the value of Rs. 11,000. Lachman Ojha applied in the Court of the Munsif for permission to attach and sell Chariter's decree. The Munsif held that the decree was immoveable property within the meaning of section 60, Civil Procedure Code, that the provisions of Order XXI, rule 53, which prohibited the sale of decree, for payment of money were not applicable and that, therefore, the sale could proceed. The decree was accordingly sold and Lachman Ojha has satisfied his claim by purchasing the decree himself.

The case then went on in appeal to the Subordinate Judge, who took a different view and held that Chariter's decree was a money decree within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 53, Civil Procedure Code, and that it was not open to Lachman Ojha to sell that decree.

The matter comes before us in second appeal by the creditor.

The first contention is that the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in holding that the decree now under consideration is a decree for money. It is contended that the decree is a decree for immoveable property which is saleable under the Civil Procedure Code.

Now it is necessary to examine what was the suit in which Chariter's decree was made. It appears that Chariter was a mortgagee in possession of certain lands. Some third party brought a suit against the mortgagor on the footing of another mortgage, obtained a decree and took possession of the mortgaged lands. Chariter was then obliged to bring a suit against his mortgagor as well as the persons who had obtained the decree for possession, for a declaration that the above decree was collusive and for recovery of possession of the property, which had been mortgaged to him by the mortgagor. In the alternative he claimed that if his prayer for recovery of possession was not allowed, his mortgage claim which amounted to Rs. 1,679 must be satisfied by the persons who had taken possession of the mortgaged property. The decree in appeal in that suit was that Chariter would be entitled to recover possession as prayed for, unless the persons who were in possession redeemed his mortgage within a certain time. There was also a decree for costs and mesne profits in favour of Chariter.

It appears that the defendants in that suit availed themselves of the opportunity to redeem and paid Chariter off, so that the only part of Chariter's decree, that is, now outstanding, is that which relates to costs and mesne profits. It is this decree that Lachman Ojha seeks to sell in execution of his decree against Chariter.

It is contended that as the decree was primarily a decree for recovery of possession of lands coupled with an alternative condition as to redemption, it was a decree for immoveable property. In my opinion that contention does not apply to the circumstances of this case. Here the only decree that is now outstanding is the decree for costs and for mesne profits. Now we know that a decree for mesne profits is a decree for money within the meaning of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code, and it seems to me that the only procedure that the decree-holder before us can legally take is to attach that decree and to execute it under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 53.

The learned Counsel who appears for the appellant draws our attention to Vasudeva Ravi Varman v. Narayana Pattar (1). In that case there was an order in appeal dismissing the suit and entitling the defendant to recover possession. The defendant applied under section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 to recover possession by way of restitution. One of his creditors thereupon applied to the Court to attach the defendant's right to realize mesne profits in respect of the lands, which also he was entitled to recover by way of restitution. Their Lordships of the Madras High Court held that as the decree in favour of the defendant did not expressly give him a right to recover mesne profits but merely dismissed the suit against him, it could not be said that there was any decree in existence for payment of money and that section 273, Civil Procedure Code, which corresponds to rule 53, Order XXI, of the present Code, did not apply to the sale of the right to recover mesne profits. They held, therefore, that that right was immoveable property and could be sold. It is to be noticed that their Lordships did not base their decision upon the fact that the right to mesne profits was coupled with the right to recover immoveable property. Similarly in the present case, so far as Chariter's decree gave him an alternative right to recover possession of the mortgaged property, that right is not to be taken into consideration in determining the question as to whether the decree is or is not a decree for an immoveable property. The basis of their Lordships' decision was that there was no decree in existence expressly giving a right to recover mesne profits, but here there was a decree giving such a right and the ruling of their Lordships is, therefore, in favour of the respondents before us and not against them. This would seem to be sufficient for the disposal of this second appeal.

It is, however, contended that if the decree was immoveable property, then no proceeding under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, is competent, but that the proper provision for setting aside the sale would be rule 90 of Order XXI. The appellant is treading on rather dangerous ground here, because if it is held that the decree is immoveable property to which the provisions of Order XXI, rule 90, apply then there is no second appeal, and the appellant has no right to come here at all. However upon the view that we take, the decree is, in our opinion, not one for immoveable property, but is one for money within the meaning of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code, and, therefore, the proper course for the attaching decree-holder is to proceed under rule 53 of Order XXI. The learned Subordinate Judge's decision is correct and the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

THORNHILL, J.—I agree.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Rangaachariar, Messrs. P. S. Vaidhinadha Aiyar and M. S. Venkatarama Aiyar, for 5th and 6th Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in this appeal is one of limitation. The appellant's assignor obtained a preliminary decree on a mortgage which allowed six months for payment of the mortgage amount, and in default of payment, the property was to be sold. The decree was passed on the 4th August 1910 and the six months' time would expire on the 4th February 1911. In the meantime, an appeal had been preferred against the preliminary decree, and the Appellate Court in the result upheld the decree of the first Court on the 11th April 1913. The present application for a final decree under Order XXXIV, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code, was made on the 26th January 1916, that is, within 3 years from the date of the appellate decree but more than 3 years after the expiration of the six months from the date of the decree of the first Court. The Subordinate Judge has held that the application is barred reckoning time from the 4th February 1911, the date on which the six months allowed by the original decree expired. He seems to have proceeded upon a ruling of a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Madho Ram v. Nihal Singh (1), but that decision has been overruled by a later Full Bench decision of that Court in Gajadhar Singh v. Kishen Jivan Lal (2). There is also a decision of this Court to the same effect in Nimmala Mahankali v. Kallakuri Subba Rao (3). We are inclined to accept this view of the law. There is no doubt that Article 181 of the Limitation Act applies. That Article says that every application, for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in the First Schedule, is to be made within three years from the date when the right to apply accrues. The question before us then is, when did the right to apply for a final decree accrue to the appellant. No doubt, if there had been no appeal preferred against the preliminary decree, his right to apply would arise on the expiration of 6 months from the date of the original decree; but there having been an appeal and a decree of the Appellate Court, it is that decree which is to be enforced. The appellate decree, ordinarily speaking, must be taken to supersede the decree of the first Court. Further, as pointed out by the Allahabad High Court, if the contention of the respondents were to be accepted, there would be more than one final decree, which, we do not think, could have been within the contemplation of the Legislature. Mr. T. Rangachariar appearing for the 5th respondent has argued that the decisions of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court and of this Court already referred to are wrong; and, in support of this contention, has referred us to the cases of Thathara Nannabha Chetty v. Kuppal Krishnammal (4), Ramaswami Kone v. Sundara Kone (5) and Manavikraman v. Unniappan (6). But those cases do not seem to us to have any application to the present case. In all those cases, the question was, where the original decree lays down a certain period of time for the performance of certain conditions and that time has expired whether by reason of the mere fact that there has been an appeal and the Appellate Court has confirmed the decree of the lower Court without extending the time fixed by the first Court for the performance of the condition, the time laid down by the first Court is to be imported into the decree of the Appellate Court. All that those decisions lay down is that in such cases, the time fixed by the first Court could not be made part of the decree of the Appellate Court without the Appellate Court having expressly made it so. We have no hesitation in accepting that proposition, but in this case the decree-holder has not to perform any act for which any period of time was fixed by the first Court, and, therefore, it is difficult to say how the principle underlying the decisions relied on by Mr. T. Rangachariar can apply to the present case. It was contended that here also there was six months' time given for the payment of money by the mortgagor as a condition precedent and the properties could not be sold before this time expired. Hence it is argued that the right to apply under Article 181 of the Limitation Act must be taken to arise after the expiration of the six months. But this overlooks the fact that an appeal had been preferred from the decree of the first Court. Although the Appellate Court confirmed the decree of the first Court ultimately the right to apply for a final decree must, in our opinion, be taken to accrue from the date of the appellate decree, which is the binding decree in the matter.

We reverse the judgment of the Subordinate Judge; the petition will be remanded to the lower Court for disposal according to law. Costs will abide the result.

Defending an appeal preferred by the judgment-debtor in an execution proceeding is not a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Article 182, Schedule I of the Limitation Act. [p. 187, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Shahabad,

Mr. Sundar Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. L. N. Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—In my opinion this appeal should be dismissed. This is a second appeal from a judgment of the District Judge of Shahabad refusing to reverse a judgment of the Court below, which dismissed a petition for execution on the ground that it was time-barred. Another objection was taken, but with that we are not now concerned. The question is a very short one. It appears that in the year 1906 the appellant obtained a decree. Between that time and 1912 he appears to have made three separate attempts to execute his decree. Each of these attempts proved infructuous. Then on the 12th April 1912 a fresh petition for execution was filed. That, for reasons which do not concern us, was dismissed. On appeal to the District Judge on the 5th July 1913 the appeal was allowed and the petition for execution granted. From that time until the 20th July 1916, which was more than three years, the appellant took no steps to try and obtain execution. From the order of the District Judge, dated the 5th July 1913, the judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court at Calcutta and on the 20th April 1915 the High Court at Calcutta dismissed the appeal. Then on the 20th July in the following year an application was made by the present appellant, which has been called an application to continue the previous petition for execution, that is to say, the petition which was filed on the 12th April 1912. No doubt the reason why the petition has been so described and why probably it was set out in that form was because it was more than three years since the appellant had obtained his decree before the District Judge in July 1913 and he had taken no steps-in-aid of his execution since then, except that he had defended an appeal to the High Court at Calcutta. That obviously was not a step-in-aid of execution, because the appeal by the judgment-debtor to the High Court at Calcutta was no bar to the execution or to the carrying out of the decree which the appellant already had from the District Judge. That application, whether it is called an application to continue the previous petition or whether it is called a petition for the execution of the decree, was dismissed for default. Then the present petition was brought for execution on the 1st February 1917, and both the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance who tried these proceedings have come to the conclusion that the petition is time-barred. It seems to me that that decision is one which cannot be impeached. The Article in the Limitation Act which in my opinion clearly relates to a petition of this sort is Article 182, and the period of limitation prescribed by that Article is three years from the date of applying in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution or of taking some step-in-aid of execution of the decree or order. It is quite clear to my mind that the last step which was taken in execution in accordance with law was not later than the 5th July 1913 and as the present petition was not filed until the 1st February 1917, it seems to me that it is quite clear that that petition is out of time and ought to be dismissed.

It was contended in the first place that the petition of February 1917 was within 3 years of that filed on the 20th July 1916 and was, therefore, in time. But the earlier petition which was dismissed for default was itself time-barred and being out of time, cannot constitute a fresh starting point within three years of which another petition can be lodged. To hold otherwise would be to defeat the whole object of the Limitation Act.

It was also contended on behalf of the appellant that Article 182 does not apply to the case at all, although it cannot be denied that this is a petition for execution, but it is contended nevertheless that Article 181 applies, which provides for applications for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this Schedule or by section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure. I cannot accept this view. It is quite clear to my mind that Article 182 is the proper Article to apply to a petition of this sort. But even if Article 181 applies, it is very difficult to see how it can assist the appellant in any way, because there the time begins to run when the right to apply accrues. That part of the Article the learned Vakil for the appellant has not dealt with, but it seems to me that the right to apply is existing all along and that only shows that Article 181 was clearly not meant to cover the case of a petition for execution such as that provided for in Article 182.

It has not been suggested when the right to apply accrued or before what time it was impossible to make this application. It is not necessary for me to say more than this that the Article which is clearly applicable to the present case is Article 182. That being so and it being quite clear that three years had elapsed since the last step taken by the appellant in aid of the execution, it follows that this application is time-barred and that this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

MULLICK, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 583 of 1917.

July 8, 1918.

Present:—Sir Henry Drake-Brockman, Kt., J. C.PANDU AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS —APPELLANTS*versus*

SITAL PRASAD—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2, O. XXI, r. 34—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 52—Specific performance of agreement to lease, decree for—Possession, subsequent, suit for, maintainability of—Abandonment of claim—Cause of action—Lease granted to third person after decree, validity of—Lis pendens, doctrine of, applicability of—C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), ss. 35 (4), 45 (2)—Surrender of tenancy—Non-cultivation of land—Lease of sir land—Sanction of Revenue Officer, failure to obtain, effect of.

The relief for possession is not a part of the claim which a plaintiff suing for the specific performance of an agreement to lease is entitled to make in respect of the breach of the defendant's agreement to demise the land. [p. 189, col. 2; p. 190, col. 1.]

Therefore, where a plaintiff obtained a decree for the specific performance of an agreement to lease and after the execution of the lease by the defendant brought a suit for possession of the land demised:

Held, that the suit for possession was not barred by the provisions of Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 190, col. 2.]

PANDU v. SITAL PRASAD.

Action taken by the Court under Order XXI, rule 34 of the Civil Procedure Code in execution of a decree for specific performance of a contract of lease is a proceeding in the suit itself. [p. 190, col. 2.]

Therefore, a transfer of the property in dispute by the judgment-debtor effected after the passing of the decree but before action is taken under Order XXI, rule 34 of the Civil Procedure Code, would be affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. [p. 191, col. 1.]

The provisions as to implied surrender embodied in section 35 (4) of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act do not apply to a case where the non-cultivation of land and non-payment of rent are not voluntary but are due to obstruction which is the outcome of the landlord's improper behaviour. [p. 19., cols. 1 & 2.]

Section 45 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act requiring the sanction of a Revenue Officer for a lease of sir land has no application to an agricultural lease. [p. 191, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree passed by the Additional District Judge, Wardha, dated the 28th September 1917, in Civil Appeal No. 130 of 1917.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Appellants.

Mr. Balwantrao Pendharkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this second appeal arises was brought to obtain possession of sir field No. 38/1 in Mauza Manikwara, the previous history of which may be briefly stated.

On the 16th January 1911 Narain and Withoba, the Malguzars of Manikwara, agreed in writing (Exhibit P-6) to let their sir lands to Sital Prasad for 99 years. On the 29th August 1911, Sital Prasad brought Suit No. 14 of 1911 in the District Court against the Malguzars to obtain specific performance of their agreement and on the 13th February 1913 obtained the desired decree which did not, however, fix the time within which the necessary lease should be executed. The relief claimed did not include possession of the fields. On the 23rd June 1913, Sital Prasad applied for execution complaining that the Malguzars had not executed the lease and praying that action might be taken under rule 34, Order XXI, First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. This application was eventually dismissed, with undue haste as it appears to me, on the 1st November following, on the ground that the draft put in by Sital Prasad did not show the date for which the term of the lease was to run and the omission had not been supplied. On that occasion Sital Prasad was represented merely by an agent, who might reasonably have been given time to consult his master on the important question thus raised.

A fresh application was preferred on the 24th April 1914 and on the 29th August following Narain executed the lease, which had been drawn up in accordance with the decree-holder's final draft. The Court executed on behalf of Withoba in his absence on the same day. Registration was eventually effected on the 26th June 1915 after both the lessors had denied execution. On the 1st July following Sital Prasad went to take possession of field No. 38/1, but was obstructed by the defendants who set up a perpetual lease of that field given them by Narain and Withoba on the 22nd February 1913.

A number of pleas were raised in answer to the claim, but all have been decided against the defendants who have been directed to put the plaintiff in possession. Several are repeated in this Court and will now be dealt with seriatim.

The first point is that in the suit of 1911 the plaintiff should have included his claim for possession and is, therefore, debarred by rule 2 (2), Order II, First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, from obtaining that relief. Narayana Kavirayan v. Kandasami Goundan (1) is relied upon for the appellants. In that case the suit for possession was brought against the person who had executed a sale-deed in accordance with the decree passed in the suit for specific performance of an agreement to convey. It was held that the right to possession arose coincidentally with the right to the execution of a conveyance and that section 43 in the Civil Procedure Code, 1852, debarred the plaintiff from bringing the later suit for possession. This view was disapproved in Krishnammal Manandiar v. Sundararaja Aiyar (2), where it was held that the right to possession accrues on the execution of the deed of conveyance. The later Madras decision followed Nathu v. Budhu (3), where the conveyance was held to give rise to a new and distinct cause of action, the cause of action for the suit for specific performance being merely the breach of the contract of sale. The view taken by this Court in Sheodin v. Godhi Bai (4) is in accordance with the balance of authority in the other Courts mentioned. The appellants seek to distinguish the last mentioned case on the ground that specific performance was obtained on foot of an award made by the Debt Conciliation Board, not on the strength of a private agreement between the parties. The ratio decidendi, however, applies equally to the case of an arbitration award and to that of a private contract, and the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner expressly preferred the Bombay view to that taken in the earlier Madras case. I am referred by the appellants to the following remarks made by Batten, Additional Judicial Commissioner, in Thakur Rewasingh v. Hardayal (5):—

"Can the agreement to execute a sale-deed and the agreement to put plaintiff in possession be regarded as separate parts of the contract? I think not; for the agreement to put the vendee in possession, though mentioned as a separate agreement, is not really a separate agreement, but is ancillary to the agreement to execute a sale-deed, and the executant of the sale-deed would be bound to put the vendee in possession without any separate contract to that effect. This part of the contract is bound up in the other part, and the separate mention of it is a superfluity."

In that case the contract, as stated in the plaint, was both to execute a sale-deed and to put the plaintiff in possession, and the question was whether in view of section 17, Specific Relief Act, the Court could direct execution of the sale-deed without also ordering delivery of possession. The answer given was in the affirmative. But it does not seem to me to furnish any authority for holding that the relief for possession is part of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the breach of the defendants' contract to convey. I may also refer to Abdul Majid v. Boida Nath Dhur (6) as supporting the view that the cause of action, where the breach of a contract to convey has occurred, is different from that where resistance is offered to the transferee when he endeavours to take possession of the property conveyed to him. For these reasons I hold that rule 2 (2) of Order II aforesaid does not operate as a bar to the respondent's claim for possession.

It is next contended that the rule of lis pendens contained in section 52, Transfer of Property Act, has no application. The lower Appellate Court, following the decision in Mati Lal Pal v. Preo Nath Mitra (7), has held that the suit for specific performance brought in 1911 must be considered to have been still pending when the appellants obtained their lease. Against this view it is now urged that after the decree for specific performance nothing remained but to execute it and that under the present Civil Procedure Code proceedings in execution are not proceedings in suits. Judging, however, from sub-rule (5), rule 34, Order XXI, First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, action taken by the Court in execution of a decree for specific performance of a contract of sale is clearly a proceeding in the suit itself. In Shivjiram Sahebram Marwadi v. Waman Narayan Joshi (8) Farran, C. J., remarked as follows:—

"Now the general rule of law is that the lis pendens, except in administration suits and suits for an account and in suits of a similar nature in which the decree is the inception of subsequent proceedings, ends with the decree."

In that case the lis was instituted on foot of a mortgage, the relief claimed being sale of the mortgaged property, and the purchase said to be affected by the rule of lis pendens took place while the mortgagee's execution proceedings were actually pending. That a mortgage suit is pending until a final decree is passed is now well settled: see Digamber v. Ganpat (9). In Bhoje Mahadev Parab v. Gangabai Vithal Naik (10) Batchelor, J., appears to have considered that the lis could not be regarded as having revived, unless the transfer said to be affected by it was made during the actual pendency of execution proceedings. If this view were to be acted upon, the defeated defendant in a suit for specific performance might convey to an outsider the very day after the decree was passed and so render the litigation nugatory; the prompter his defiance of the decree the more certainly would that result accrue. In the present case the transfer to the appellants was effected only 13 days after the decree for specific performance, i. e., in less than what may fairly be regarded as a reasonable time for preparation of the necessary conveyance and its execution by the defendants. Under rule 34, Order XXI, First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, the decree-holder cannot move the Court for execution of the requisite document until the judgment-debtor has neglected or refused to obey the decree and he has then prepared a draft of the document. It is not, and could not be, suggested that 13 days is a sufficient time for fulfilling this requirement, nor was it pleaded in the Courts below that the plaintiff was guilty of any undue delay in taking out execution. In Krishnappa v. Shivappa (11) relied on for the appellants, it was assumed that inaction on the plaintiff's part might interrupt the operation of a lis, but on the findings of the Court of first appeal inaction on the plaintiff's part was negatived so that the question of laches appears to have been distinctly raised before the stage of second appeal. In these circumstances I think that the lis may properly be regarded as having been still under active prosecution when the appellants took their lease and that the rule of lis pendens has rightly been held to make that lease ineffective.

The next contention raised is that the plaintiff must be deemed to have impliedly surrendered the field under section 35 (4), Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1898, inasmuch as he neither cultivated it nor paid rent for two years after the date of his agreement. As to this I am clearly of opinion that the sub-section cited has no application. The plaintiff was not in a position to claim possession till the lease in his favour was executed by the Malguzars on the 29th August 1914, and his attempt to obtain possession on the 1st July 1915 was frustrated by the appellants. The case is not one of voluntary inaction on the part of the tenant such as the sub-section contemplates, but one of obstruction which was the outcome of the landlord's improper behaviour.

The fourth ground of appeal is not pressed, and the fifth raises for the first time a question of fact which cannot be entertained at the present stage.

The last point that calls for notice is also a new one, namely, that the land being sir, the lease to the plaintiff required the sanction of a Revenue Officer under section 45 of the Tenancy Act. If this plea had been taken in either of the Courts below, it would have been open to the plaintiff to show what already appears prima facie to be the case, that the lease is an agricultural one, so that section 45 has no application: see Bhagirathi Bai v. Anyaji Kunbi (12). This contention, too, must be overruled.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. In the Courts below costs will be paid as already ordered.

Appeal dismissed.

Defendant executed a mortgage-deed in favour of plaintiff stipulating to repay the amount advanced thereunder by monthly instalments. There was a penal clause binding the mortgagor to pay the full amount at an enhanced rate of interest on his failure to pay the first instalment whenever the mortgagee required. After the second instalment became due, the plaintiff enforced the penal clause and sued for the whole amount with enhanced interest.

FIRM OF HAR CHAND RAI-ANAND RAM v. RAM BAHADUR SINGH.

Held, (1) that the suit was governed by Article 132 and not by Article 75 of the Limitation Act;

(2) that as the plaintiff failed to exercise the option to enforce the penal clause, the contract for instalments subsisted;

(3) that plaintiff was not entitled to claim enhanced interest.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ramnad, at Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 69 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Satur, in Original Suit No. 618 of 1913.

Mr. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The Subordinate Judge is mistaken in applying Article 75 of the Limitation Act. The document sued on is a mortgage and Article 132 applies. It has not been shown that the appellant availed herself of the penal clause of the bond, which gives her an option of requiring payment of the whole amount of the mortgage money at an enhanced rate of interest upon the failure of the respondent to pay the first instalment.

Her case in fact was that the first instalment had been paid. The words in the default clause "whenever you require" in our opinion give the appellant an option and since that option has not been exercised, the contract for payment by instalments subsists. The case is similar to Narna v. Ammani Amma (1).

The appellant, however, is not entitled to the enhanced interest, because she does not appear to have made any demand until both instalments had become due and the option had thereafter expired.

The case must be remanded to the lower Appellate Court for disposal on the question of consideration.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 8, O. XIV, r. 1, cl. (5)—Date fixed for settlement of issues, whether date fixed for hearing.

The date fixed for the settlement of issues is a date fixed for the hearing of the suit within the meaning of Order IX, rule 8 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 193, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpore.

Mr. P. K. Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order under Order IX, rule 9, refusing to set aside the dismissal of the plaintiffs' suit.

The facts of the case briefly are that the 1st of March 1917 was fixed for the settlement of issues. The plaintiffs had failed to complete the service of summons upon either of the two defendants. But in spite of this the second defendant had appeared, the first defendant being still absent. The plaintiff himself failed to appear, nor did any agent or Vakil appear on his behalf. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The reasons given for the plaintiffs' failure to prosecute the suit were, firstly, that the case was in charge of one Bhagwan Sabai who was ill on the day in question, and secondly, that the plaintiffs had been much upset by the death of a member of their firm named Ananta Ram. In addition to these two grounds for restoring the suit it is urged, firstly, that the 1st of March having been fixed for the settlement of issues only was not a date fixed for the hearing within the meaning of rule 8 of Order IX, and, secondly, that on the day in question the District Judge having directed that the Courts should close at 2 p. m. and the order complained of having been passed at 3-30 p. m., the order was a bad order.

We may deal briefly with the last two points taken. The District Court has no jurisdiction to close the Subordinate Judge's Court, and it is nowhere suggested that owing to the Subordinate Judge's failure to close the Court the plaintiff or his agent was caught unawares. Moreover, it appears that so far as the Subordinate Judge's Court was concerned, no notice of the Judge's order was received before 3.30 P. M. With regard to the contention that the date fixed for the settlement of issues is not a date fixed for the hearing, it is sufficient to read Order XIV, rule 1, clause 5. It is clear from the use of the word 'hearing' in that clause that the date fixed for the settlement of issues is as much a date fixed for the hearing of the suit as any other date fixed.

Upon the merits of the case we feel constrained to accept the Subordinate Judge's findings upon the facts. It was not suggested that Ananta Ram was looking after the case; it was the plaintiffs' case that Bhagwan Sahai was in charge of it. Ananta Ram's death, therefore, would not have affected Bhagwan Sahai's ability to appear and either ask for an adjournment or prosecute the suit. We find it impossible to differ from the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that Bhagwan Sahai was not prevented by illness from taking necessary action in the case, for it has been proved to our minds conclusively that Bhagwan Sahai was not only not ill on the day in question but was actually looking after a suit of the plaintiffs in the Batwara Deputy Collector's Court. Upon all the grounds urged we are of opinion that the appeal fails. It is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The Hon'ble Sir Bepin Krishna Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a suit to enforce a mortgage-deed, dated the 23th October 1912, executed by the deceased Ruprai for himself and for his minor uncle Narayansingh. The suit is against Noharsingh, minor son of Ruprai, and Narayansingh who has since attained majority. Out of the consideration of Rs. 5,500 secured by the mortgage, Rs. 3,500 was for the redemption of a prior mortgage dated the 11th March 1909 also executed by Ruprai in favour of one Amritrao for Rs. 2,700. The plaintiff claims to have redeemed this prior mort.

DILESHWAR RAM BRAHMAN V. NOHAR SINGH.

gage and produced the original mortgage-deed (Exhibit P-5), which contains an endorsement of satisfaction purporting to be in the handwriting of Amritrao. The plaintiff has been given a decree against the four-annas share of Ruprai and the suit has been dismissed as against the shares of Narayansingh and Noharsingh, the lower Court holding that no legal necessity has been proved.

The first point for decision is whether the plaintiff has proved legal necessity for either of the mortgages. Both the documents contain the usual recitals which would make out a case for necessity. The transactions, however, are so recent that little weight can be attached to these recitals. The plaintiff, who is the original mortgagee of the deed in suit, has not gone into the witness-box to depose to the representations made to him, nor is there any evidence that he made any enquiries, and was satisfied about the necessity for the loan. There is no oral evidence of any kind to prove that the loans were necessary. The prior mortgage, it will be noted, was also by Ruprai and not by any ancestor of Narayansingh. It may be conceded, as argued for the appellant, that Ruprai was the manager though the lower Court was disposed to think otherwise, but this concession does not carry the plaintiff's case any further.

Reliance, however, is placed upon certain statements made by Narayansingh and contained in Exhibits P-2, P-4 and P-6. In these statements the plaintiff's mortgage-debt is admitted as an existing debt. Narayansingh applied to the Deputy Commissioner under section 45 of the Tenancy Act for sanction to transfer sir land without reservation of expropriary occupancy rights. He had to establish that the debts could not be met except by such a transfer. This statement is made by Narayansingh as representing himself and the minor Noharsingh. It is to the following effect:

"We owe Rs. 5,500 to Dilesar (plaintiff) under a mortgage-deed and our twelve annas of Baharhod is mortgaged for this debt."

The lower Court has attached no importance to this statement as, in its opinion, Narayansingh had just attained majority; but it is pointed out that Narayansingh's age as given in the deposition (Exhibit P 6) was 22. It is urged that this statement amounts to an admission which shifts the burden of proof as against both him and the minor Noharsingh.

I agree with the contention of the appellant that the statement is relevant also against Noharsingh. The following statement of the law from Taylor on Evidence has been held by Garth, C. J., in Kowsulliah Sundari Dasi v. Mukta Sundari Dasi (1) to be applicable to India under section 18 of the Evidence Act:

"When several persons are jointly interested in the subject-matter of the suit, the general rule is that the admissions of any one of those persons are receivable against himself and fellows, whether they be all jointly suing or sued, provided the admission relates to the subject-matter in dispute and be made by the declarant in his character of a person jointly interested with the party against whom the evidence is tendered."

To the same effect is the recent judgment of Mookerjee, J., in Ambar Ali v. Lutfe Ali (2), where other authorities have been collected.

It is urged that the statement of Narayansingh amounts also to an admission on the part of Noharsingh under section 18 of the Evidence Act, and this admission has the effect of shifting the burden of proof on both of them. In support of this the appellant cites the Privy Council case of Chandra Kunwar v. Chaudhri Narpal Singh (3). The case in the Privy Council was concerned with the admission of a party himself and it was also upon a question of fact regarding his adoption. Although I have held that the statement of Narayansingh is receivable in evidence against Noharsingh, it is only an admission by construction of law. I doubt whether such a constructive admission has the effect of shifting the burden of proof as against Noharsingh.

DILESHWAR RAM BRAHMAN v. NOHAR SINGH.

The Privy Council laid down that where there is an admission by a party, he has to show that the admission was untrue in fact (vide page 195* of the report). Their Lordships quote the following passage from the judgment of Baron Parke: "What a party himself admits to be true may reasonably be presumed to be so."

The statement above referred to (Exhibit P-6) makes no allegation regarding the purpose for which the loan was taken from the plaintiff. It merely states the existence of a debt. Its binding character is only to be inferred. According to the view hitherto taken by the Court in such cases, it is binding to the extent of Ruprai's share in the family property. The mortgage is one by conditional sale in which there is no personal covenant to pay. It is not likely that Narayansingh would know whether he could repudiate Ruprai's mortgages until he went to a lawyer, so far as his share was concerned. The allegation, so far as it relates to the existence of the debt, is not disputed now. The plaintiff was no party to those proceedings and there was no occasion for making a statement as to whether the debt was binding on Ruprai's share alone or on the whole family property. The utmost that can be contended is that Narayansingh at the time probably believed that the mortgage was binding. This is a mixed question of law and fact regarding which Narayansingh's belief may be well-founded or ill-founded. The plaintiff is now seeking to draw some far-fetched inferences from that admission. The Privy Council case, in my opinion, is no authority for drawing such inferences from the statement contained in Exhibit P-6. The same observation applies to Exhibits P-2, and P-4. I hold that the burden of proof is not shifted by these statements.

On the whole I agree with the lower Court that legal necessity for either of the mortgages has not been proved. This disposes of the case so far as Narayansingh is concerned and also the case against Noharsingh, except as regards the item of Rs. 3,500.

As against Noharsingh it is argued that there was an antecedent debt of the father which the mortgages had paid off. To prove the endorsement of Amritrao on the back of his mortgage the plaintiff called one witness P. W. No. 7. The witness says:—

"The endorsement on the back of Exhibit P-5 appears to be in Amritrao's handwriting. I cannot say for certain if the handwriting is Amritrao's. I have some doubts. I cannot say it is a forgery."

This was all said in examination-in-chief. I agree with the lower Court that the evidence of this witness is insufficient to prove the endorsement. There is no other witness on the point.

It is, however, rightly pointed out that the plaintiff has produced the original mortgage-deed from Amritrao. Some presumption, no doubt, arises from this fact, but it is still impossible to hold on this presumption that the plaintiff had paid Rs. 3,500 to Amritrao, and without a finding regarding the amount paid by the plaintiff it is impossible to give a decree. I am asked to give the plaintiff a further opportunity of proving the endorsement.

This I am not prepared to do, especially as no application to this effect was made to the lower Court after the examination of P. W. No. 7 or at any later stage.

In Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (4) Lord Shaw lays down what sort of antecedent debt will justify the father in charging the family property. His Lordship says:

"It must be an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate."

The father's power in the absence of necessity to deal with the joint family property is treated in the judgment as an exception to the general principle of Hindu Law.

The judgment then proceeds:

"The exception being allowed, as in the state of the authorities it must be, it appears to their Lordships to apply, and to apply to the case where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immoveable assets which do not personally belong to him but are joint family property. In their view of the rights of a father and his creditors, if the principle were extended further, then the exception would be made so wide as in effect to extinguish the sound and wholesome principle itself, viz., that no manager, guardian, or trustee can be entitled for his own purposes to dispose of the estate which is under his charge. In short, it may be said that the rule of this part of the Mitakshara Law is that the joint family estate is in this position: under his management he can neither obtain money for his own purposes for it nor can he obtain money for his own purposes upon it. To permit him to do so would enable him to sacrifice those rights which he was bound to conserve. This would be equivalent to sanctioning a plain and, it might be, a deliberate breach of trust. The Mitakshara Law does not warrant or legalize any such transaction.

"The limits of the principle of the exception have been thus set forth, because in their Lordships' opinion they form a guide to the settlement of the conflict of authority in India on the subject of antecedent debt."

The previous debt, having been secured upon the credit of the joint immoveable property, was not such an antecedent debt for which Ruprai could have charged his son's share in the joint family property.

The decree of the lower Court has awarded the plaintiff the mortgagor's share in the mortgaged property. There is no appeal from this decree by the defendants.

There appears to be an accidental slip in the judgment and decree which requires correction. Although no application has been made to me under section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code, I have the power to correct the decree, especially in view of the new section, Order XLI, rule 33. Ruprai's share in the family property was four annas. The lower Court says that the mortgage is binding on the defendants in respect of Ruprai's four annas. It then proceeds to add that the plaintiff is entitled to foreclose Ruprai's four-annas share of the village. The family, however, owned only twelve annas in the village, as correctly pointed out in an earlier part of the judgment. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to foreclose one-fourth of twelve annas, that is, three annas of the village. This was a mistake due to inadvertence, and the decree will, therefore, have to be modified by showing three annas share of Mouza Baharhod as the property to be foreclosed under the decree.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Under Order XXXIV, rules 2 and 5, Civil Procedure Code, a final decree for sale should be passed if the amount specified in the preliminary decree has not been paid into Court within the time specified. The Court will not recognise any plea, at the time of passing the decree for sale, to the effect that the amount has been paid out of Court to the decree-holder. In this respect, the scheme of the Code differs from the provisions laid down in section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 197, col. 1.]

If, however, between the passing of the preliminary decree and the passing of the decree for sale the defendant obtains a certificate under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, he can take advantage of it to reduce the amount for which the property is to be sold and the decision will be the same as if, at the time when the decree for sale was being made, he came forward and paid the amount into Court. [p. 197, col. 2.]

Mr. T. M. Ramaswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.

MAHENDRA RAM V. SINGI LAL.

Mr. A. S. Viswanatha Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decree for sale in a mortgage suit passed by the Subordinate Judge, of Ramnad. The plaintiff obtained a preliminary decree on the 27th September 1916 and the appellant, the 3rd defendant, complains that the Subordinate Judge, at the time of passing the decree for sale, refused to inquire into and recognise an alleged settlement of the decree out of Court on the 13th February 1917. The application for the decree for sale was made on the 25th June 1917 and, therefore, even if the procedure in Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, were applicable, the defendant was out of time and was too late to have the adjustment recorded. However, we think that the appeal fails on a larger basis. The scheme of the Code appears to us to be that, if the amount made payable in the preliminary decree is not paid into Court within the time limited, then the decree for sale is to be made. In this respect the provisions of Order XXXIV differ from section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, which provided for payment to the plaintiff or into Court. Order XXXIV, rule 2, clause (c), and rule 5, Civil Procedure Code, provide that, "where on or before the day fixed, the defendant pays into Court the amount declared due as aforesaid, together with such subsequent costs as are mentioned in rule 10," the Court is to pass a decree ordering the plaintiff to deliver up the documents and to re-transfer the mortgaged property and, if necessary, to put the defendant in possession. But sub-rule 2 says, where such payment is not so made, that is to say, where such payment is not made into Court, the Court shall pass a decree ordering the sale of the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof. Forms of mortgage decrees are given in Appendix D and Forms 7 and 8 are drawn up in the same way. Form No. 7 says that if the defendants pay into Court the sum declared due on account of principal, interest and costs, the plaintiff is to deliver up the documents, etc., and clause (3) is that if the defendant pays the said sum as aforesaid (that is, into Court) the mortgagor may apply, etc., Therefore we are of opinion that the scheme of the Code, so far as mortgage decrees are concerned, is that if the amount due under the preliminary decree has not been paid before the appointed day, a decree for sale is to be made and the machinery for sale is to be set in motion. This decision is in accordance with the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Piran Bibi v. Jitendra Mohan Mookerjee (1). It may be that if between the passing of the preliminary decree and the passing of the decree for sale the defendant obtains a certificate under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2, he can take advantage of that to reduce the amount for which the property is to be sold, and the decision will be the same as if at the time when the decree for sale was being made he came forward and paid that amount into Court. We do not think that the decision in Jogendra Prasad Narain Singh v. Gouri Sankar Prasad Sahu (2) amounts to more than this.

The provisions of the Code are imperative that, if the money is not paid into Court within the time limited, then there is to be a decree for sale. Those provisions were advisedly inserted in modification of the corresponding provisions of section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act and we are bound to give effect to them. On this ground the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1, applicability of—Withdrawal of suit—Sufficient ground, BYUNNI RAGHAVACHARYULU v. EPURI GOVINDASARI.

Under Order XXIII, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, a suit can only be withdrawn with permission to bring a fresh suit when the Court is satisfied that the suit must fail for reason of some formal defect or that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit. The sufficient grounds contemplated in the second clause of the rule must be grounds closely analogous to the grounds given in the first clause.

The provisions of Order XXIII, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, must be strictly applied.

Civil revision from an order of the Munsif, Siwan (Saran)

Mr. Rajendra Prasad, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Chandra Sekhar Banerjee and Samhusaran, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The order against which this application is made, purports to have been made under Order XXIII, rule 1. The facts upon which it was passed do not appear in the petition asking to withdraw the suit, but are stated to have been ascertained orally from the Pleader in-charge of the plaintiff's case. They were, firstly, that the plaintiff's father had not been made a party to the suit; and secondly, that the defendant's brother had not been made a party to the suit. In the affidavit filed in support of the application it appears that the defendant denied that he has a brother at all, and it is argued by the learned Vakil for the applicant that the plaintiff's father had nothing to do with the contract upon which the suit was brought and was not a necessary party to the suit at all. We wish to draw particular attention to the imperative nature of the rule under which the Munsif purported to act. A suit may only be withdrawn with permission to bring a fresh suit when the Court is satisfied that the suit must fail for reason of some formal defect or that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit. The sufficient grounds contemplated in the second clause should be grounds closely analogous to the grounds given in the first clause. We feel strongly that the Courts below are far too prone to allow suits to be withdrawn when they are more than a year old, so that the withdrawal of them from the file will improve the look of the file. The Munsif in the case before us does not appear to have been satisfied that the suit must fail. He was merely vaguely of opinion that the defect of parties might materially affect the decision. This was not a sufficient reason for giving the permission asked for. We are of opinion that in making the order against which this application has been made, the learned Munsif failed to exercise the jurisdiction which was vested in him by law to make a serious enquiry as to whether the suit must fail for defect of parties or not. We, therefore, remand the case to him and direct that he devote his attention strictly to the wording of the rule and that before granting permission to bring a fresh suit, he satisfy himself that the suit must fail by reason of a defect in it. We would draw the attention of other Courts to this decision, for we are of opinion, as we have already stated, that a great deal of laxity prevails with regard to the manner in which these applications to withdraw with permission to bring fresh suits are granted. Costs will follow the result. The hearing fee of this Court is two gold mohurs.

Case remanded.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Krishna-swami Aiyar, for the Appellants.—The lower Appellate Court erred in holding that, as the majority of the sharers granted the lease, it was binding on those not parties to it. No custom to that effect has been alleged or proved. The position is analogous to that of a trustee granting a permanent lease of trust property or of a Karnavan granting a permanent lease of Tarwad property. Such a lease is prejudicial to the whole body of landlords. If the lease is invalid, it is competent to the dissenting minority to eject the lessee.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar (with him Mr. L. Venkataraghava Aiyar), for the Respondents.—The grant of the lease was within the powers of the majority of the landlords. The result of the lease was to convert waste lands into cultivable lands. It was a prudent act of management.

In any event plaintiffs could not have sued for possession. Their only remedy was to sue for partition of their shares.

JUDGMENT.—The suit is by a few sharers of Samudayam or common lands for ejectment against the defendant, who has obtained a lease of it from the other shareholders. The lessee is himself a co-sharer and the Kurnam of the village. The lease is a permanent one. The extent mentioned is 60 acres, but it has been found by both the lower Courts that it comprises nearly 240 acres. There is a clause in the lease to the effect that the property should be regarded as comprising only 60 acres although the actual measurement may be more or less. The District Munsif held that the lease was not binding and decreed joint possession to the plaintiffs with the defendant.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge rightly held that the decree for joint possession was wrong. His view was that, as the lease was given by a majority of the share-holders, it is binding on the plaintiffs.

The principal question argued in second appeal is whether a majority of co-sharers can validly grant a perpetual lease of common property. The Courts below have found that it has not been proved that there is a custom authorising the majority to impose their will upon the minority. It is now settled law that, unless for unavoidable necessity, a trustee cannot grant a permanent lease of trust property. See Palaniappa Chetty v. Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (1). It has also been held that a Karnavan of a Malabar Tarwad cannot grant a permanent lease except under exceptional circumstances. The same rule applies to the managers of Hindu families. At best the position of the majority in this case can only be regarded as that of managers of joint property for themselves and on behalf of others, frima facie, therefore, their action in granting a permanent lease is ultra vires. The learned Vakil for the respondent referred to the fact that the lands were waste and that it was a prudent act of management to grant a permanent lease. Under the Madras Estates Land Act, in exceptional circumstances, the landlord for the time being is permitted to grant leases on favourable conditions. Even such a lease is not binding upon the successor. A fortiori a lease granted in perpetuity by a fraction of the share holders should not be regarded as binding upon the dissenting minority. Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar argued that, even if the lease is beyond the powers of the majority, the only remedy open to the plaintiffs is to sue for a partition of their shares. We are unable to agree with this contention. Waston & Co. v. Ramchund Dutt (2) was strongly relied on. In that case the propriety of the lease was not questioned. What the Judicial Committee decided was that it was not open to some of the shareholders to claim joint possession with the lessees who were let in by the other co-sharers. Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hossein (3) is also to the same effect. In Madan Mohun Shaha v. Rajab Ali (4) it was held that, a co-sharer being in possession, another co-sharer was not entitled to sue in ejectment against him. In Dhakhyani Debi v. Mana Rout (5) the Courts implied an assent on the part of the dissentients from the fact of their not objecting to the lease for over ten years. These authorities do not hold that, where a lease is found to be invalid, the lessee should be maintained in his possession leaving it to those objecting to his lease to sue for partition as their only remedy. In the present case we are unable to agree with the learned Vakil for the respondent that it was a prudent act of management to grant a perpetual lease of such a large extent of property. We cannot help feeling that the Kurnam, who must have known more or less the real extent of the property he had taken on lease, took undue advantage of the ignorance of the other co-sharers in obtaining a permanent lease and in getting the clause, we have referred to already, inserted in it.

In our opinion the proper decree to be passed is to declare that the lease is not binding on the plaintiffs and that they should be decreed possession for themselves and on behalf of the other co-sharers. We must, therefore, reverse the decrees of the Courts below and grant a decree as above indicated. The plaintiffs are entitled to their costs against the defendant in this and in the lower Appellate Court. As they were content to have a decree for joint possession in the first Court, we make no order as to costs in that Court.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 28—Mortgage-deed—Property not belonging to mortgagor included in deed—Registration in district in which such property situate, validity of.

Where property which is admitted to be in existence but which does not belong to the mortgagor is included in a mortgage-deed, the fact that the document is registered in the district in which that property is situate and that that property is the only property hypothecated within the registration district, is not sufficient, in the absence of any collusion between the parties or of knowledge on the part of the mortgagee, to invalidate the registration of the deed. First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Budaun.

Messrs. B. E. O'Connor and Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We have come to the conclusion that this appeal must be allowed and the suit sent back for re-trial. The suit is brought upon two simple mortgage-bonds by the plaintiff against the widow of one Bijai Singh. Bijai Singh borrowed two sums, one of Rs. 6,000 and the other of Rs. 1,000, in the month of August 1902 and by two documents, executed respectively on the 26th and 27th of August, hypothecated in respect of those loans certain property set out in the schedule to the bonds. He was in urgent need of money on the 29th or 30th of August for the purpose of lodging it in Court in respect of a decree which he had obtained in a pre-emption suit. He had been a member of a joint Hindu family who had partitioned their property by means of an award in the year 1896. That award was carried out by a decree in the same year. The father, Sher Singh, had died in 1897. By the award the property was partitioned between his four sons, Bijai Singh, the mortgagor in question, Niranjana Singh, his brother who is still living, Shib Singh, a brother who is dead, and Dirgpal Singh, who is still living and who was at that time a minor. The property hypothecated by Bijai Singh in these two documents in substance consisted of the property which he was awarded under that partition, although it is not clear that it did not include some other property as well, and also included $2\frac{1}{2}$ biswas in a certain Mauza named Kachaura which had in fact been awarded in the decree to the minor, Dirpal Singh. Prima facie it would, therefore, appear to be established, at any rate for the purpose of our decision to-day, that Bijai Singh had no title to this property and could not hypothecate it to the plaintiff. It is this which has given rise to all the difficulty in the case. If this property had not been included in the bonds, the registration office at Budaun would not have been the proper place under the Registration Act for the registration of the bonds. If, on the other hand, this property was included, then Budaun was the proper place for the registration of the bonds which were in fact registered at Budaun. The learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit on the ground that the registration was invalid, purporting to follow the decision of the Privy Council in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Srimati Hari Dasi Debi (1). We say purporting to follow that decision, because it is difficult to say what exactly the learned Subordinate Judge meant to find as a question of fact in his judgment. The question which we have to decide as a matter of law is this, whether, when property is admitted to be in existence and has been included in a mortgage-deed but is shown not to have been the property of the mortgagor, the fact that the document has been registered in the district to which that property belongs is sufficient to invalidate the registration when that property is the only property hypothecated within the registration district.

A priori no reading section 28 of the Indian Registration Act No. XVI of 1908 there would appear to be no ground for this contention. The section provides that "the document shall be presented for registration in the office of a Sub-Registrar within whose sub-district the whole or some portion of the property to which such document relates is situate." Whether or not the mortgagor had a good title to this piece of property, does not affect the question whether this property is situated in the district where registration took place and whether the document relates to it. It would be a strange result if it were the law that upon proof that the mortgagee had obtained no title to a small portion of property on account of which the place of registration was selected, that he should lose not only the benefit of his security over that small portion but the entire benefit of the hypothecated property, particularly when, as might happen in many cases, he had been deceived by the mortgagor. This is the view which has been taken by a two Judge Bench in Calcutta in the case of Broja Gopal v. Abinash Chandra (2), which is not reported in any authorised report but which is to be found in 14 Calcutta Weekly Notes 532. We think that decision might be reported in the authorised reports. The Judges refer to a decision of the Privy Council many years ago, in which it was held that a small portion of the property covered by the deed was sufficient to give the Sub-Registrar jurisdiction in whose sub-district that portion was situate. We agree with the decision of the Calcutta Bench and it, therefore, becomes a question of fact and it is really a question of fact in every case whether, as the Privy Council says in its judgment in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Srimati Hari Dasi Debi (1), the parties have intentionally by a mutual collusive arrangement inserted in the deed property either which does not in fact exist or which, while in existence, is not intended by either of them to be a part of the security. Where the parties are colluding for the express purpose of evading the Registration Law, in such case, applying the Privy Council decision to the section, the result would be that the deed in question does not relate to the property, inasmuch as neither party had any intention of dealing with the property. On the other hand, where the real fact is that the parties intended to deal with the property, the condition of the mortgagor's title does not affect the question of registration. Applying these principles, which we think are clear and well-settled the question which we have to determine in this case is whether it is proved that the mortgagee was aware of the defect in the mortgagor's title and expressly consented to the inclusion of this property in the deed for the purpose merely of complying with the Registration Law. In our view nothing short of a finding to that extent would be sufficient and the finding, if arrived at, must be supported by clear evidence. It is suggested in this case that there is in the first place evidence of the fact. That is undoubtedly true; but the evidence on this point is far from satisfactory. On the one hand, the plaintiff himself did not go into the box and has exposed himself to just criticisms on that account; but it is difficult to see what more he could have said than the documents which were presented on behalf of Bijai Singh, unless he was prepared to admit what the defendants allege. Now the documents, the khewat and the revenue records, generally, were such as to justify the acceptance, by any purchaser or mortgagee, of Bijai Singh's title to this piece of property. For reasons of their own, possibly not unconnected with a scheme of this kind, the family had deliberately entered Bijai Singh's name as being in possession of this property, although it had been awarded to his minor brother. A witness named Sham Lal was called on behalf of the plaintiff. He deposed that Bijai Singh came to the house of the plaintiff with his brother Niranjan Singh and when asked with reference to this property referred the plaintiff to the khewat, and that the plaintiff saw the khewat and next day asked his servant Pandit Gumanj Lal to inspect the registers of the Registration Office. That evidence, although not supported by the testimony of the plaintiff himself, might have been contradicted by Niranjan Singh and was not. A Pleader, who has been practising since 1880 and has acted for the defendants for many years and is now indebted to them in an amount of Rs. 800 or Rs. 900, was called by the defendants although he had been summoned by the plaintiff, and it is upon his evidence and his evidence alone that it is suggested that it is proved that the plaintiff knew quite well that this was a fictitious entry in the deed. He attested both the documents and identified Bijai Singh at the time of the registration. He knew the actual ownership of the property perfectly well and was under the impression, according to him, that this fictitious inclusion of the minor's property in the deed was done to avoid the journey to Dataganj, where registration would otherwise have taken place, and to enable Bijai Singh to borrow money for the satisfaction of the pre-emption decree. Whatever the profession may have thought before the Privy Council decision, we are of opinion that an act of this kind on the part of a professional gentleman who is said to be a gentleman of respectability was highly questionable. However that may be, we have to consider whether his evidence really proves anything against the plaintiff. He says that all of them, including himself, Bijai Singh and the plaintiff, knew that the property did not belong to Bijai Singh. We do not think that this is evidence that the plaintiff knew. It is merely an expression of opinion on the part of the witness. He does not tell us how the plaintiff is supposed to have known or how he came to know that the plaintiff knew. Nothing would have been easier, if there was any substance in the allegation, than for the witness to have stated in unequivocal terms to the Court how the plaintiff became acquainted with the true state of the facts. In the presence of the document which absolutely contradicted the witness, we think there was no evidence that the plaintiff knew, and, therefore, no evidence that he was a conscious party to the fictitious entry in the deed. Inasmuch as it was admitted that the property was in existence and was supposed to be in the possession of the mortgagor, the onus was on the defendants to show that both parties intended the entry to be fictitious. We do not think the Court below really found that the plaintiff knew. It was prepared to accept the Pleader's evidence but it does not expressly find any knowledge at all on the part of the plaintiff. On the other hand, it is said in the judgment that the question is whether the plaintiff should not have made more careful inquiries at the time. This question would be quite irrelevant if the Court below held that the plaintiff knew the real truth. It appears to us that the decision has gone against the plaintiff merely on the finding that the plaintiff ought to have known under all the circumstances that Bijai Singh had no power to transfer Mauza Kachaura and that, therefore, he was not acting in good faith. This is not sufficient. The appeal must be allowed with costs and the case remanded to the Court below to be tried out on the merits.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER NO. 327 OF 1916.

April 25, 1918.

Present:—Sir John Wallis, Kt., Chief Justice,
Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice
Spencer.

A. L. A. ALAGAPPA CHETTIAR—

RESPONDENT NO. 9—APPELLANT

versus

CHOCKALINGAM CHETTY AND OTHERS

—PETITIONERS NOS. 1 TO 6, RESPONDENTS NOS.

1 TO 8 AND ADDITIONAL RESPONDENT—

RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1903), s. 96, O. XLI, r. 22—Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1937), ss. 46, 47—Appeal—“In regard to proceedings under this Act”, meaning of—Memorandum of objections, whether can be presented—Appeal barred by time, effect of—“Procedure on hearing,” meaning of.

A memorandum of objections can be presented in an appeal against a decision under the Provincial Insolvency Act. [p. 209, col. 1; p. 211, col. 1.]

Where, however, the appeal is dismissed as presented out of time, the memorandum of objections cannot be heard. [p. 211, col. 1; p. 212, col. 1.]

(Authorities reviewed.)

Per Wallis, C. J.—The expression “in regard to proceedings under this Act in Courts subordinate to them” in section 47 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act is wide enough to cover cases in the subordinate Courts which come before the High Court or District Court on appeal or revision as well as applications for transfer, etc. The procedure prescribed in the Civil Procedure Code is the standard procedure and applies not only to insolvency cases in original Courts but also to cases of appeal and revision provided for in the Insolvency Act. [p. 203, col. 2; p. 209, col. 1.]

The right of a respondent to proceed by way of memorandum of objections is strictly incidental to the filing of the original appeal in time, and it is open to a party against whom a memorandum of objections has been filed to set up the bar that the original appeal was filed out of time [p. 211, col. 1.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The right to prefer an appeal by way of memorandum of objections is an extension of the right of appeal, which must be given by Statute. Statutory provisions relating to such rights should be strictly construed. Order XLI, rule 22, of the Civil Procedure Code must, if possible, not be extended in favour of the right of a respondent to file a memorandum of objections so as to prejudice parties who have obtained a decree in their favour in the lower Court and who might reasonably entertain the belief that, as the time for preferring an appeal has expired, the rights which have been established in their favour under the decision of the Court of first instance have become finally secure. [p. 211, col. 2.]

The expression “in regard to civil suits” in section 47 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act includes proceedings in appeal in civil suits. [p. 207, col. 1.]

Per Spencer, J.—The word “hearing” in the heading to Order XLI, Civil Procedure Code, means hearing on the merits, and the heading “procedure on hearing” indicates that the respondent’s right to take cross-objections, which up to the time of the hearing was an inchoate right, becomes perfected at the hearing of the appeal. The words “upon the hearing” in section 561 of the old Code were probably omitted in the new Code as being redundant. [p. 212, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court, Ramnad at Madura, dated the 18th July 1916, in Insolvency Petition No. 6 of 1913.

This appeal and the memoranda of objections coming on for hearing on the 21st and 22nd January 1918, upon perusing the petition of appeal, the memoranda of objections, the judgment and order of the lower Court, and the material papers in the case, and upon hearing the arguments of Messrs. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar and K. Eshayam Aiyangar, for the Appellant, and of Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and A. Venkatraghuliah, for the 6th Respondent, Mr. B. Sitarama Row, for the 7th Respondent, Mr. S. R. Muthusamy Aiyar, for the 7th and the 8th Respondents, Mr. A. Srirangachariar, for the 9th to 12th Respondents, the Hon’ble Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the 12th and 14th Respondents and of Mr. K. S. Desikan, for the 15th Respondent, and the other respondents not appearing in person or by Pleader and the case having stood over for consideration till the 5th February 1918, the Court (Oldfield and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

OLDFIELD, J.—The decision under appeal is one adjudicating 7, 9, 12, 13 respondents insolvents and avoiding transfers evidenced by Exhibit B series, Appeal against

ALAGAPPA CHETTIAR v. CHOCKALINGAM CHETTY.

Order No. 337 of 1916 is by the transferee under these documents. The memoranda of objections are by 7 and 9 to 14 respondents, the persons adjudicated and their sons, for the cancellation of the order of adjudication. If the memoranda succeed, the order under appeal must be set aside in toto; and we have, therefore, dealt with them first. We consider at present two preliminary objections taken by 6th respondent, a creditor, who in consequence of an attempt by the original petitioners to withdraw the petition, was given the carriage of the proceedings by the lower Court and who now opposes the appeal and memoranda. His first objection is that memoranda of objections are not authorized by insolvency law and cannot be heard; his second, arising from the fact that this appeal is admittedly out of time with reference to the decision in Kopparthi Lingayya v. Araveti Chinnarayana (1), is that a memorandum cannot be heard on an appeal, which itself cannot be heard, because it is out of time.

That memoranda cannot be entertained in insolvency appeals is argued on the ground that the Provincial Insolvency Act contains no reference to them. A memorandum is the means, by which a respondent can take any cross-objection to the decree or order, which he could have taken by way of appeal, and in view of Munisami Mudaly v. Abbu Reddy (2) nothing turns on the fact that the objection raises, as it does in the present case, an issue between him and his co-respondent. A memorandum, although it can be presented only in special circumstances (a qualification material in the sequel), is in substance indistinguishable from an appeal. It follows that the right to present a memorandum, like the right to present an appeal, "cannot be assumed" and that "both alike must be given by Statute or some authority equivalent to it." Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (3). And certainly no right to present a memorandum is given explicitly by Statute in the case before us.

The first answer attempted is that such a right is given by necessary implication, since the recognition of a right of appeal involves recognition of a right of objection under the general law applicable to appellate proceedings. But, although a memorandum may be indistinguishable from an appeal in substance, the right of appeal is distinguishable from the right of objection, since they are exercisable by different persons in different circumstances, objection being open only to a respondent when an appeal has been filed by an appellant; and it does not follow from the recognition of the right of one person in one set of circumstances, that a similar right must be recognized in favour of another person in others. In fact the right of objection represents an extension of the right of appeal, for which distinct warrant must be required; and such warrant is not forthcoming in any general law applicable to appellate proceedings. For the existence of such general law is impliedly negated by the decisions in Sesha Ayyar v. Nagarathna Lala (4) and Kausalia v. Gulab Kuar (5), in which it was not invoked or applied, the latter relating directly to the right of objection; and it may be observed that we have not been shown in the present case any such course of practice as that referred to in it as a possible ground of decision. The attempt in those cases was to apply, not any general law, but that enunciated in the Civil Procedure Code consistently, it would appear, with the application to the appeals in question of the provision then corresponding with the present section 96; and, when the general law was relied on in Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (3), the judgment dealt with it as represented by that and the connected provisions. I accordingly turn to the argument that section 96 is applicable to appeals under the Provincial Insolvency Act, and that the right of objection follows from its application.

Section 96 authorizes appeals from all decisions of Civil Courts, "save when otherwise expressly provided in the body of the Code or by any other law;" and no doubt section 46, Provincial Insolvency Act, which purports to deal with appeals under it, contains nothing similar to the provisions in section 48 of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) and section 19 (3), Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1899), by which all orders not specified as appealable are declared final. On the other hand, the provision in section 46 for a right of appeal and, a point to which I return, the absence of other provisions regarding appeals or the procedure in them indicate that the right of appeal under the Provincial Insolvency Act is conferred by it alone, is subject to the restrictions it imposes and cannot be enlarged by the application of section 96 and other provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. This indication is strengthened by reference to those restrictions, the requirements of leave to appeal in certain cases and the mention of periods of limitation, and the absence of similar provisions regarding objections. It has not been shown how any argument in favour of the right of objection can be limited in its application to the cases of appeals, for which no leave is required. It was no doubt held in Raghunathdas Gopaldas v. Secretary of State (6) that a provision permitting an appeal to the High Court attracted the application of section 561, Civil Procedure Code, which at that time authorized the filing of objections; and not the less so, because an appeal could not be filed without the certificate of the original Tribunal. But the judgment notices the distinction between a certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal and leave to appeal, such as is now in question, granted to a particular individual in respect of a particular part of the case, that in which he is interested. And the requirement of leave to appeal is material; for, when it is required, it is difficult to assume either that the objector is at liberty to proceed without obtaining it and has thus been placed in a better position than the appellant or that the former's obligation to obtain leave is to be based on mere implication from the provision regarding the latter. Again, although the periods specified for appeals are identical with those provided for ordinary appeals in Articles 152, 156, Schedule I, Limitation Act, it was thought necessary to specify them distinctly in the section; and, when limitation was thus dealt with, it is hard to believe that the necessity for a provision similar to Order XLI, rule 22 (1), was overlooked or that such a provision was to be imported from the Civil Procedure Code. As regards both leave and limitation the easy and natural explanation for the omission of provision for memoranda of objections is that memoranda are not contemplated. The specification in section 46 of the appeals, which can be entertained and of the conditions imposed on their entertainment indicate, in my opinion, an intention to deal with the law relating to appeals exhaustively in that section and to exclude the application of section 96, Civil Procedure Code, with all its implications.

Lastly it is argued that the law relating to appeals is to be found also in section 47, Provincial Insolvency Act, and that its references to powers and procedure impose on this Court the duty to deal with the objections in accordance with the Civil Procedure Code and confer on respondents the right to make them. The first objection to this is that, if the section is intended to deal generally with appellate work, the respondent's right to make and the Court's duty to deal with objections, although they are provided for under the heading "Procedure on hearing" in Order XLI, involve an extension of the right of appeal, which, as the decision in Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving (7) shows, cannot be described as matter of procedure; and if the question is of the Court's powers, it is an unusual and strained construction to treat the reference to them as conferring a right on the party. But in fact the argument against the application of section 47 rests on the broader foundation, that no part of it applies to appellate business proper. Sub-section (1) applies only "to the Court" and allows it the powers and procedure appropriate to the exercise of original civil jurisdiction; and it, therefore, is irrelevant in this connection. Sub-section (2) applies to High Courts and District Courts, which no doubt exercise appellate powers, but deals with their position only "in regard to proceedings in Courts subordinate to them," not in appeals before them, and allows them the powers and procedure appropriate, not to appeals, but to civil suits; and the effect of the sub-section must, therefore, be taken as being, not the application to their appellate work of any of the provisions of part VII, Civil Procedure Code, but only of the powers of transfer and withdrawal and the procedure relating thereto, referred to in sections 22, 23, 24.

As, in my opinion, the right to present memoranda of objections involves an extension of the right of appeal, which the Provincial Insolvency Act does not sanction expressly and is not shown to sanction by implication or with reference to any general principle applicable to appellate proceedings, I would hold that, the memoranda before us cannot be heard. As, however, my learned brother entertains doubts on the point and it is one of general importance, I concur in referring to a Full Bench the question:—

"Whether a memorandum of objections can be presented in an appeal against a decision under the Provincial Insolvency Act?"

On the question, which would arise in case a memorandum of objections can be presented, there is a clear conflict of authority in the decisions of this Court, which we cannot resolve. See Kanirkamanna Imath Narayana v. Maosad Kanirkamanna (8), Devibhashyam Venkanna v. Peddinti Venkataramanayya (9), Biridugadda Venkadu v. Receiver of N. & M. Estate (10) and Second Appeal No. 1864 of 1916. It is, therefore, necessary to refer to the Full Bench this question also:—

"Whether a memorandum of objections, presented in an appeal which is dismissed as out of time, can be heard?"

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The preliminary questions for consideration are:—

(1) Whether a respondent is entitled to file a memorandum of objections in an appeal filed under section 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

(2) Whether, if such a memorandum of objections is admissible, it can be heard after the appeal is dismissed as presented out of time.

(8) 8 Ind. Cas. 140; 8 M. L. T. 447.

(9) 32 Ind. Cas. 579; 19 M. L. T. 86; 3 L. W. 109.

(10) 30 Ind. Cas. 832; (1915) M. W. N. 792.

As regards the first question, the Provincial Insolvency Act is clearly not a self contained or complete Act in itself. (See second paragraph, page 570, of 33 M. L. J. 562 and also page 574.) As regards procedure, section 47 of the Provincial Insolvency Act directs the Court exercising insolvency jurisdiction to follow the same procedure as it has and follows in the exercise of original jurisdiction. Clause 2 of the same section directs High Courts and District Courts to follow the same procedure in regard to proceedings under the Act in Courts subordinate to them as the High Court and District Courts follow in regard to civil suits. The High Court and the District Courts have got appellate jurisdiction in respect of decisions passed in certain matters in insolvency proceedings in the lower Courts. As regards appeals under the Civil Procedure Code, Order XLI, rules 1 to 21, prescribe rules of procedure relating to several necessary matters such as the form of the appeal, stay of proceedings in the lower Court on appeal, endorsements to be made upon the memoranda of appeal, demands for security, sending of notices on appeal, calling for records from the lower Courts, fixing days for the hearing of appeal, service of notices on opposite party, right to begin and so on. There is no provision in the Insolvency Act as regards any of these matters of procedure in respect of appeals filed under section 46 of that Act, (at least until rules are framed under section 51 by the High Court) and unless we hold that they are incorporated in the Act by the provision in section 47, clause 2, which directs the High Court and District Courts in regard to proceedings of subordinate Courts to follow the procedure in regard to civil suits, there is an unexplained omission to make such a provision in the Act. I, therefore, am inclined to think that section 47, clause 2, does apply to appellate business proper of the High Court and District Courts and not only to the powers of transfer and withdrawal referred to in sections 22, 23 and 24 of the Civil Procedure Code. Having regard to the position of section 47 as immediately following section 46, which latter section gives the power of appeal, I think section 47, clause 2, though not as clearly and happily worded as it might have been, was intended by the Legislature to apply the provisions of all the rules under Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code in respect of the regulation of the procedure in appeal, appeals being only continuations of the original proceedings in suits. I think that the expression "in regard to civil suits" means "in regard to all proceedings in civil suits" and includes proceedings in appeals in civil suits.

Then comes the question whether Order XLI, rule 22, which empowers the respondent to file a memorandum of objections is a rule of procedure. No doubt several provisions relating to substantive law are incorporated in the Civil Procedure Code but the rules in Order XLI from rules 9 to 15 are entitled as "procedure on admission of appeal," rules 16 to 37 are headed as "procedure on hearing", and rule 22 occurs among these latter rules described as falling under the head of "procedure on hearing". This is no doubt not conclusive on the point and there is much to be said (as shown by my learned brother in his opinion) for the opposite view that whatever may be the nature of the rules 9 to 37 other than rule 22, rule 22 gives a substantial right of appeal just as sections 96, 97 and 100 in the body of the Civil Procedure Code and section 46 of the Insolvency Act give a substantial right of appeal. In Raghunathdas Gopaldas v. Secretary of State (6) Jenkins, C. J., and Aston, J., had to construe a section which stated that subject to the provisions of section 48, sub-section 11, of the City of the Bombay Improvement Act, 1V of 1898, the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code with respect to appeals and original decrees "shall, so far as they can be made applicable, apply to appeals under that sub section." The learned Judges held that the procedure as to memorandum of objections in section 561 of the old Civil Procedure Code became thereby applicable, that is, that the respondent became entitled to file a memorandum of objections on an appeal having been filed with the necessary permission.

I think that without much straining of language, it could be argued that every party to the insolvency proceedings is given the substantial right of appeal under section 46 (just as every party aggrieved is given a right of appeal under sections 96, 97 and 100 of the Civil Procedure Code) and that the respondent

(who as a party has such a right of appeal) is merely allowed to avail himself of an additional rule of procedure by way of memorandum of objections as provided for in Order XLI, rule 22, in exercising his said right of appeal. On the whole I am inclined to the view that the Legislature intended that Order XLI, rule 22, about the right to file a memorandum of cross-objections (the objections being confined under that rule to those which the respondent could have taken by way of appeal) could be availed of by a respondent where an appeal had been filed under section 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. It was objected that one of the classes of appeals provided for under section 46, that is, the class coming under clause 3 of the section, requires leave of the District Court or of the High Court, and, if a memorandum of objections is allowed after an appeal has been filed under that clause, it will contravene the intention of the Act, as Order XLI, rule 22 of the Civil Procedure Code, makes no mention of the leave of the Court being required for filing a memorandum of objections in any case. I am not, however, impressed with this argument as Order XLI, rule 22, restricts the right to take cross-objections to those grounds which the respondent could have taken by way of appeal, and, as he could not advance grounds by way of appeal without the leave of the District Court or of the High Court in a case falling under section 46, clause 3, he could not file a memorandum of objections also in such an appeal without the leave of the Court [see also the observations in Raghunathdas Gopaldas v. Secretary of State (6), where the learned Judges seem to hold that once permission is given to appeal and an appeal is filed, a separate permission for a memorandum of objections is not necessary]. However, I should like, if possible, to express no final opinion on these points and to have the questions argued before a Full Bench and decided finally by such a Bench.

Coming to the second question as to whether a memorandum of objections can be heard after the appeal is dismissed as barred by limitation, there has been a conflict of authority in the several High Courts, and, in this Court itself, there has been such a conflict. [See Kanirkamanna

ALAGAPPA CHETTIAR v. CHOCKALINGAM CHETTY.

Imath Narayana v. Maosad Kanirkamanna (8), Deivibhashyam Venkanna v. Peddinti Venkataramanayya (9) and Second Appeal No. 1864 of 1916.] I would, therefore, refer the second question also for the decision of the Full Bench if the first question is answered in the affirmative by the Full Bench.

This appeal came on for hearing before the Full Bench on the 9th and 10th April 1918.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar (with him Mr. A. Venkatarayaliah), for Respondent No. 6, took the preliminary objection that a memorandum of objections could not be heard on an appeal from an order passed under the Provincial Insolvency Act.

The Provincial Insolvency Act is a self-contained enactment and does not provide for cross-objections by the respondent to an appeal. The right to appeal is a statutory right, and the right to present a memorandum of objections must also be conferred by Statute. The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to appeals cannot be invoked for insolvency cases. Section 46 of the Insolvency Act is exhaustive as to appeals from orders under the Act. There are restrictions placed on the right of appeal, and the appeals that can be entertained are specified. The period of limitation is also distinctly mentioned in the section. Conditions are imposed on the entertainment of appeals. Then, the requirement of leave to appeal indicates that the Legislature did not intend to confer on the respondent the right to take cross-objections. It would be invidious that while the appellant can only appeal on the sanction of Court the objector should be placed in a better position by being enabled to present his objections without such leave. These limitations on the right and the absence of other provisions or procedure relating to appeals show that the provisions of Act III of 1907 cannot be enlarged by the application of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code.

In any event, when the appeal itself was presented out of time, the respondent could not be heard on his objections. Under Order XLI, rule 22 (4), Civil Procedure Code, it is expressly provided that a memorandum of objections could be heard where the original appeal is withdrawn or is dismissed for default, but there is no such provision where the appeal is dismissed on the ground of limitation or some other preliminary ground.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Appellant.—Section 46 of Act III of 1907 was not intended to be exhaustive as to the procedure relating to appeals. The right of appeal is, no doubt, subject to the restrictions and limitations contained in the Act, but where the Act is silent as to procedure, it is permissible to follow the procedure laid down for appeals in the Civil Procedure Code. Act III of 1907 is not self-contained. The provisions of section 47 of the latter Act make the position clear. The section directs High Courts and District Courts to follow the same procedure in regard to proceedings under the Act in subordinate Courts as they follow in regard to civil suits. That means the procedure to be followed in appeals, and the procedure must relate to what is contained in the Civil Procedure Code.

The right to file memorandum of objections arises from the fact of the presentation of the appeal and its fate cannot be contingent on the appeal failing on a question of limitation.

Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar, in reply.—Section 47 of the Provincial Insolvency Act cannot apply to appeals and sub-section 2 of the section can only refer to powers of withdrawal and transfer.

OPINION.

WALLIS, C. J.—Section 47 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act provides that, subject to the provisions of the Act, the Provincial Insolvency Court in regard to proceedings under the Act shall have the same powers and follow the same procedure as it has and follows in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction, thus making the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code clearly applicable, as far as may be to original proceedings under the Act. This sub-section applies to District Courts in the exercise of original jurisdiction in insolvency. Sub-section (2) then applies exactly the same provisions in the same language to the High Courts and District Courts "in regard to proceedings under this Act in Courts subordinate to them," and the first question is, what is the effect of these words. Though not very happily expressed they are, in my opinion, wide enough to cover cases in the subordinate Courts which come before the High Court or District Court on appeal or revision as well as on applications for transfer, etc., and there are sufficient indications that they were used by the Legislature in this sense. The procedure prescribed in the Civil Procedure Code is the standard procedure, and no reason has been suggested why it should have been made applicable in insolvency cases only in the original Court and not also to cases of appeal and revision provided for in the Act. There must be some procedure or other governing such proceedings, and if it had been intended that it should be prescribed by rules made under section 51, it would have been specifically mentioned in sub-section 2, among the other important matters as to which rules were to be made under that section. So far as appeals to the High Court are concerned, the sub-section so construed may, in my opinion, be regarded as superfluous, because, under section 590 of the Code of 1882, now section 108, the procedure prescribed in Chapter XLI, which deals with appeals from original decrees, was made applicable, as far as might be, to appeals from orders under any special or local law in which a different procedure is not provided. No different procedure is provided in the Provincial Insolvency Act as it was in the Insolvents Act of 11 and 12 Viet. C. 21, to which for that reason the provisions of section 590 were held inapplicable in Brown, In the matter of (11).

Clearly, therefore, in either view the procedure prescribed by the Code is applicable to appeals to the High Court under the Provincial Insolvency Act, and it is unnecessary to refer to section 117 and sections 3, 4 of the Code, which were also relied on.

The next question depends on the construction of Order XLI, rule 22 (formerly section 561), Civil Procedure Code, which has given rise to much difference of opinion. In Calcutta it was held that section 561 did not generally entitle one respondent in an appeal to present a memorandum of objection against another respondent, and this was followed in Kallu v.

Manni (12). On the other hand, it was held by this Court to be permissible in Timmayya Mada v. Lakshmana Bhakta (13), approved in Kulaikoda Pillai v. Viswanatha Pillai (14). In these circumstances the section was amended in 1908 by substituting in sub-section (1) "cross-objection" for "objection" and in sub-section (3) "the party who may be affected by such objection" for "appellant", while the new sub-section (4) speaks of "such notice to the other parties as the Court thinks fit." The interpretation put upon these amendments has not been uniform. A Full Bench of this Court in Munisami Mudaly v. Abbu Reddy (2) has relied mainly on the previous practice of this Court, but that consideration has less weight in a case like this, where the Legislature in making the amendments must be presumed to have intended to introduce uniformity of practice in place of the diversity prevailing in the different High Courts. While the Bombay High Court adheres to the view that cross-objections must be aimed at the appellant in Nursej Virji v. Alfred H. Harrison (15), it has been held in Calcutta in Jadurandan Prosad Singha v. Koer Kallyan Singh (16), (same case reported in 16 Calcutta Weekly Notes 612), that rule 22 (3) introduces a modification of the old rule in section 561, that the effect of the alteration is to leave no doubt that a respondent may prefer a cross-objection against a co-respondent, but that the limits of the rule are not attempted to be defined. The Allahabad Court takes a similar view, Balgobind v. Ram Sarup (17).

In none of these cases has the effect of the substitution of "cross-objection" for "objection" in rule 22 (1) been dealt with. Prima facie the intention would appear to have been only to allow objections which arose in some way out of the appeal, whether aimed at the appellant or at another respondent. This discussion is not irrelevant to the present question, as the more widely rule 22 is interpreted, the more serious would be the consequences of answering the second question referred to us in the affirmative. At the time when the present Code was enacted in 1908, that question had been expressly decided in Ramjiwan Mal v. Ohand Mal (18) with reference to the terms of section 561 of the old Code, where the Court held that, when the appeal was dismissed as out of time, the objection could not be heard, as the entertainment of the objections was contingent and dependent upon the hearing of the appeal. In the course of the judgment Mahmood, J., observed that to decide otherwise would "be practically holding that an appellant who prefers an appeal long after the prescribed period of limitation may confer upon the respondent the right of having the appeal of his own heard in the shape of objections under section 561, Civil Procedure Code, although, if the original appeal was barred by limitation, a fortiori such objections ought to be barred also." The Legislature of 1903 must be taken to have known of this decision, and it is exceedingly unlikely that they intended to overrule it by implication. The decision no doubt proceeded on the ground that the case fell within the ratio decidendi of the earlier cases, in which it had been held that the objections could not be heard when the appeal had been withdrawn or dismissed for default. Those decisions were based on the language of section 343 of the Code of 1859 and section 561 of the Code of 1882 by which a respondent, although he had not appealed against any part of the decree, was entitled "upon the hearing" to take any objection to the decree which he could have taken by way of appeal. The view taken by the Courts when the section was so worded was, as explained by Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., in Dhondi Jagannath v. Collector of Salt Revenue (19), that when once the hearing of the appeal had commenced, the respondent's right to take his objections, which up to the time of hearing was an inchoate right, became perfected. The Legislature has now removed from this section the words "upon the hearing" upon which these decisions rested, and has expressly overruled the decisions themselves in the case of withdrawal or dismissal of the appeal by enacting in sub-section (4); "Where, in any case in which any respondent has under this rule filed a memorandum of objection, the original appeal is withdrawn or is dismissed for default, the objection so filed may nevertheless be heard and determined after such notice to the other parties as the Court thinks fit." It does not, however, follow that Ramjiwan Mal v. Ohand Mal (18) was also intended to be overruled. If that had been the intention of the Legislature, it would probably have added some such words as "or is dismissed as having been filed out of time."

There are moreover strong reasons for not attributing any such intention to the Legislature. The right of parties to a suit to treat the decree as final, when no appeal has been filed within the prescribed period of limitation, is a substantive right of great value as pointed out by the Privy Council in Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving (7) and in Saudagar Singh v. Pardeep Narayan Singh (20), and there is a strong presumption against any intention on the part of the Legislature to interfere with it unnecessarily. It is no doubt impaired to some extent by rule 22, which may have the effect of extending the respondent's time for appealing or even giving a fresh starting point. Provided, however, the original appeal is required to be filed in time, the interference is a very limited one, and may be defended as necessary to enable the Court to do full justice in disposing of the case on appeal and as governed by the same considerations as have led to the enactment of the new rule 33, which gives the Court a discretionary power to interfere in appeal even as regards parties who have not been made respondents, and respondents who have not filed any memorandum of objection. It would, however, largely and unnecessarily impair this valuable right to hold that the filing of an appeal by one party, even though out of time, has the effect of enabling the respondents to file appeals not only against the appellant but against one another. The objections urged by Mahmood, J., in Ramjiwan Mal v.

ALLAGAPPA CHATTIAR V. CHOCKALINGAM CHETTY.

Chand Mal (18) against such a course have lost none of their force, and there is no reason to suppose that the Legislature intended to disregard them. Even greater difficulties arise if the present rule is treated as giving respondent an unrestricted right of filing memoranda of objection, because the decision on a question raised by a respondent in the same interest as the appellant may give occasion under rule 33 for the modification of the decree in favour of the appellant himself whose appeal is ex hypothesi barred.

The true rule would appear to be that the right of respondents to proceed by way of memorandum of objection is strictly incident to the filing of the original appeal in time, and that it is open to a party against whom a memorandum of objection has been filed to set up the bar that the original appeal was filed out of time. It is no doubt true that a respondent, who is served with a notice of appeal, cannot always be sure whether the appeal was filed in time or not and if so, whether or not delay will be excused and that he may, therefore, feel bound to file a memorandum of objection and incur the cost of Court-fees and briefing Counsel in support of the memorandum. That, in my opinion, is not a sufficient reason for taking the other view. Moreover in a proper case the hardship may be met by ordering the appellant to pay the costs of the memorandum. I answer the second question in the negative.

SADASIVA Aiyar, J.—In the Order of Reference, I indicated my inclination to answer the first question referred in the affirmative. In other words, while expressing no final opinion, I gave some reasons for holding that a respondent was entitled to file a memorandum of objections in an appeal against a decision under the provisions of the Insolvency Act. My Lord, in the opinion just now pronounced by him, has come to the conclusion that that question should be answered in the affirmative and I agree entirely therewith and have nothing to add to what I have said already.

The second question referred has caused me more difficulty. I expressed no opinion whatever upon that question in the Order of Reference. The right to prefer an appeal cannot be claimed by a litigant as a matter of course but should be given by Statute Law. The right to prefer an appeal by way of memorandum of objections is an extension of the right of appeal which must, therefore, also be given by Statute. Statutory provisions relating to such rights should be strictly construed. Order XLI, rule 22, corresponding to old section 561, must, if possible, therefore, not be extended in favour of the right of a respondent to file a memorandum of objections so as to prejudice parties who have obtained a decree in their favour in the lower Court and who might reasonably entertain the belief that as the time for preferring an appeal has expired, the rights which have been established in their favour under the decision of the Court of first instance had become finally secure. This Court has no doubt in Munisami Mudaly v. Abbu Reddy (2) allowed one respondent to file cross-objections against another, and this is a further reason for strictly confining the right to file such objections. Supposing the plaintiff is the appellant and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are the respondents in an appeal and the plaintiff and the 2nd defendant are in collusion and the suit was dismissed by the District Munsif, upholding the 1st defendant's contentions. The plaintiff appeals out of time to the District Court. The Sheristadar's office does not discover that the appeal is out of time and sends notice to both the respondents. The colluding 2nd defendant files his memorandum of objections within one month of the receipt of the notice of appeal on the same grounds on which the plaintiff filed his appeal, the 2nd defendant's objections and the plaintiff's appeal being both thus directed against the 1st defendant. The result of answering the second question in the affirmative would be that while the plaintiff's appeal at the final hearing of the appeal is dismissed as barred by limitation, his friend, the 2nd defendant, by having his memorandum of objections heard, compels the Court to hear the appeal also, and the 1st defendant, who thought that the decision of the District Munsif was safe owing to no appeal having been filed in time, finds that he was living in a fool's paradise.

ALI RAZA V. SANWAL DAS.

I do not see that the omission in Order XLI, rule 22 (1), of the words "upon the hearing" which found a place in the old section 561 is of much importance, though some of the decisions under the old section 561 (which decisions denied the right of the respondent to have his memorandum of objection heard where the appeal itself was dismissed as out of time) attached importance to those words. I think that much weight attaches to the argument based on the new sub-rule 4 of Order XLI, rule 22, which makes an express provision for hearing the memorandum of objections only in cases where the original appeal is withdrawn or is dismissed for default and does not expressly allow the hearing of the objections, where the appeal is dismissed as barred by limitation or dismissed on other preliminary grounds. Another consideration which has weighed with me is that the right of a respondent to file an objection depends, if the second question is answered in the affirmative, on what I may call the accident of the Court or the Sheristadar discovering at once whether the appeal is barred. If the bar is discovered at once and the appeal rejected, then no notice is issued to any respondent and hence no respondent is entitled to file a memorandum of objections but if it is not so discovered and notice is issued, then he gets valuable rights.

I, therefore, agree with my Lord in the answer to the second question also.

SPENCER, J.—I agree that the first question referred to us should be answered in the affirmative and the second question in the negative.

The fact that rule 22, which confers upon respondents the right of taking cross-objections, falls under that portion of Order XLI which is headed "Procedure on hearing" supports the latter view and justifies, if I may say so, the observation of Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., in Dhondi Jagannath v. Collector of Salt Revenue (19), where he speaks of "the respondent's right to take his objections, which up to the time of the hearing was an inchoate right", becoming perfected at the commencement of the hearing of the appeal. 'Hearing' would then mean hearing on the merits. The words "upon the hearing" in section 561 of the old Code were probably omitted from the present Code as being redundant, seeing that in both Codes the heading "Procedure on hearing" preceded this provision, and in order that clause 1 of rule 22 should be consistent with the newly introduced clause 4 of the same rule. The retention of the words 'upon hearing' in the side note to the section indicates that this change was not intended to have any legal significance. Devibhaskyam Venkanna v. Peddinti Venkataramanayya (9), should be treated as now overruled.

Muhammadian Law—Shia school—Waqf, creation of—Trust-deed not divesting settlor of ownership, whether constitutes waqf

A trust deed executed by a Shia Muhammadan and his wife contained a recital to the effect that the eldest son of the settlors had already been entrusted with the management of the landed properties belonging to the executants and that this management was to continue under the deed. The document also contained provisions as to what was to happen on the death of the executants, but none of those provisions operated so as to divest the executants of their ownership in the trust properties from the date of the execution of the deed:

Held, that the document was insufficient to create a valid waqf. [p. 213, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman (with him Mr. S. A. Haidar), for the Appellant.

Messrs. Surendra Nath Sen and Gokul Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question in issue in this appeal, as it was in the Court below, is whether a valid waqf is created by a certain Sipurdamah, or trust-deed, of the 27th of December, 1863, executed by a Shia gentleman of the name of

RAJINDRA BAHADUR SINGH v. RAGHUBANS KUNWAR.

Syed Maqsd Ali Khan and his wife, Alwah Bibi. We have been taken through the document in question. It does not divest the executants in presenti of their ownership or power of alienation in respect of the property therein dealt with. It is true that it contains a recital to the effect that Syed Moazzam Ali, the eldest son of Syed Maqsd Ali Khan, has already been entrusted with the management of the landed properties belonging to the executants and that this management is to continue under the deed. But a mere power of management may be revoked at any time by the owners of the property. The document also contains provisions as to what is to happen on the death of the executants, but those provisions do not operate so as to divest the executants of their ownership from the date of execution of the deed. The other points taken in the memorandum of appeal are covered by the authorities relied on by the trial Court. Murtazi Bibi v. Jumna Bibi (1) and Hamid Ali v. Mujawar Husain Khan (2). It is true that a certain portion of the reasoning on which the decision of the learned Chief Justice of this Court in the latter of these two cases proceeds is invalidated by a subsequent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Baqar Ali Khan v. Anjuman Ara Begam (3), by which the right of a Shia to create a waqf by Will was recognised, assuming, of course, that the testamentary disposition of the property amounted in other respects to a valid waqf under the Muhammadan Law. This, however, does not seriously affect the weight of the decisions above referred to. We do not feel at all disposed to reconsider at this time of the day the question of law disposed of by the two decisions above referred to. The effect of the Mnsalman Waqf Validating Act of 1913 can be considered hereafter, when the Court has before it a document executed in virtue of the power recognized by that enactment. We are content to say that, so far as this appeal is concerned, the pleas taken in the memorandum of appeal either depend upon the construction of the deed of 1863, on which point our decision is against the appellant, or are concluded by authorities of this Court which we are in no way disposed to reconsider. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. O., and Kyffin, for the Appellant.—The word "accretion" in the Order in Council has the same meaning as it has under Hindu Law when it is used in connection with an impartible estate. The estate here was not made impartible by the Sanad of 1861. It was impartible by the family custom and the Sanad acknowledged that custom and made it perpetual. The villages were purchased from the income of the Taluqa and were, therefore, accretions to the Taluqa. The Taluqdar must be taken to have intended to incorporate them with the Taluqa: Gonda Kooer v. Kooer Oodey Singh (1), Isri Dutt Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (2), Sheolochun Singh v. Saheb Singh (3), Sarabjit Partap Bahadur Sahi v. Indarjit Partap Bahadur Sahi (4) and Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaya Lal (5). The moveable property was also an accretions to the Taluqa as it was derived from it. The house in Lucknow was intended by the Government to form part of the Taluqa estate. The appellant was, therefore, entitled to succeed to the whole property. The fact that the name of the Taluqdar was entered in list 2 prepared under the Oudh Estates Act, 1869 (Act I of 1869), raised a presumption under section 10 that there was a family custom of descent to a single heir, and that custom attached to all acquired property which the Taluqdar intended by him to be incorporated with the family estates: *Thakur Ishri Singh v. and Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mohammad Yasin Ali Khan (8).

Messrs. Dunne, K. O., and Dube, for the Respondent.—There was no evidence that the Taluqdar intended to incorporate the villages he purchased with the Taluqa. At all events he had no power to make them descend in a manner at variance with the ordinary rules of descent under Hindu Law. No family custom of primogeniture was alleged or proved. The Taluqdar could not, therefore, make the non-Taluqdari property subject to any such custom. The cases relied on as to the descent of non-Taluqdari properties did not apply here. The cases cited as to property purchased by a Hindu widow out of her deceased husband's property, and as to members of a joint Hindu family incorporating self-acquired property with the joint family property, did not apply here, for in these cases there was a choice of two modes of descent. No grant of the house in Lucknow was produced, and there was nothing to show that grant was subject to the rule of primogeniture. Reference was also made to Crown Grants Act 1895 (Act XV of 1895), section 2, and the Oudh Estates Act, 1869 (Act I of 1869), section 7.

Mr. De Gruyther replied.

JUDGMENT.

SIR JOHN EDGE.—The suit in which these consolidated appeals have arisen came on appeal before the Board in 1905. The Board, which heard the appeal finally, decided several important questions which were in dispute between the parties, but did not finally dispose of some other questions which related to portions of the property which were in dispute in the suit, and in respect of the questions which were not then finally decided advised His Majesty that these questions should be remanded to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh with power to that Court to remit the case to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for inquiry. The judgment of the Board is reported as Thakur Sheo Singh v. Rani Raghubans Kunwar (9). The Court of the Judicial Commissioner made on the 4th March 1907 a decree which dealt with some of the questions in dispute and on the 21st January 1909 a further decree which dealt with the remaining questions in dispute and from those decrees these consolidated appeals have been brought. The original parties to the suit are dead and to understand the position of the parties to these consolidated appeals it is advisable to state, so far as it is material for that purpose, the pedigree of the family to which they belong, so far as it has been proved or admitted in this litigation. The members of the family are Hindus.

RAJINDRA BAHADUR SINGH v. RAGHUBANS KUNWAR.

The property to which the suit related was property, moveable and immoveable, of which Balbhadar Singh died possessed on the 12th December 1898. On his death his widow Rani Raghubans Kunwar and his brother Sheo Singh each claimed adversely to the other all the property of which Balbhadar Singh had died possessed. The Court of Revenue made an order for the mutation of names in favour of Sheo Singh, and he obtained possession of all the property, moveable and immoveable. Rani Raghubans Kunwar on the 6th February 1900 brought this suit against Sheo Singh for possession of all the moveable and immoveable property. She alleged that Balbhadar Singh had been adopted by his uncle Girwar Singh, and that Girwar Singh had by his Will devised all his property to Balbhadar Singh, who had enjoyed it until his death. Her suit was resisted by Sheo Singh, who alleged that all the property claimed by her appertained to Taluqa Mahewa and was impartible; that by a custom in the family females were excluded from the inheritance; that the succession to the Taluqa was governed by section 22 of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), under which he claimed that a brother was entitled in priority to the widow; and he denied that Balbhadar Singh had been adopted by Girwar Singh. Sheo Singh relied upon a Sanad of the 19th October 1859, by which the Government had granted Taluqa Mahewa to Gajraj Singh and his heirs without other limitation of the line of inheritance. At some period of the litigation a copy of a Sanad, which was granted by the Government to Girwar Singh in 1861, was produced, and the Board in 1905 held that the copy was admissible in evidence and that Girwar Singh had in fact surrendered to the Government the Sanad which had been granted to Gajraj Singh in 1859 and the estate which had been granted by it, and in lieu of that Sanad had accepted the Sanad of 1861. The Sanad of 1861 said expressly:—

"It is another condition of this grant that in the event of your dying intestate, or of any of your successors dying intestate, the estate shall descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture."

The Courts in India had held that the Sanad of 1861 could not, in law operate to substitute the line of descent prescribed by it for the line of descent prescribed by the earlier Sanad of 1859, and having found that Balbhaddar Singh had been adopted by Girwar Singh and had succeeded to Taluqa Mahewa under the Will of Girwar Singh, and that the alleged custom excluding females from the inheritance had not been proved, gave Rani Raghubans Kunwar a decree for possession. That alleged custom excluding females from inheritance was the only custom of the family which Sheo Singh attempted to prove.

In the appeal which came before the Board in 1905 from the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner it was contended on behalf of Rani Raghubans Kunwar that Girwar Singh was not competent to surrender to the Government the Sanad of 1859; that the Government having granted by the Sanad of 1859 the estate to Gajraj Singh and his heirs, had nothing left to grant to Girwar Singh in 1861; and further, that the Government had no power to create by the grant of 1861 an estate descending by any rule of inheritance that was contrary to the ordinary law, which, as the family were Hindus, was the Hindu Law. The Board, however, held that Girwar Singh, being entitled by inheritance to everything that had passed to Gajraj Singh under the Sanad of 1859, was competent to surrender the Sanad of 1859 and to accept instead of it the Sanad of 1861, and had surrendered the Sanad of 1859 and the estate which had passed under it, and that the Government was competent to grant the Sanad of 1861. As to the contention that the Government had no power to grant to a Hindu, as it did by the Sanad of 1861, an estate which should descend on an intestacy to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, their Lordships said: "Whatever force such a contention might otherwise have had appears to their Lordships to be removed by the Act to which their attention was called: 'The Crown Grants Act, 1895' ('Act XV of 1895'). That Act recites, amongst other things, that doubts have arisen as to the power of the Crown to impose limitations and restrictions upon grants and other transfers made by it or under its authority, and it is expedient to remove such doubts. And section 3 enacts that—"all provisions, restrictions, conditions and limitations ever contained in any such grant or transfer, as aforesaid, shall be valid and take effect according to their tenor, any rule of law, Statute or enactment of the Legislature to the contrary notwithstanding."

When the appeal was being argued before the Board in 1905, the arguments addressed to their Lordships related only to the right to the possession of Taluqa Mahewa on the death of Balbhaddar Singh, and it appears to have been overlooked by Counsel during the arguments that the appeal also related to other property which was alleged to have been acquired by Balbhaddar Singh, and which had not formed part of the property granted by the Sanad of 1861. Before the judgment of the Board was delivered in 1905 the attention of their Lordships was drawn by Counsel to the fact that the appeal also related to such other property. In their judgment of 1905 their Lordships consequently said: "The present appeal relates mainly to Taluqa Mahewa and the argument before their Lordships dealt only with it. The principle adopted in this judgment only applies to that Taluqa, including, of course, any property that may have accreted to it since the date of the Sanad under which it is held. It has been pointed out by Counsel that the suit out of which the appeal arises related also to property said to have been acquired apart from the Taluqa. It seems clear that their Lordships have not materials before them to enable them to define what property (if any) other than the original contents of the Taluqa now passes as part of it." Their Lordships held that Taluqa Mahewa, as constituted at the date of the Sanad of 1861, with accretions (if any) or properties (if any) appurtenant to the Taluqa, had, on the death of Balbhaddar Singh, passed in accordance with the limitations of that Sanad to Sheo Singh as the next male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, and humbly advised His Majesty to make:—"a declaration that the Taluqa Mahewa as constituted at the date of the Sanad, with accretions (if any) or properties (if any) appurtenant to the Taluqa, has passed to the appellant, and that as to any other property of the deceased the decrees of the Courts below are not affected, and to order that it be left to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, if it be found that there is a real controversy on the point, either itself to determine what property falls under one category and what under the other, or to remit the case for inquiry to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and to order that, so far as may be necessary to give effect to the first part of the foregoing declaration, the decrees of the Courts below ought to be discharged and the suit dismissed."

That declaration was made by the Order in Council and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner remitted the case for inquiry to the Court of the Subordinate Judge.

The Court of the Subordinate Judge made two reports, one relating to the village in dispute, and the other to a house at Sitapur, a house at Lucknow, and moveable property of which Balbhaddar Singh had died possessed. Objections which were taken to each of these reports came at different dates before the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, and from the decrees of that Court made upon those reports these consolidated appeals have been brought.

Some of the learned Judges of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner misunderstood what their Lordships meant in 1905 by the terms "accretions" and "properties appurtenant" to Taluqa Mahewa. Their Lordships obviously did not mean to limit accretions to land which had gradually and imperceptibly by the action of water gone to the owner of the adjacent soil. No accretion of that nature had apparently been suggested by the parties to the suit. What was suggested was that Balbhaddar Singh had acquired property by purchase, and had added it to the estate which had been granted by the Sanad of 1861 to Girwar Singh. The facts were not before their Lordships in 1905 which would have enabled them to decide whether any lands had accreted to Taluqa Mahewa as it was constituted at the date of that Sanad. The Crown has in British India power to grant or to transfer lands, and by its grant, or on the transfer, to limit in any way it pleases the descent of such lands. But a subject has no right to impose upon lands or other property any limitation of descent which is at variance with the ordinary law of descent of property applicable in his case. Sir Edward Chamier, then Mr. Chamier, Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, in his judgment on some objections taken to one of the reports of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, correctly stated the law in this respect as to the power of a subject, thus:—

"I take it that is settled law that a subject cannot make his property descendible in a manner not recognised by the ordinary law, and that he cannot subject it to a rule of descent such as is contained in the primogeniture Sanad granted to Girwar Singh. If this is so, it appears to me to follow that Balbhaddar Singh could not by express declaration, still less by mere volition, whether actual or presumed, subject property acquired by him to the rule of succession entered in the primogeniture Sanad granted to Girwar Singh."

With that statement as to the law their Lordships agree. It follows that in ascertaining what were the lands claimed by Rani Raghubans Kunwar in respect of which her suit was not dismissed in 1905, it must be ascertained what were the lands of which Balbhaddar Singh died possessed which were acquired by him and did not form part of Taluqa Mahewa as it was constituted at the date of the Sanad of 1861, and were not lands acquired by him from the Government in exchange for lands which were included in that Sanad. The Government had power to give to Balbhaddar Singh in exchange for Sanad lands other lands which had not been granted to Girwar Singh in 1861, and the lands so acquired by him in exchange would be subject to the rule of descent prescribed in the Sanad of 1861.

By the Sanad of 1861 the Government granted to Girwar Singh "the full proprietary right, title, and possession of Taluqa Mahewa, consisting of the villages as per list attached to the kabuliyat you have executed," subject to the payment of rent and the other conditions in the Sanad mentioned. The estate, which was granted to Girwar Singh in 1861, was the same estate which had been granted to Gajraj Singh in 1859 and had been surrendered to the Government by Girwar Singh. Unfortunately neither the kabuliyat which was executed by Girwar Singh in 1861 nor the kabuliyat which was executed by Gajraj Singh in 1859 has been found, but the lands granted in 1861 were lands of which the Government was then in a position to grant "the full proprietary right and title" to Girwar Singh.

When the case was remitted for inquiry to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, that Court reported that of the 166 villages for which Rani Raghubans Kunwar had obtained her decree, which was subject of the appeal in 1905, there was no controversy as to 108 of them; it was admitted that the 108 villages were Taluqdari villages, that is, that they were villages which were included in the Sanad of 1861. As to the remaining 58 villages the Subordinate Judge reported that Sheo Singh was entitled to 27 specified villages, and that Rani Raghubans Kunwar was entitled to 31 villages, which also were specified in the report. Rani Raghubans Kunwar filed objections to the findings of the Subordinate Judge as to 19 of the 27 villages which the Subordinate Judge had reported to be Taluqdari villages, and on the other side objections were filed as to the findings of the Subordinate Judge as to the 31 villages which he had reported to be non-Taluqdari villages, that is, villages not covered by the Sanad of 1861.

On the consideration of the report the Court of the Judicial Commissioner allowed the objections of Rani Raghubans Kunwar to the findings of the Subordinate Judge as to Chak Sarkhanpur, Chak Simri, and one-half of Hasnapur, and held that they were non-Taluqdari; and on the other hand, allowed the objections to the findings of the Subordinate Judge as to Sarkhanpur Marhuna, Puraina and Patti Bhupatpur, and held that they were Taluqdari villages, and overruled all the other objections, and made the decree of the 4th March 1907, which is one of the decrees now under appeal.

Their Lordships will now deal with the appeals in which the title to the villages is disputed before them. They will consider only those cases in which it appears from the record that the objections to the report of the Subordinate Judge which had been filed were persisted in by one or other of the parties in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. It must be taken that the findings of the Subordinate Judge were correct in all those cases in which the objections to his findings were not supported in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner.

The villages Parai, Unchagaon and Khandwa Mitmau, which were non-Taluqdari villages, and were not included in the Sanad of 1861, are villages which the Government subsequently transferred to Balbhadar Singh in exchange for three of the Taluqdari Sanad villages or parts of them, and consequently must be treated as Taluqdari villages which on Balbhadar Singh's death descended to Sheo Singh.

The village Sarkhanpur Marhuna, which is distinct from Chak Sarkhanpur, must be taken to have been a Taluqdari village at the time when the Sanad of 1861 was granted, and to have been included in that Sanad. It descended on Balbhadar Singh's death to Sheo Singh. The Pleader for Rani Raghubans Kunwar gave up on her behalf all claim to the village.

Puraina was entered in the Summary Settlement of 1859 in the name of Janki Pershad as the proprietor. It had been mortgaged to Thakur Umrao Singh, under a mortgage with possession of 1245 Fasli (1837-1838), which became irredeemable by reason of Act XIII of 1866, and the Settlement Officer on the 30th June 1868 gave Balbhadar Singh, who was the legal representative of Thakur Umrao Singh, a decree for the full proprietary possession. Puraina was non-Taluqdari property at the time of the Sanad of 1861.

Patti Bhupatpur was entered in the Summary Settlement in the names of Jangu and Lachman as the proprietors. Balbhadar Singh obtained a decree for one third of the village on the 7th February, 1868, under a mortgage of conditional sale which had been granted in 1248 Fasli (1840-1841) by the then proprietors. In an application for partition Balbhadar Singh described Patti Bhupatpur as not comprised in any

RAJINDRA BAHADUR SINGH v. RAGHUBANS KUNWAR.

Taluqa, and in 1894 he purchased another one-third of the Patti. It was non-Taluqdari, and was not included in the Sanad of 1861.

Munda Nizampur was inherited by Balbhaddar Singh from Anand Kunwar, and could not have been included in the Sanad of 1861. It is non-Taluqdari.

Benipur was purchased by Balbhaddar Singh between 1880 and 1884, and was not included in the Sanad of 1861. It is non-Taluqdari.

Kasba Kheri. The register of the Summary Settlement does not show that it was settled with Gajraj Singh. No evidence has been referred to which shows with whom the village was settled, but as Rani Raghubans Kunwar stated in her plaint that Kasba Kheri had been settled with Gajraj Singh, it must be taken to have been included in the Sanad of 1861 and to be Taluqdari.

Rechan was found by the Subordinate Judge and by the Judicial Commissioner's Court to have been included in Taluqa Mahewa at the date of the Sanad of 1861. No evidence has been brought to the attention of their Lordships to show that those findings were not correct. Gajraj Singh paid revenue assessed in respect of Rechan. Rechan must be taken to be Taluqdari.

Obak Sarkhanpur. In the Summary Settlement Chak Sarkhanpur was entered in the name of Har Pershad as the proprietor. Balbhaddar Singh acquired it by purchase. It was not included in the Sanad of 1861 and is non-Taluqdari.

Chak Simri was entered in the Summary Settlement in the name of Mohan Lal. It was purchased by Balbhaddar Singh. It was not included in the Sanad of 1861, and is non-Taluqdari.

Hasnapur. One-half of Hasnapur was purchased in 1270 Hijri (1853) by Umrao Singh, and the other half in 1865 by Balbhaddar Singh. Consequently one half of the village was included in the Sanad of 1861 and is Taluqdari, and the other half is non-Taluqdari.

Nausar Jogipur. In the Summary Settlement this village was entered in the name of Gajraj Singh. In a mortgage deed Balbhaddar Singh stated that this village was included in the Sanad. It must be taken that the village is Taluqdari.

Mukaddarpur. In a mortgage deed Balbhaddar Singh stated that this village was comprised in the Sanad. The Pleader of Rani Raghubans Kunwar stated at the hearing that Behari had sold it to Gajraj Singh, who, however, had not obtained possession until after the Summary Settlements. It must be treated as a Taluqdari village.

Bastauli. In the Summary Settlement the two halves of Bastauli were entered in the name of Gajraj Singh, and must be taken as Taluqdari.

Saharwa. In the Summary Settlement this village was entered in the name of Gajraj Singh. It must be taken to have been included in the Sanad of 1861 and as Taluqdari. Asawa, Banjargaon, Bhargawan, Jamnaha, Saunkia, Sansarpur and Kaimahra, all these villages were found by the Judicial Commissioner's Court to have been in the possession of Girwar Singh at the date of the Sanad of 1861. The Subordinate Judge and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner dealt with them as Taluqdari villages, and nothing has been brought to the attention of their Lordships to lead them to the conclusion that these villages, or any of them, were not included in the Sanad of 1861 and were not Taluqdari villages.

The result of their Lordships' view as to the villages is that to the list of villages set out in the decree of the 4th March 1907 of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, in respect of which Rani Raghubans Kunwar was entitled to maintain her decree for possession, the villages Puraina and Patti Bhupatpur should be added, and that no village should be struck out of that list.

Their Lordships will now consider the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the 21st January 1909, which was made on the hearing of the objections which were filed to the report of the Subordinate Judge which dealt with disputes as to a house in Sitapur, a house in Lucknow, and the moveable property of which Balbhaddar Singh had died possessed.

The house in Sitapur was acquired by Balbhaddar Singh, and never at any time was part of the Taluqdari estate which was granted to Girwar Singh by the Sanad of 1861. It is non-Taluqdari.

The house in the Kaiser Bagh at Lucknow. The right to the possession of this house does not depend upon the Sanad of 1861, which was granted to Girwar Singh upon the surrender by him to the Government of the Sanad of 1859, which had been granted to Gajraj Singh. The house in the Kaiser Bagh was not included in the Sanad of 1861. It is common ground that a house in the Kaiser Bagh was allotted by the Government to Girwar Singh in 1864 or 1865 for his use as the Taluqdar of Taluqa Mahewa. That house was demolished when the Canning College was built, and in place of it another house, the house now in dispute, was allotted by the Government to Balbhaddar Singh for his use as the Taluqdar of the Taluqa Mahewa. No Sanad relating to the house has been produced, nor has it been proved that any Sanad relating to the house was granted. But it may be inferred from the fact that the house was allotted to Balbhaddar Singh for his use as Taluqdar of Mahewa that such right to possession of it as he had passed not to his widow but to his successor in the Taluqdari of Mahewa.

The moveable property of which Balbhaddar Singh died possessed was not subject to the limitation of descent which was by the Sanad of 1861 prescribed for the villages which were included in that Sanad, and passed on his death to his widow, Rani Raghubans Kunwar.

The decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, dated the 21st January 1909, should be varied by decreeing that the suit of Rani Raghubans Kunwar should stand dismissed so far as her suit related to her claim for the possession of the house at Lucknow.

Thakur Rajindra Bahadur Singh, who was brought upon the record as the representative of his late father, Sheo Singh, died in 1912, and Rani Raghubans Kunwar died in 1910, and their Lordships have been much pressed to advise His Majesty as to who is now entitled to the property other than Taluqa Mahewa as it was constituted at the date of the grant of 1861, in respect of which Rani Raghubans Kunwar brought her suit in 1900 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur, but their Lordships are not in a position to tender such advice, and can only advise His Majesty as to the rights of the parties as they existed at the time when the decrees of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner now under appeal were made.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the 4th March 1907 should be varied by adding to the list of villages set forth in that decree the villages Puraina and Patti Bhupatpur, and that the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the 21st January 1909 should be varied by decreeing that the suit of Rani Raghubans Kunwar should stand dismissed so far as her suit related to her claim for possession of the house at Lucknow, and that so varied those decrees should be affirmed as of the dates when they were made respectively by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, and should have effect accordingly as to the rights of the parties who were concerned at those respective dates and of those claiming under them. The costs of these consolidated appeals as between the parties to them shall be allowed.

Pre-emption—Custom, proof of—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, value of.

When considering the existence or non-existence of a custom of pre-emption the language of the entry in the wajib-ul-arz which is relied upon as a proof of the custom should be taken into consideration. [p. 221, col. 2.]

SURAJBALI SINGH v. MOHAMMAD NASIR.

Where a wajib-ul-arz provided that when a stranger had obtained property under a sale or a mortgage, the co-sharers, in a certain order, were entitled to take the property in the case of a sale at sixteen years' purchase and in the case of a mortgage at eight:

Held, that the entry was wholly insufficient to prove a custom of pre-emption. [p. 221, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Azamgarh.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. A. Haidar and the Hon'ble Syed Raza Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The plaintiff alleges that a custom of pre-emption prevailed and adduced in evidence an extract from the wajib-ul-arz of 1872. This is the only evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff of the existence of the custom. One has only to peruse the entry to come to the conclusion that it was almost impossible that this could have been a record of a custom. It provides amongst other things that as soon as a stranger has bought or mortgaged the property, the co-sharers in a certain order are entitled to take the property in the case of a sale at sixteen years' purchase and in the case of a mortgage at eight. It further goes on to record a right of a person to redeem a mortgage in which he has no interest whatever. As against this piece of evidence (if it can be so called), the defendant vendee adduced a decree of the year 1878. In that litigation the plaintiff, who now seeks pre-emption, had purchased a share in the village as a stranger. A suit was brought against him for pre-emption, the then plaintiff basing his claim upon this very entry in the wajib-ul-arz. The present plaintiff (then vendee) pleaded that there was no custom and that the record in the wajib-ul-arz was merely the record of a contract, which was not binding on his vendor, because it had not been verified by him. Reading the judgment in the previous litigation the then plaintiff and his advisers apparently hardly thought it possible to rely upon the entry in the wajib-ul-arz as the record of a custom. It was relied upon chiefly as the record of a contract. Had it been possible for the then plaintiff to rely upon it as a custom, it would have been greatly to his interest to do so, because he would have been saved from any real or supposed obligation to prove that the wajib-ul-arz had been verified by the then vendor. It may be mentioned in passing that the wajib-ul-arz was then only about six years old, and presumably many of the persons who had verified it were still living. The lower Appellate Court has found in favour of the plaintiff. In doing so the learned Judge has not discussed, or apparently considered, the language in the record in the wajib-ul-arz. The language of that document ought certainly to have been taken into consideration when considering the existence or non-existence of the custom. In dealing with the previous litigation the learned District Judge says: "The only documentary evidence urged on behalf of the appellants is a copy of a judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Azamgarh, dated the 31st of May 1878. It appears that the plaintiff to this suit was a vendee in that case and that it was dismissed on a finding that a contract or custom of pre-emption was not proved. I think a solitary judgment does not rebut the presumption raised by the record of custom of pre-emption in the wajib-ul-arz."

From these remarks it would appear that the learned District Judge completely lost sight of the significance of the fact that the person who was now seeking to get the property had actually pleaded in the year 1878 that there was no right of pre-emption founded either upon custom or contract and that he had been successful in this plea. In our opinion there was no trial of the issue by the lower Appellate Court on the evidence and we are entitled to deal with the evidence ourselves. As already pointed out, the sole evidence in support of the existence of the custom was the entry in the wajib-ul-arz, which (as we have already said) on the very face of it almost disproves that it is the record of a custom; while on the other hand we have the plaintiff coming to this village as a stranger in the year 1878 after pleading successfully that there was neither custom nor contract. In our opinion the evidence was wholly insufficient to establish the existence of a custom. We accordingly

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Adoption by widow—Consent of sapindas, nature of, requisite to validate adoption—Consent of remote reversioner, effect of.

An adoption made by a Hindu widow without a bona fide attempt to obtain the advice of her husband's sapindas, ignoring a nearer reversioner and securing the assent of one more remote, is invalid. [p. 223, col. 1.]

A Hindu widow made no attempt to adopt a son for 15 years after her husband's death but on her death-bed adopted her sister's daughter's son with the consent of a remote reversioner who was interested in the adopted boy, after sending a threatening letter to the nearer reversioner that, if he did not give his consent within 24 hours, she would adopt.

Held, that the adoption was invalid. [p. 224, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Rajahmundry, in Original Suit No. 4 of 1916.

Messrs. P. Narayanamurthi and P. Rajagopalan, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Narasimha Row and the Hon'ble Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was brought to establish the plaintiff's title, as nearest reversioner, to succeed to certain immovable properties on the death of his eldest brother's widow Chinna Achayya and to recover possession of the said properties together with mesne profits and costs.

The suit was opposed by the 1st defendant, a minor alleged to have been adopted by the widow with the consent of her husband's Sapindas three days before her death. The plaintiff further based his claim upon a deed of surrender alleged to have been executed in his favour by the widow three days before the adoption. When the Sub-Registrar came to the village on being sent for to register this deed, Chinna Achayya denied having executed it and consequently it was not registered. It has, however, become unnecessary to decide any questions as to the genuineness and validity of the surrender deed, as the plaintiff is undoubtedly entitled to succeed upon his relationship alone if it be found that no valid adoption was made. The case both at the original trial and at the hearing of the appeal preferred by the 1st defendant, who was unsuccessful in opposing the suit in the Temporary Sub-Judge's Court, turned upon the second issue, whether Achayya had authority from her husband to adopt, and if not, whether she obtained the assent of the Sapindas and whether such assent was sufficient to validate the adoption.

There is no evidence that Achayya was authorised by her husband to adopt a son after his death. The only oral evidence on the point is to be found in the statements of defendant's witnesses Nos. 5 and 6, and that is against the theory that she had her husband's authority. The adoption deed (Exhibit I) only mentions that she had the assent of one of the Sapindas and the notice to the plaintiff (Exhibit III) contains a mere assertion that her husband, at the time of his death, requested the plaintiff to see that an adoption of a boy to be selected by his wife was made, not that he then and there authorised her to adopt.

We may, therefore, proceed to consider the second part of this issue. The circumstances under which the Sapindas were consulted are most important for arriving at a just conclusion.

Achayya's husband died about the year 1900. For 15 years she made no attempt to adopt a son in order that she might perpetuate her husband's lineage and enable him to attain beatitude. When she was on her death-bed she was taken to the house of Somaraju, the son of another brother of her husband, probably as the Sub-Judge observes, to remove her from the plaintiff's influence. While there, she was given a written authority (Exhibit II) to adopt by Somaraju who is a more remote reversioner than the plaintiff, and she issued a notice (Exhibit III) to the plaintiff threatening that, unless he gave her the necessary authority within 24 hours, she would adopt a son on the strength of the authority of the more remote reversioner. These two documents purport to have been written on the same day (December 18th, 1915) as the surrender deed in the plaintiff's favour is alleged to have been executed and it is probable that Somaraju gave his authority to adopt (Exhibit II) even before the notice (Exhibit III) reached the plaintiff, seeing that the plaintiff deposed that he did not get it till late at night. They suggest that the widow, when dying, was very much under the influence of her relations, who were squabbling as to who should get her property. Finally, on December 21st, she adopted her own sister's daughter's son, an infant one year old, who, as we understand, was not within the gotra of her deceased husband. There is no question that this child (1st defendant) was in fact adopted, but we think that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the adoption was invalid because there was no bona fide effort on the part of the widow to take the opinion of the Sapindas in the way that the law requires. An adoption made without such bona fide effort is invalid, vide Veera Basavaraju v. Balasurya Frasadrao (1). To apply the test laid down by the Judicial Committee in Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (2), can it be said in this case that there is such proof of assent on the part of the Sapindas as should be sufficient to support the inference that the adoption was made by the widow, not from capricious or corrupt motives or in order to defeat the interest of this or that Sapinda, but upon a fair consideration, by what may be called a family council, of the expediency of substituting an heir by adoption to the deceased husband. The answer must, under the above stated circumstances, be in the negative. For 15 years, Chinna Achayya did not take the trouble to do anything towards making an adoption. In her last illness she seems to have made up her mind, or rather in all probability it was made up for her by her sister's daughter's husband Bangarraju, the father of the 1st defendant, to adopt a child out of the family of her own relations, and do so at all costs. Instead of consulting the advice of the nearest Sapinda beforehand, it is clear, to adopt the words of Mr. Justice Basbyam Aiyangar in Subrahmanyam v. Venkamma (3), "that she was determined to ignore him and not care for his advice or even give him an opportunity to advise her". The evidence of defendant's witnesses Nos. 7 and 8, that prior to Exhibit III Chinna Achayya orally asked the plaintiff for his assent to the adoption, was rightly disbelieved by the Subordinate Judge, as defendant's witness No. 7 was proved to have been gained over and to be an untrustworthy witness and as defendant's 8th witness was highly interested, being the natural father of the adopted boy. Exhibit III contains a threat of an intention to act on the authority of Somaraju, the remoter Sapinda, in preference to the plaintiff if he would not consent within 24 hours, it assumes that the plaintiff will not give his consent and that he is actuated by the improper motive of getting the whole property for himself. As the learned Subordinate Judge observes, this document shows that Chinna Achayya, when she gave the notice, had made up her mind to adopt and that she had no idea of consulting the plaintiff in the matter.

The object of getting the consent of Sapindas to adoption has been declared in Venkamm v. Subramaniam (4), which was followed in Venkatarama Raju v. Bapamma (5) to be to get an independent judgment on the expediency of the proposed adoption, but, as observed by Seshagiri Aiyar J., in Adusumalli Krishnayya v. Adusumalli Lakshmi pathi (6), the widow has no right to assume that it would be useless to consult the nearest reversioners, who are the natural advisers and protectors of the widow. There is not much of bona fide consultation about a threatening letter couched in the terms of Exhibit III.

We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that in this case there was an absence of any bona fide attempt to obtain the advice of the deceased husband's Sapindas before the adoption was made, and it follows that the adoption of the 1st defendant was in consequence not a valid adoption.

Plaintiffs, villagers, brought a suit for an injunction to prevent the skins of their dead animals being taken by the defendants, who were village Mahars claiming the right as Vatan-dars. The suit was dismissed by the lower Courts on the ground that it was not cognizable by a Civil Court under section 18 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act and section 4 (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act:

Held, (1) that the question whether there was or was not a Mahar Vatan was within the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts; [p. 225, col. 1.]

(2) that prima facie the skins belonged to the owners of the dead animals and that the plaintiffs were entitled to their injunction unless the Mahars could succeed in showing that there was an hereditary office, in which case the parties would have to be referred for the settlement of their disputes to the Collector under section 18 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act. JUDGMENT.

HAYWARD, J.—The plaintiffs are villagers seeking an injunction to prevent the skins of their dead animals being taken by the defendants, who are village Mahars claiming the right as Vatan-dars.

The issues raised were—whether defendants had the right, whether they were Vatan-dar Mahars, and whether the suit was cognizable by the Civil Courts. The two former issues were not decided, as it was held that the suit was barred by section 18 of the Vatan Act, 1874, and section 4 (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act, 1876.

It seems to me the suit must be remanded for trial on the merits. The skins would prima facie belong to the villagers who owned the dead animals, as pointed out in the case of Yellapa Bhimapa v. Manakia (1), and the villagers would prima facie be entitled to the injunction sought against the Mahars. This might, however, be rebutted by showing a certain, continuous, immemorial and reasonable custom in favour of the Mahars, as would appear from paragraphs Nos. 423 to 439 of Volume X of Halsbury's Laws of England. But if the right should be, as here pleaded, attached to an hereditary office vested in the Mahars, then the definition of its nature and extent would devolve exclusively on the Collector by section 18 of the Vatan Act, 1874, read with the third paragraph of clause (a) of section 4 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act, 1876. It seems to me, therefore, that the villagers would be entitled to their injunction, unless the Mahars should succeed in showing that there is an hereditary office, that is to say, an office held hereditarily for the performance of duties connected with the administration within the meaning of the fourth paragraph and that they are Vatan-dars of that Vatan within the meaning of the sixth and seventh paragraphs of section 4 of the Vatan Act, 1874. If that should be established, the parties would have to be referred for the settlement of their disputes to the Collector under section 18 of the Vatan Act, 1874. It seems to me that the question whether there is a Mahar Vatan is within the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. Provision has been made for the creation of new Vatan and for the commutation of service and management of old Vatan, but no provision has been made for enquiry into the existence of old Vatan by the Vatan Act, 1874. Nor would such enquiry appear to be barred by anything in the Revenue Jurisdiction Act, 1876. It has been recently held on a parity of reasoning in the case of Raoji Fakira v. Dagdu Hanmata Mahar (2) that the question who are Vatan-dars of a Mahar Vatan is likewise within the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. It seems to me, therefore, that the suit must be remanded for these two matters to be determined and for disposal in the light of the above remarks under Order XLII, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code. Costs to be costs in the cause.

Appeal to Privy Council—Question of fact—Burden of proof.

An appellant must realise that by bringing a question of fact, which has been carefully examined by Judges fully conversant with the habits and practices of the country, before the Privy Council he takes a heavy burden upon himself.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SUMNER.—The issue in this case was simply whether the plaintiff had or had not paid certain money some twelve years before the trial. The burden of proof was on him. He did not go into the witness-box. He called no satisfactory evidence to account for the disappearance of the important contemporary documents, namely, the receipts, which he alleged had been in his possession. The evidence of his witnesses was flimsy and contradictory. At the trial he succeeded. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner, after a very careful examination of the evidence, held that he had not proved his case, and allowed the appeal. The Subordinate Judge had accepted his evidence, not because it had impressed him as truthful, for he called it unconvincing, but because he thought that there was some presumption that such a payment must have taken place. It has been urged upon their Lordships that such a payment was probable, though for reasons which appear to have escaped the trial Judge. They are, however, reasons applicable to parties who were traders or professional money-lenders, but it is admitted that the parties here were cultivators and peasants, to whom such reasoning is much less applicable.

Their Lordships cannot see their way to displace a carefully reasoned judgment of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, on a question of fact which commends itself to their view of the case, merely in order to restore a judgment of the Subordinate Judge, which did not rest on the favour with which he regarded the witnesses, but on a speculation of his own as to the probabilities, which does not appear to be satisfactory.

Their Lordships, while recognising to the full the appellant's legal and constitutional right to appeal in this case, think that it should be observed that, on a question of fact, which has been already carefully examined by Judges fully conversant with the habits and practices of the country, an appellant must realise that he takes a heavy burden upon himself by bringing such a case before this Board.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal ought to be dismissed, but without costs as it is ex parte,

Plaintiff obtained a mortgage decree against defendants for sale of their family property mortgaged to her. Sixth defendant, against whom the decree was ex parte, applied to set it aside. His application was granted and a re-trial was ordered on his depositing Rs. 500 as security for costs. The amount was paid and the Court again passed a decree for sale in favour of plaintiff. Plaintiff applied for payment out of the said sum of Rs. 500 to her towards her decree amount and the payment was ordered. The plaintiff filed the present application in execution more than 3 years after the date of the revised decree, after giving credit for the Rs. 500 recovered in the previous application:

Held, that the previous application was an application for a "step-in-aid of execution" within the meaning of Article 182, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act and that, therefore, the present application, which was made within three years of the former, was not barred. [p. 227, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The question that arises for decision in this case is whether plaintiff's application for the execution of the revised mortgage decree for sale in Original Suit No. 57 of 1909 is barred by limitation or not. The application was made more than three years from the date of that decree, but plaintiff relies on his Execution Petition No. 17 of 1914 as giving him a fresh starting point under clause 5 of Article 182 of the Limitation Act. The lower Courts have differed in their view on the question whether that petition can be treated as one made in accordance with law for execution or to take some step-in-aid of execution, the Subordinate Judge holding in the affirmative and the District Judge in the negative. The decree-holder is the appellant before us. To understand the nature of his contention it is necessary to state the circumstances in which Execution Petition No. 17 of 1914 came to be put in.

Plaintiff sued the defendants, who are members of an Aliyasanthana family, for the recovery of her mortgage money by sale of the defendants' family property mortgaged to her and obtained a decree for sale. That decree was an ex parte one against the 6th defendant. He applied to set it aside and the Court granted his application on his furnishing security for costs. He accordingly deposited in Court a sum of Rs. 500 as security. The case was re-tried, but the Court again passed a decree in plaintiff's favour. That is the revised decree which is sought to be executed now. That provided that the mortgaged property should be sold and the sale proceeds, after defraying the expenses of the sale, be applied in paying plaintiff her mortgage amount, interest and costs Rs. 5,379-4-4 and the balance, if any, be paid to defendants and that if any balance still be due to the plaintiff it be paid by the 1st defendant as ejaman of the family; it also directed the 6th defendant to pay Rs. 22 for plaintiff's costs in the re-trial. In 1914 plaintiff applied against all the defendants to execute the above decree, praying that the sum of Rs. 500 paid into Court by the 6th de-defendant be paid out to her towards the decree amount. That application is the Execution Petition No. 17 of 1914 referred to above. Notice was ordered to all the defendants; the 6th defendant appeared and opposed but it is not clear from the record before us whether the other defendants appeared or not. The Court, after hearing arguments, directed that the Rs. 500 be paid to the plaintiff on account of costs and towards the partial satisfaction of the decree amount due to her. It may be mentioned that the costs included in the amount for which the property was ordered to be sold are more than Rs. 500. This money was subsequently paid out to plaintiff by the Court on her application. Plaintiff's present application gives credit for it towards the decree amount.

The District Judge holds that Execution Petition No. 17 of 1914, though in form an execution petition, is, in substance, only an application for payment to the decree-holder of a sum of money deposited in Court by one of the judgment debtors and as such is not an application to take any steps-in-aid of execution. He relies on the rulings of the Calcutta High Court in Hem Chunder Chowdhry v. Brojo Soondury Debee (1), Fazale Imam v. Metta Singh (2), Gunga Pershad Bhoomick v. Debi Sundari Dabee (3) and Ananda Mohan Roy v. Hara Sundari (4) in support of his view, distinguishing the Madras decisions cited to him; viz., Venkatarayalu v. Narasimha (5), Kerala Varma Valiya Rajah v. Shangaram (6) and Koormayya v. Krishnamma Naidu (7), on the ground that the money in the present case was not realised by any execution process. That does not seem to be a valid distinction. The District Judge overlooks the fact that, as the money was deposited only as security, an order of the Court was necessary to make it available for payment towards the decree amount. An application to the Court for such a purpose and for payment out of the money is thus clearly necessary; and such an application is one in execution of the decree itself. In the Calcutta case, Hem Chunder Chowdhry v. Brojo Soondury Debee (1), which is followed in the subsequent cases, money was deposited towards the decree amount and no order of Court was necessary to make it available for the decree, the decree holder's application being merely for payment out. In the present case an order of Court was required to make the money available for the decree and getting such an order is a step-in-aid of execution. The Calcutta cases may, therefore, be distinguished. It may, however, be pointed out that even on the question as to whether an application for payment out of money in Court in execution is or is not an application for a step-in-aid of execution, there is a clear difference of opinion between the Calcutta High Court and this Court. We must adhere to our view, as there is no proper reason to depart from it. That view has been accepted by the Bombay and the Allahabad Courts. Vide Bapuchand Jethiram Gujar v. Mugutrao (8) and Paran Singh v. Jawahir Singh (9). As pointed out by Farran, C. J., in the Bombay case execution is not fully completed till the money has been actually paid by the Court to the judgment-creditor or to some one on his account. See page 344. The judgment of the District Judge on the point cannot, therefore, be supported.

Mr. Lakshmana Rao, for the respondents, has, however, tried to support the order of the lower Appellate Court on another ground. He contended that, under the decree in question as it is worded, no application for payment of money could have been made except for Rs. 22, costs of the re-trial, and, therefore, Execution Petition No. 17 of 1914, so far as it prayed for the payment of the decree amount in general, was not in accordance with law, as it asked for a relief not granted by the decree; and in so far as it asked for the payment of Rs. 22 by the 6th defendant, it was of no avail to save limitation against the contending defendants Nos. 1 and 4, as that part of the decree was not a joint decree under Explanation 1 of Article 182 of the Limitation Act. He relied on the case reported as Ramakrishna Kadirvelusami v.

CHAKRAPANI NANDI v. GAYAMONI DAS.

Eastern Development Corporation (10) for the first part of his argument. We need not, however, consider whether we should follow this ruling, for, in the present case, the plaintiff's application, to which the defendants were all made parties, was actually allowed by the Court and her prayer to have the money paid towards the decree amount was granted. So long as that order is in force, the defendants cannot be heard to say that the plaintiff's application was not in accordance with law. If the order was vitiated by any irregularity, defendants should have applied to set it aside; they have not done so. The first part of this contention of the respondents should, therefore, be overruled and the 2nd part need not be considered.

In the result, the order of the District Judge must be reversed and that of the Subordinate Judge, restored with costs in this and the lower Courts. The application for execution will be returned to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for further disposal.

JUDGMENT.—One Madhusudan Sen had three sons, Radhaballav, Ananta Lal and Haladhar Sen. He mortgaged a part of the property of the family for Rs. 2,500 to one Haradhan Das. In 1895 a decree was obtained upon this mortgage and the mortgaged property duly brought to sale. The price obtained was insufficient to cover the whole amount of the decree. Haradhan Das took steps to realise the deficit from the homestead of the family. Madhusudan was then dead. Two only of the sons Radhaballav and Haladar mortgaged the family dwelling house for eight hundred rupees to Tincouri De. Tincouri De obtained a decree upon this mortgage. In order to save the property from sale the sons of Radhaballav executed a mortgage on the 26th May 1904 in favour of the father of the plaintiffs for Rs. 1,999. The plaintiffs' father himself paid off Tincouri De's mortgage. The plaintiffs in due course on the 3rd of May 1912 obtained a mortgage decree and brought to sale the right, title and interest of their mortgagors which they alleged to be sixteen annas. Haladhar Sen was then dead. His widow put in a claim to a one-third share. She obtained an order under Order XXI, rule 100, releasing her share of the property. Ananta Sen filed a similar claim which was dismissed. The plaintiffs, therefore, instituted the present suit asking for the following reliefs:—

(1) That Haladhar's widow had no interest in the property mortgaged, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to the whole property.

(2) That if it be found that Haladhar's widow had a one-third share, it be held that she and Ananta are liable to pay the money due to the plaintiffs on the ground that it was advanced for the payment of the debts of the father of Ananta Sen and Haladhar.

(3) That Ananta Sen and his wife be held liable for the sum paid by the plaintiffs' father in respect of the mortgage entered into by Haladhar Sen and Radhaballav.

The details of the claim upon which the second and third reliefs are sought are set forth in paragraph 8 of the plaint.

Briefly the proposition is: that the mortgage entered into by the sons of Radhaballav kept alive the mortgage given by Radhaballav and Haladhar Sen, and that the mortgage given by Radhaballav and Haladhar kept alive the mortgage given by Madhusudan Sen, and that, therefore, all the heirs of Madhusudan Sen are liable to contribute to the redemption of Madhusudan's mortgage generally and in particular to that part of Madhusudan's mortgage which was liquidated by the transaction to which Radhaballav and Haladhar were parties.

The leading issue framed in the case was:—Was the property of Madhusudan Sen held by the sons in ajmali or was it divided by metes and bounds? This issue was found against the plaintiffs by the learned Subordinate Judge and this decision was not contested in appeal before the learned Judge. On the issue: Are the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, that is to say, Ananta Sen and his wife, bound by the mortgage-deed executed by Radhaballav and Haladhar Sen, the learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that under section 95 and section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act the plaintiffs' father acquired a charge on the $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share of the house. This charge extended to a half share of the money required to pay off the mortgage decree executed by Radhaballav and Haladhar, but that it was impossible to enforce this charge as an ordinary liability for contribution for the reason that the period of limitation for suits upon such a claim would be three years. It was further found as a fact by both the Courts that the mortgage made by the sons of Radhaballav was invalid by reason of defects in attestation. The suit was accordingly dismissed with costs, and the appeal was also dismissed with costs on grounds somewhat similar to those given by the learned Subordinate Judge.

In appeal to this Court, it is urged, firstly, that under section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act the defendant Gayamani Dasi is bound to contribute to the mortgage, and, secondly, that the suit is not barred by limitation for the reason that the liability to contribute was a charge upon the property, and that, therefore, the limitation for such a suit would be 12 years. In answer to this claim it was pointed out by the respondents that the charge created by the payment of the whole mortgage debt by Radhaballav's sons vested, not in the plaintiffs' father who advanced the money, but in Radhaballav's sons who pledged their property as security for the advance. To meet this argument the appellants claim the benefit of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act and assert that inasmuch as in the mortgage-deed the sons of Radhaballav erroneously stated that they were entitled to a sixteen-anna share in the property, any right vesting in them in regard to that property would vest in the plaintiffs.

The points, therefore, which we have to consider in this case are:—Firstly, whether the invalid mortgage given by Radhaballav's sons can bind anybody but Radhaballav's sons, and, secondly, whether on the basis of the decree obtained against Radhaballav's sons the plaintiffs can claim the benefit of the charge vesting in Radhaballav's sons without proof of the transaction as between them and Radhaballav's sons.

The first point presents to our minds no difficulty at all. All that the learned Subordinate Judge and all that the learned Vakil for the appellants has said with regard to the doctrine of subrogation may be perfectly true; but there can be no subrogation in respect of property of which there has been no new mortgage. It has been found as a fact, and the finding has been accepted, that Radhaballav's sons had no interest in $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share of this property. Nothing that they could do with respect to this $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share could affect the rights of the real proprietors, either by way of subrogation or by way of extending the liability of those proprietors. The lien on the share of Radhaballav's sons might be carried back over the prior mortgages, but there could be no extension forwards or backwards of the lien on Haladhar's share under a contract to which Haladhar was not a party.

Our difficulty with regard to the second point is that there was no suggestion in the pleadings that section 43 could operate to give the plaintiffs a charge upon the share of Haladhar. We may grant for the sake of the argument that in view of the decision, Danappa v. Yamnappa (1), the charge vested in Radhaballav's sons would pass to the plaintiffs under section 43, if indeed it were proved that there had been an erroneous representation. We may also grant for the sake of the argument that that mortgage having passed from the stage of contract to the stage of a decree, the plaintiffs would be entitled to claim any interest possessed by the sons of Radhaballav without further proof of their contract with the sons of Radhaballav. But there is ample authority for the proposition [vide Gangahas v. Basvant Ballappa (2) and Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoor Subbaraju (3)] that before section 43 can be brought into operation there must in fact have been an inducement by erroneous representation. The question, therefore, of the applicability of section 43 depends upon the issue of fact:—Was the plaintiffs' father induced by the erroneous representation to advance the money to the sons of Radhaballav. There was no suggestion in the plaint of the facts bearing upon this question and no issue was raised upon it. We have, however, certain broad facts before us of which the chief is that the plaintiffs' father himself was a witness to the mortgage entered into by Radhaballav and Haladhar, and himself paid off the whole sum due under that mortgage. He must have been perfectly aware that Radhaballav was not the sole owner of this property; he must have known that Haladhar had an interest in it; he cannot now plead that he was misled by the assertion in the mortgage document executed by the sons of Radhaballav that they were in fact the sole proprietors of the property. In this view of the case there can be no question of the operation of section 43, and in no other view of the case could the plaintiffs possibly succeed. We are, therefore, of opinion that the suit was rightly dismissed and dismiss this appeal with costs in one set,

Under the Hindu Law a son adopted by a widow does not derive his title from his adoptive mother, just as a reversioner does not derive his title from or through the widow. [p. 231, col. 1.]

Time, therefore, does not run against the adopted son prior to the date of his adoption and adverse possession against the adoptive mother does not affect his rights. [p. 231, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, East Berar, dated the 27th March 1917; in Civil Suit No. 23 of 1915.

JUDGMENT.—One Sheokaran died on the 10th June 1902, leaving a widow Gopi Bai and his mother Kesarbai. Gopibai adopted the plaintiff Sitaram on the 19th September 1904. This appeal relates to field No. 138 sold on the 23rd June 1903 by Kesarbai to the defendant-respondent, Rajaram. Sitaram now sues for possession of this field and other fields with which we are not concerned in this appeal.

It has been held in the connected case, First Appeal No. 33B of 1917, that Kesarbai had no title to the property of Sheokaran, and had, therefore, no authority to sell field No. 138. The lower Court has dismissed the suit on the ground that it was instituted more than twelve years after the date of the sale. The suit, however, is within 2 years from the date of Sitaram's adoption. It is clear that Article 142 of the Limitation Act does not apply, as the plaintiff was never in possession of the field. It is contended for the appellant that the case is governed by Article 144 and that the adopted son's right accrued on his adoption. On the other hand, it is pointed out that the adverse possession of Kesarbai and her alienage commenced prior to the adoption, and this sale is not alleged to have been effected with the consent of the plaintiff's adoptive mother Gopi. The facts of the case are similar to those in Hari Vithal Parulkar v. Waman Hari Deshpande (1) in which Jenkins, C. J., and Candy, J., followed the earlier case of Moro Narayan Joshi v. Balaji Raghunath (2), where it was held that time did not run against the adopted son prior to the date of his adoption and that adverse possession against the adoptive mother did not affect the rights of the adopted son. An adopted son does not derive his title from the adoptive mother, just as a reversioner under the Hindu Law does not derive his rights from or through the widow; Runchordas Vandravandas v. Parvatibai (3). Reliance is placed on behalf of the respondent on a passage in the judgment in Padajirav v. Ramrav (4), in which the learned Judges were inclined to think that an adopted son might, under the special circumstances of the case, be held to derive his liability to be sued from or through the adoptive mother. Therefore, the adverse possession of both was allowed to be tacked to defeat the claim of a third party. The decision was based on the ground that the adopted son obtained possession from the adoptive mother. The case is no authority for the converse proposition that adverse possession against the widow can prejudicially affect the rights of the adopted son. The view which we have taken is supported by Kancharlu Venkataratnam v. Kojanti Venkotaramiah (5).

The result is that the appeal succeeds and the decree of the lower Court is modified by awarding the plaintiff possession of field No. 138. The plaintiff will get his costs from defendant No. 7 in both Courts on the value of the relief claimed against him.

Appeal allowed.

Restitution of conjugal rights, suit for—Disagreement between families of husband and wife, whether ground for refusing relief—Discretion of Court.

A mere disagreement between the families of the husband and the wife is not by itself a sufficient cause for refusing relief to the husband in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. [p. 232, col. 1.]

In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights it was found that the marriage had not been consummated, that there was bad feeling between the families of the husband and of the wife and that the wife refused to go to her husband at the dictation of her parents:

Held, that under these circumstances relief could not be refused to the plaintiff. [p. 232, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 17th January 1918, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 22nd November 1917, granting decree for restitution of conjugal rights.

Lala Ram Ohand Manchanda, for the Appellant.

Mr. Devi Dyal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the District Judge of Lyallpur has accepted an appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge granting the plaintiff a decree for restitution of conjugal rights against Musammat Satto, his wife, and for an injunction against her father and mother. The District Judge held that two facts were established, viz., that the marriage had not been consummated, and that there was bad feeling between the two families, and in view of these facts and the judgments reported as Kalawati v. Bukhan (1), Dhani v. Narain Singh (2) and Zaida v. Jowai (3) he has considered that his discretion should be used in favour of the girl. It is argued before me that the District Judge has based his decision on judgments in no way relevant to the present case. It is pointed out that in Zaida v. Jowai (3) restitution was refused on account of eight years' desertion and the puberty of the girl coupled with non-consummation of the marriage. In Dhani v. Narain Singh (2) the husband had been guilty of 16 years' desertion, and his object in suing for the return of an old woman suffering from goitre was merely to obtain possession of a marriageable daughter. In Kalawati v. Bukhan (1) the circumstances were also peculiar.

In the present case the marriage of Musammatt Satto took place in exchange for the marriage of Musammatt Jowai, the plaintiff's sister, with the paternal uncle of Musammatt Satto. There have been disagreements between the plaintiff's sister and her husband, and Musammatt Jowai has left her husband's house. Probably on account of these disagreements a criminal charge was made by plaintiff's brother against two uncles of Musammatt Satto. The charge may have been a true one but proceedings were dropped. The only other fact worthy of notice in the case is that the marriage took place in 1914 when the girl was 13 years of age. She was, therefore, 16 years of age in 1917, when this suit was instituted. Consummation of the marriage has also not taken place. It is also most significant that it is not even alleged that the plaintiff himself has figured in any family quarrel.

To the above circumstances, it is clear, the judgments referred to by the lower Appellate Court have not the slightest application. It is also clear that the girl herself, who is not even acquainted with her husband, has no reasonable personal ground for refusing to live with him. She is merely acting at the dictation of her father and mother who are annoyed on account of events connected with Musammatt Jowai. It is also obvious, that the right of a husband to obtain the return of his wife would become a dead letter if relief were refused in a case of this description. Every case in which parents refuse to send the girl to her husband is due to some disagreements between the families and this by itself is no sufficient cause for refusing relief.

For the above reasons I accept the appeal and give plaintiff a decree for the relief claimed against all the defendants.

Appeal accepted.

An attachment which is ordered in a suit before judgment cannot be treated as a nullity merely because, as a matter of fact, the attachment is not actually completed until after judgment. [p. 234, col. 1; p. 235, col. 2.]

Order XXI, rule 57, Civil Procedure Code, has no application to attachments ordered under Order XXXVIII, rule 5. [p. 233, col. 2; p. 235, col. 2.]

Per Phillips J.—When a Court makes an order under Order XXXVIII, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code, that order cannot be deprived of all force by the mere failure of the executive officers of the Court to carry it out before the decree is passed. [p. 234, col. 1.]

Per Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—There is nothing in Order XXXVIII, rules 5 to 12, Civil Procedure Code, requiring that the actual attachment in pursuance of the order directing conditional attachment should be made before the passing of the decree. Attachment of the property in the manner prescribed by Order XXI, rule 54, is a purely ministerial act. Any delay of the officers of Court in effecting the attachment should not prejudice the decree-holder and the validity of the order of attachment under Order XXXVIII, rule 6, should not depend on the date when it is actually effected. An attachment ordered before judgment invalidates an alienation made after the property is actually attached in pursuance of the order, even though the actual attachment was made after the passing of the decree. [p. 234, col. 2; p. 235, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Cuddapah, in Appeal Suit No. 33 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Cuddapah, in Original Suit No. 208 of 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. N. R. K. Thathachariar (with him Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Aiyar), for the Appellant.—The attachment here was actually made after judgment, though the order for attachment was made before. It could not, therefore, affect plaintiff's rights under his purchase. Order XXXVIII, rule 11, Civil Procedure Code, makes it clear that the attachment should be completed before decree.

Assuming that the attachment was valid, on an application to execute the decree, it became an attachment in execution and under Order XXI, rule 57 the attachment ceased when the execution application was dismissed. Sewdut Roy v. Sree Oanto Maity (1).

Mr. B. Somaya (with him Mr. B. Ramaswamiah), for the Respondents.—The attachment order was made before judgment and it is immaterial when it was actually given effect to. The order of Court should not be treated as a nullity simply by the accident of the attachment being effected after decree was passed. Mistakes and omissions of ministerial officers should not be made to prejudice the party in whose favour the order was made. The order passed under Order XXXVIII, rule 5, is not vacated by reason of the decree being passed before the actual attachment. Rule 11 should not be so construed as to render attachments made in pursuance of rule 5 invalid if completed after decree. It only makes unnecessary a re-attachment for purposes of execution.

Order XXI, rule 57, has no applicability to attachments under Order XXXVIII. The former rule applies only to property attached in execution and not to attachment before judgment. Order XXXVIII, rule 11, only dispenses with the necessity for re-attachment in such cases.

JUDGMENT.

PHILLIPS, J.—In this case the 1st defendant attached the plaint property before judgment in connection with a suit filed against the 3rd defendant, viz., Original Suit No. 137 of 1910. The plaintiff subsequently purchased the property. The question is whether at the time of the plaintiff's purchase the property was subject to the attachment by the 1st defendant. Two points are raised now: (1) that the original attachment was invalid as having been completed after the decree in the suit was passed; and (2) that even if the attachment was valid, it became an attachment in execution when the decree was sought to be executed and ceased to exist under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 57, Civil Procedure Code. So far as the second contention is concerned, the matter is practically concluded by authority: Vide Bavuddin Sahib v. Arunachalla Mudali (2), Ganesh Chandra Adak v. Banwari Lal Roy (3) and Kosuri Suraparaju v. Mandapaka Narasimham (4). No doubt in Sewdut Roy v. Sree Oanto Maity (1) there is an observation by Woodroffe, J., that the attachment before judgment on application to execute the decree becomes attachment in execution. Except for that one observation, I can find no other authority in support of the proposition that the nature of the attachment is altered by the filing of an execution application. I am not at all inclined to adopt this view in opposition to the authority of the cases above cited.

In support of the first proposition, reliance is placed on the language of Order XXXVIII, rule 11, of the Civil Procedure Code, which is as follows:—"Where property is under attachment by virtue of the provisions of this Order and a decree is subsequently passed in favour of the plaintiff, it shall not be necessary upon an application for execution of such decree to apply for a re-attachment of the property." No doubt under this rule it would appear at first sight that the attachment must have been completed before the decree was passed in order to give a party the benefit of the rule, that is to say, the benefit of not being obliged to apply for re-attachment of the property, when he wishes to execute his decree. In the present case it is not necessary to consider whether re-attachment was necessary, and we need only consider whether the property was validly attached under Order XXXVIII. Attachment was applied for and an order of attachment was passed before judgment was actually pronounced. But the attachment was not effected until a few days after the date of the decree.

(2) 22 Ind. Cas. 351; 26 M. L. J. 215.

(3) 14 Ind. Cas. 345; 16 C. L. J. 86; 16 C. W. N. 1097.

(4) 26 Ind. Cas. 81; 1 L. W. 932.

(1) 33 C. 639 at p. 643; 10 C. W. N. 634.

RUDRAVARAM VENKATASUBBIAH v. RUDRAVARAM VENKATA SESHAIYA.

This being so, can it be said that there was any attachment before judgment? No doubt the order was passed under rule 6 (1) before the decree, and if the order had been carried out at once, there could have been no doubt in the matter. Can it be said that the fact that there was delay in carrying out the order of the Court has deprived the Court of its powers to make such order effectual? The scope of Order XXXVIII is unquestionably limited to attachment before judgment, and all its provisions are set forth with a view to securing the plaintiff in the suit up to the time that he obtains a decree. It would be only by applying this limited scope of the Order to the present case that we would be justified in ruling that the attachment actually effected after the decree was ineffectual and void. It has been held in Sivakolundu Pillai v. Ganapathi Iyyar (5) that when an application for renewing attachment under section 46, Civil Procedure Code, has been put in before the expiry of the two months described in the proviso to that section and an order of the Court has not been passed until after the two months expired, the date of the application should be deemed to be the date of the order extending time. On the other hand the appellant's Vakil relies on Venkataselapathirao v. Kameswaramma (6), deciding that the written order of the Appellate Court staying execution does not take effect from its date but only from the date of its communication to the executing Court. Neither of these cases is really directly in point, and the question has to be decided on general principles. It seems to me that when a Court makes an order under Order XXXVIII, rule 6 of the Civil Procedure Code, that order cannot be deprived of all force by the mere failure of the executive officers of the Court to carry it out before the decree is passed. The attachment, when effected, is an attachment made in pursuance of an order to attach before judgment and must be treated as an attachment before judgment and not as a nullity merely because, as a matter of fact, the attachment is not completed until after judgment. To adopt the opposite view would be to allow a formal judicial order to be upset by the negligence or default of a subordinate ministerial officer. The language of Order XXXVIII, rule 11, is also in favour of my view, for it does not refer to "an attachment made before judgment" but to an attachment "by virtue of the provisions of this Order," and an attachment made in pursuance of an order under rule 6 could be such an attachment in spite of its being completed after decree. I find, therefore, that the attachment in the present case was a valid attachment. The claim for damages is certainly premature.

The second appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The 1st defendant instituted a suit (Original Suit No. 137 of 1910) against the 3rd defendant and on the same date applied for attachment before judgment. Notice was directed to the defendant and interim attachment was ordered under Order XXXVIII, rule 5 of the Civil Procedure Code, on the 17th February 1910. The attachment was actually effected on the property on the 26th February 1910. Meantime a decree was passed in the suit on the 21st February 1910. After decree the decree-holder applied for execution on the 3rd January 1912 and the 10th July 1912, but both the applications were dismissed for default of prosecution. The plaintiff herein purchased the property on the 27th April 1911 and sued for a declaration that the decree in Original Suit 137 of 1910 was satisfied and was unexecutable and in the alternative for damages. The lower Courts dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the grounds, inter alia, that the purchase of the plaintiff, being subsequent to the attachment, was invalid against the decree holder and that the suit for damages was premature.

As regards the first point it is contended by the appellant that the attachment having been actually effected after passing of the decree, it is invalid and that even if valid, the dismissal of the execution application for default put an end to the attachment under Order XXI, rule 57, of the Code of Civil Procedure. I am unable to agree with either of the contentions. There is nothing in Order XXXVIII, rules 5 to 12,

(6) 43 Ind. Cas. 214; 41 M. L. 151; 22 M. L. T. 330; 33 M. L. J. 515; 6 L. W. 617; (1917) M. W. N. 785.

RUDRAVARAM VENKATASUBBIAH v. RUDRAVARAM VENKATA SESHAIYA.

(which deal with attachments before judgment) requiring that the actual attachment in pursuance of the order directing conditional attachment should be made before passing of the decree. Rule 5 empowers the Court to direct conditional attachment of the property specified in the application, when at any stage of the suit it is satisfied that the defendant is about to dispose of the whole or any part of his property or is about to remove it from the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction. An order duly passed under rule 5 cannot be ipso facto vacated by reason of the decree supervening before actual attachment is effected in manner specified by rule 54, Order XXI, unless there is something in rules 5 to 12 to that effect. It is contended that rule 11 of Order XXXVIII refers to an attachment and subsequent decree and that by implication it negatives the validity of an attachment made subsequent to decree in pursuance of a previous order under rule 5. All that rule 11 states is that it shall not be necessary to re-attach, if before decree has been passed property has been attached in pursuance of an order under rule 5. The section is only an enabling one and relieves the decree-holder from going over the same process again after decree if he has attached the property while the suit is pending. It is unnecessary to consider whether, if the attachment ordered before was made after decree, the section would apply so as to dispense with attachment after the filing of the execution application. The invalidity of the attachment order under rule 5, effected after decree, is one thing and the necessity for re-attachment owing to the terms of rule 11 not having been complied with is another. The case is one of first impression and I think there is neither reason nor authority for holding that the mischief to prevent which rule 5 was enacted is nonetheless because of the passing of a decree subsequent to the order. It is argued that the party could re-attach, but a re-attachment would take sometime (especially if the property is situate at some distance from the Court) and should the order under rule 5 cease to have any effect immediately on the passing of the decree, there is nothing to prevent alienation between the date of the decree and the date when the attachment is actually effected in manner specified by Order XXI, rule 54, as under section 64 the attachment invalidates an alienation only when the alienation is after the actual compliance with the provision of rule 54. Attachment of the property in manner prescribed by Order XXI, rule 54, is a purely ministerial act. Any delay of the officers of Court in effecting the attachment should not prejudice the decree-holder and the validity of the order of attachment under rule 5, Order XXXVIII, should not depend on the date when it is actually effected. I am of opinion that an attachment ordered before judgment invalidates an alienation made after the property is actually attached in pursuance of the order, even though the actual attachment was made after the passing of the decree.

It is argued that the dismissal of the execution application puts an end to the attachment before judgment and reliance is placed on an observation of Woodroffe, J., in Sewdut Roy v. Sree Canio Maity (1), to the effect that on an application for execution being filed "the attachment before judgment enures and becomes upon and by virtue of the application an attachment in execution." The question whether rule 57 of Order XXI, which expressly refers to cases where property is attached in execution of a decree, can be extended to cases of attachment before judgment merely by reason of the provision of rule 11 of Order XXXVIII dispensing with the necessity for re-attachment was considered by Sadasiva Aiyar and Spencer, JJ., in Bavuddin Sahib v. Arunachalla Mudali (2), and we agree with them in holding that rule 57 of Order XXI has no application to attachments effected under rule 5 of Order XXXVIII. A similar view was taken in Kosuri Suraparaju v. Mandapaka Narasimham (4).

As regards the claim to damages, it is premature as the decree has not been executed and plaintiff did not at the date of the suit suffer any damages. The decree may never be executed by sale of the property purchased by plaintiff, and there is no reason why he should get the consideration paid by him by way of damages and also keep the property. It is open to him to pay the amount due on the decree in respect of which the property is attached and recover it

He sought to obtain accounts of a partnership which admittedly existed between the defendant, who is the present appellant, and one Bansilal, who died while still partner on the 14th January 1910. Harbakhsh, who died early in 1912 while the suit was proceeding in the Court of first instance, was Bansilal's full brother and claimed to have been joint with him. Alternatively he alleged that if separate from Bansilal, he was entitled as Bansilal's heir by virtue of a caste custom which excludes daughters from inheriting. Bansilal admittedly left a daughter him surviving.

The defendant pleaded that Harbakhsh and Bansilal were separate and denied the alleged custom. He went on to say that such a custom is unreasonable, and added what reads like a half admission of a practice to exclude daughters that the custom is "not ancient and continuous." To this, the plaintiff replied that the custom of Marwaris to exclude daughters is ancient, continuous and reasonable.

The trial Judge found that Harbakhsh and Bansilal were separate but that the custom alleged was proved. The defendant appealed to the District Judge, who also pronounced in favour of the custom.

The main contention advanced in this Court on behalf of the defendant is that the evidence accepted by the Courts below is not sufficient in law to establish the custom excluding daughters.

It will be convenient to dispose at the outset of an objection by the respondents to the effect that whether or not a custom exists is a question of fact, and that there being evidence proper for consideration the decision appealed from cannot legally be impeached at this stage. Hureehur Mookerjee v. Judoonath Ghose (1) and Bai Shirinbai v. Kharshedji Nasarvanji (2) contain remarks which at first sight support this contention. The former, however, indicates also that if the decision is reached "in any way illegally", it can be attacked even in second appeal. In the latter the judgment of the High Court shows that the record contained indisputably a large body of evidence in support of the custom set up. On the other hand, there is considerable authority in favour of the view that the High Court may consider whether the evidence adduced suffices to establish all the elements (antiquity, continuity, certainty, etc.) necessary to constitute a valid custom differing from the general law: see Desai Ranchhoddas Vithaldas v. Rawal Nakhubhai Kesabhai (3), Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (4), Hashim Ali v. Abdul Rahman (5), Ram Bilas v. Lal Bahadur (6). In Sardar Singh v. Ajit (7) Crosthwaite, J. C., upset a finding that a custom of inalienability was established, the case being argued before him by experienced Counsel who would not have been likely to overlook so obvious an objection as finality of the finding. In the present case the appellants' contention is that the practice of excluding daughters is not proved to be so ancient and so binding on the conscience of the caste (Mahesari Bania) to which Harbakhsh belonged as to have ripened into a custom. I hold on the authorities last cited that this is a good ground of second appeal.

Before examining the evidence I would observe that it includes no judicial decision, a form of proof the value of which was recognised in Shimbhu Nath v. Gayan Chand (8). The learned District Judge has referred to passages in Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage (8th Edition, pages 783, 788 and 789), which show that the exclusion of daughters is by no means unknown in India but relate for the most part to inhabitants of the Punjab and Oudh. The families concerned in Bhau Nanaji Utpat v. Sundrabai (9) and Pranjivan Dayaram v. Bai Reva (10) were Brahmans. In the former the priestly duties required of the family had some bearing on the decision, while in the latter the property concerned was of special character, namely, a bhagdari village, and the custom of preferring males to females was found to obtain among Muhammadan no less than among Hindu bhagdars. The Mahesari Banias are a mercantile and commercial class according to J. N. Bhattacharya's "Hindu Castes and Sects" (pages 203 and 211) they came originally from Central India and are specially marked for business capacity. Their case is certainly very different from that of the warlike Bhate Sultan class whose custom of excluding daughters was recognised by the Privy Council in Bajrangji Singh v. Manokarnika Bakhsh Singh (11). No doubt it is natural enough for one family to dislike property passing into another. On the other hand, a daughter may be unmarried when a succession opens and whether married, widowed or unmarried, her claim on her father's affection must always be a special one. Altogether then there seems to be no prima facie ground for supposing that the Mahesaris exclude daughters from inheriting.

Turning to the plaintiff's evidence it seems to me strikingly defective on the points of antiquity and continuity. He set up a custom common to all Marwaris i. e., to persons whose territory of origin is Marwar. The witnesses who speak on the point are his 2nd, 4th, 5th, 7th, 10th, 11th and 13th. Of these the oldest (No. 5) is only 45, several being considerably younger. Not one seems to occupy a position of any particular standing. Madan Gopal (P. W. No. 2) lives at Bombay and speaks of two cases which occurred—one quite recent and the other unplaced in time—at Nagpur. In each of his instances a brother excluded a daughter, but it is by no means clear that the brothers were really separate in estate, for they messed together. Shrikisan Das (P. W. No. 4) and Mohan Lal (P. W. No. 7) refer to one case of exclusion only, which they allege to have occurred in the well-known family of the late Rai Bahadur Bansilal Abirchand. Even that was only 25 years ago, and it is only Shrikisan Das who definitely asserted that the brothers who excluded the deceased's daughters were separate from the deceased. Considerably better evidence about this exclusion might well have been adduced, for the present head of the late Rai Bahadur's family, Sir Kasturchand Daga, lives at Kamptee and sometimes stays at Hinganghat. Ram Prasad (P. W. No. 5) and Mathura Das (P. W. No. 10) are said to be brothers, though different father's names are shown against them at the head of their depositions. They say that they excluded a separated uncle's daughter, but particulars given by Ram Prasad make it clear that the succession only opened in 1912. Ram Prasad mentions also the case of Rai Bahadur Bansilal Abirchand and two others, one 20 years old and the other undated. Bindraj (P. W. No. 11) seems to be alone in speaking of an undated instance which occurred in his native town of Rupnagar. Suraj Khan (P. W. No. 13), aged 26, is another instance of a separated nephew excluding a daughter: he says he succeeded 10 or 12 years ago, but his evidence must be regarded as interested, for he is related to the plaintiff and indebted to the defendant.

Against this very limited array of instances there is certainly very little evidence from the defendant's side. He examined two Oswals and one Marwari. Kaluram (D. W. No. 4) said:—

"I know of no case in which a daughter amongst us became an heir. I know of no case in which the property went to another in the lifetime of the daughter."

This witness is only 26 years old and could not well be expected to know much one way or the other. Motilal Oswal (D. W. No. 5), aged 41, deposed thus:—

"I know of no case in which a daughter inherited her father's separate property. Amongst us females do not inherit; a male, however distant, would succeed."

For the respondents this passage, part of the cross-examination, is relied on, but its value strikes me as very small, inasmuch as it is no part of the plaintiff's case that all females are excluded and his own witness Ram Prasad gave an instance of a widow succeeding. Sawairam (D. W. No. 6) is a Mahesari and his brother Chunilal is married to the daughter of the plaintiff's deceased brother Bansilal; according to him his sister-in-law is Bansilal's heir.

Having given the entire evidence my careful consideration, I conclude that the alleged custom has not been established. It is unnecessary, therefore, to decide whether Harbakhsh's son Mirchilal was wrongly admitted to continue the spit on his father's death by reason of his having been adjudged insolvent in his father's lifetime. The appellant's objection to the procedure adopted was not raised in the Court of first instance, and I am disposed to agree with the District Judge that if there was an error the merits are unaffected thereby. If this view is correct, section 160 (1) (c), Civil Procedure Code, would preclude a second appeal on the point. Moreover, there is authority for the position that failing intervention by the Court or Receiver in which the insolvent's property has vested, the insolvent has the same power of acting in respect of after-acquired property as he had before insolvency: see Kristomul Mitter v. Suresh Chunder Deb (12), Fatimabibi v. Fatimabibi (13) and Sriramulu Naidu v. Andalammal (14).

The respondents ask for a remand for the purpose of contesting in the lower Appellate Court the decision that Harbakhsh and Bansilal were separate. There is, however, no indication in the record that before the District Judge they sought to support the decree in their favour on a ground decided against them. I, therefore, decline to remand the case.

The appeal succeeds, the decrees of the lower Courts are set aside and the claim is dismissed with costs in all three Courts.

Appeal allowed.

HANMANTRAM RADHAKISAN—

versus

SHIVNARAYAN ASURAM—DEFENDANT
—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXX,

HANMANTRAM RADHAKISAN V. SHIVNARAYAN ASURAM.

r. 7, Sch. II, cl. 20—Minor, party to dispute—Reference to arbitration by next friend—Award filed and decree passed without opposition—O. XXXII, r. 7, applicability of—Decree, whether binding on minor.

When a dispute, to which a minor is a party, is submitted to arbitration out of Court by the next friend of the minor and the award made upon such submission is brought into Court by the next friend under clause 20 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, and the Court is asked to file it and thereafter pass a decree upon it, the opposite party not objecting, the Court is not bound to sanction the agreement to have the award filed and a decree passed upon it, as for the benefit of the minor, or to certify the decree, nor is the minor entitled to the protection of Order XXXII, rule 7 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 243, col. 2; p. 244, col. 2.]

Where a minor through his next friend applies that an award be filed and a decree passed upon it, and the other party to the reference raises no objection to the application, and the award is filed and a decree passed in accordance with it, it cannot be said that there has been any agreement on behalf of the minor with reference to the suit in which the next friend is acting, although were the minor the defendant in such a suit as is numbered under clause 20 of the Second Schedule, it might be that a promise given on behalf of the minor to allow the award to be filed without opposition and a decree passed in accordance with it would be an agreement on behalf of the minor with reference to the suit within the meaning of Order XXXII, rule 7 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 242, col. 2; p. 243, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Poona, in Suit No. 395 of 1912.

On the appeal coming on for hearing before Beaman and Heaton, JJ. on the 18th March 1918 the Court made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

BEAMAN, J.—(March 18, 1918.)—The mother of the plaintiff, his natural guardian, referred certain partnership disputes between the plaintiff and the defendant to arbitration. The plaintiff was then a minor. The plaintiff's mother took the award to Court, and applied under clause 20 of the Second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, for a decree in terms of the award, the defendant consenting. A decree was passed, but not certified to be for the benefit of the minor. Finding himself dissatisfied with the award and the decree passed upon it, the plaintiff through his mother as guardian has brought this suit to have the decree set aside on the ground, inter alia, of fraud. It is contended before us that whether there was fraud or not the plaintiff is clearly entitled under Order XXXII, rule 7, Civil Procedure Code, to have the decree set aside, and the question is, whether he is so entitled or not? Were the point free from authority, I should have had no hesitation in holding that he was. So it was held upon exactly similar facts in the case of Mahadev Balkrishna Kelkar v. Krishnabai (1) by Parsons and Ranade, JJ. But a Division Bench consisting of Sir Lawrence Jenkins and Chandavarkar, JJ., came to a contrary conclusion in the case of Vithaldas v. Dattaram (2), and very definitely overruled the earlier decision. This was not through inadvertence, since the judgment of the lower Court was expressly based upon the case of Mahadev Balkrishna Kelkar v. Krishnabai (1). It is plain that the later decision could not have been given in opposition to the earlier without reference to a Full Bench, but for the latitude allowed Courts in shutting their eyes or not to case-law which is not in the authorized reports. It is significant that although the Court must have known that it was overruling the decision of Parsons and Ranade, JJ., when it decided the case of Vithaldas v. Dattaram (2), no reference is to be found in the judgment to that decision. We find here then a direct and irreconcilable conflict of judicial decision. We have no other course open to us than to refer the point to a Full Bench for authoritative settlement. In doing so I will state as briefly as I can, why, with all respect to the learned Judges responsible for it, I think the later decision wrong, and the earlier decision right.

It is true that the words of Order XXXII, rule 7, will not apply to the agreement to refer out of Court, made by any one acting for a minor. It is nonetheless true that all such agreements are in essence contractual, since their effect is to abridge or extend, as the case may be, strict contractual rights. But since ex hypothesi such agreements to refer and resultant references as well as awards made on them, are outside the control of the Court and beyond its jurisdiction, such cases are not within the contemplation of Order XXXII, rule 7. Such submissions to arbitration by guardians de facto of minors and awards upon them would, I apprehend, always be voidable by the minor concerned on attaining his majority just as all his other contracts would, to the same extent, subject to the same conditions. But when a Court has intervened, the case is radically different. Upon general principles, and neglecting for a moment the actual language of Order XXXII, rule 7, it is safe to say that whenever and upon whatever procedure, under what conditions so ever, a Court has made a non-contentious decree, a decree, that is to say, which is analysable into a decree by consent, affecting a minor's rights, that decree must be certified to be for the minor's benefit, and if it is not, then it is voidable (without there being any need to prove fraud) at the minor's option. This statement of general principles, which I believe to be universal and without any exception, is a necessary consequence of the rule that all Courts when dealing with the affairs of minors are charged with a special duty, the duty, that is, of protecting the minor's interests. It is not enough that a guardian ad litem should be appointed; when a compromise is effected, that is to say, whenever the Court does not decide for itself what the minor's rights are, it is bound, before making a decree in terms of the compromise, to satisfy itself as far as it can that the minor has been properly protected, and that his interests have not been sacrificed any way. If the Court does not do this, and what is more, place it clearly on record that it has done so before binding the minor by its decree, it has fallen short of its duty, and its decree is at once voidable at the minor's option on attaining majority. Such being the widest scope of the law, and expression of the principle upon which it rests, it will be seen that the actual language of Order XXXII, rule 7, really does cover every proper case. And there is no difficulty at all in showing that it covers the case before us, as well as the case before the Court in Vithaldas v. Dattaram (2). The learned Judges there appear to have thought that the only agreement in question was the agreement, out of Court, to refer the matters in difference to arbitration. That, however, is not so. Where a suit has been brought and the parties (one of them being a minor) submit to arbitration under the control of the Court, it has been held that the agreement to submit is not such an agreement as is contemplated in Order XXXII, rule 7, and does not require the sanction of the Court. There are two answers here. 1. In strictness this is an agreement and the mere fact that the Court grants the application amounts by implication to the Court sanctioning it up to that point. 2. But it is obvious that the Court cannot at that stage decide, whether the agreement is or is not for the benefit of the minor. That can only be known when the award is made. It may be very much in the minor's favour, or it may be very much against him. The same is true of a like agreement made before the parties have come to Court at all. But while in the former case I suppose no one would contend that the Court need not sanction the decree upon the award and declare it to be for the minor's benefit, the decision under examination holds that this is quite unnecessary when the preliminary steps, the reference to arbitration, and the award were anterior in time to the Court having any knowledge of the facts or jurisdiction over the parties. In every case of the kind a decree by consent implies an agreement somewhere, and if the Court is wholly ignorant of the fact of any such agreement having been made, at the time it was made, or the terms upon which it was made, nevertheless before it can pass a decree it is in a position to ascertain, from the terms of the decree it is asked to make and a comparison between those terms and the facts which it will insist upon knowing, whether the underlying agreement has been for the minor's benefit or not. The validity of this general statement is not touched, much less impaired, by the circumstance that in the particular case before us the application under clause 20 of the Second Schedule was made by the minor. If the matter was from that moment to go through uncontested up to decree, then the terms of the award were evidence enough of what agreement had been come to by the parties, and material enough to put the Court on enquiry whether before converting it into a decree the Court would take it to be for the benefit of the minor. Now if we return to Order XXXII, rule 7, and compare its language with clause 20 of the Second Schedule, it is plain that an application under the latter will at once take the form of a suit, in which if a minor is a party he must be either plaintiff or defendant. He must, therefore, be represented. He must have a guardian. Either, in any particular case, he had or he had not. If he had, then one at least of the verbal difficulties stated in the Court's judgment in Vithaldas v. Dattaram (2) is removed. If he had not, then the decree could not possibly stand. No decree could be made by any Court affecting a minor's rights unless the minor were represented in the suit. Thus we have in effect a suit in which the minor represented in fact by the guardian, his mother, is plaintiff, and the defendant here was the defendant. The prayer of the plaint is to decree an agreement which has been arrived at by process of arbitration out of Court. All its terms are now known, that is to say, the terms of the result of the agreement to refer, namely, the contents of the award. The law permits, and, therefore, of course contemplates defences. This, like any other suit, may be contentious. But if it is not, if both parties say to the Court, we are agreed in desiring your decree in the terms we have laid before you, and if one of those parties is a minor, surely this is an agreement within the letter, as it most certainly is within the spirit, of Order XXXII, rule 7. Else it appears to me that minors would be exposed to gross abuses everywhere. Their nominal guardians might always submit their disputes to arbitration, and bring in an award asking for a decree in terms of the award after settling with the nominal defendant, and the Court would only have to pass a decree without taking the trouble to investigate the merits to bind the minor, and so make itself the instrument, and the most effective instrument, of defrauding him of his just rights. Of course it may be answered that excluding a minor in these circumstances from the protection of Order XXXII, rule 7, does not mean that he is wholly deprived of redress. He can still prove that he was not adequately represented, or that the consent decree was obtained by fraud. But these are often difficult ways, when many years have passed. I see no reason at all why the minor should not have the much simpler, the much easier, the unqualified relief provided by Order XXXII, rule 7.

In my opinion the answer to the question which I would refer to the Full Bench is that all cases of the kind do fall within the language and intention of Order XXXII, rule 7, and that in the case before us the plaintiff is entitled to have the decree set aside.

The following is the question referred to the Full Bench:—

When a dispute to which a minor is a party has been submitted to arbitration out of Court, and the award made upon such submission has been brought into Court under clause 20 of the Second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, and the Court has been asked to file it and thereafter pass a decree upon it, neither party objecting, is not the Court bound to sanction this agreement to have the award filed and a decree passed upon it, as for the benefit of the minor, and so also certify the decree? and if the Court fails to do so, is not the minor entitled to the protection of Order XXXII, rule 7, Civil Procedure Code?

HEATON, J.—(March 18, 1918.)—The facts out of which arises the dispute before us are these: The plaintiff is a minor; his father was a partner in a firm; on his death disputes arose as to the business of the firm. It was agreed to refer these disputes to arbitration, this agreement being signed by the mother and natural guardian on behalf of the plaintiff. An award was made. The plaintiff through his mother as guardian applied to the Court as provided by paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code that the award should be filed. Thereupon the application was numbered and registered as a suit, notices were issued, there was no contest and eventually a decree was made in terms of the award.

The minor now, again through his mother as guardian, sues to avoid the decree on the ground that he is entitled to do so by the provisions of rule 7 of Order XXXII. The question before us is, whether he is entitled to do so or not, whether, in short, rule 7 of Order XXXII governs the case. If it does, the plaintiff certainly can avoid the decree, if there was an agreement as to, or a compromise of, the suit entered into without the leave of the Court. First of all we have to determine, whether there was an agreement or compromise. I think there was. Where, as here, there was a suit to file the award followed after due notice to the defendants by a decree without contest, we must, I think, assume either a tacit or explicit agreement that the award should be filed. It may be urged that this is a question of fact; if so, we can determine it in this appeal which is a first appeal. But when this view, that there was a tacit or explicit agreement between the plaintiff and defendants that the award should be filed without contest, was mentioned in argument, there was no objection made, as I understand, to the assumption. I, therefore, assume that there was a tacit or explicit agreement. If there was an agreement either express or tacit, then there was, it seems to me, an agreement of the kind contemplated by rule 7 of Order XXXII. Suppose there had been a contest in the suit and that then the contest had been dropped and the award filed by consent. If so, it could not, I think, be successfully argued that rule 7 of Order XXXII would not apply. Equally to my thinking it cannot be argued successfully that the rule does not apply when there is no contest.

The point is one of great general importance, for if that rule does not apply to uncontested decrees obtained on awards, the door is opened to the evils in their worst form which the rule is intended to prevent: for we know how easily widows are cajoled or deceived and how often they are induced to sacrifice the interests of minor sons.

My learned brother has explained that a reference to a Full Bench is imperative in this case. It is the more so because in a recent case of Kheratali Roshanalli v. Mahmatali Nadarali (3) we delivered a judgment which in principle is irreconcilable with the judgment in Vithaldas v. Dattaram (2). For myself I venture still to think that we are right and that the judgment in Vithaldas's case (2) was not right; at least would not be right now, for the words of section 141 of the Code are so explicit as to compel us to apply rule 7 of Order XXXII to suits on awards as well as to other suits. When we dealt with Second Appeal No. 711 of 1916 [Kheratali Roshanalli v. Mahmatali Nadarali (3)], however, our attention was not called to the decision in Vithaldas's case (2).

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

SCOTT, C. J.—The question referred to the Full Bench is as follows:—When a dispute to which a minor is a party has been submitted to arbitration out of Court, and the award made upon such submission has been brought into Court under clause 20 of the Second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, and the Court has been asked to file it and thereafter pass a decree upon it, neither party objecting, is not the Court bound to sanction this agreement to have the award filed and a decree passed upon it, as for the benefit of the minor, and so also certify the decree? and if the Court fails to do so, is not the minor entitled to the protection of Order XXXII, rule 7, Civil Procedure Code?

It is necessary to read this question with the main facts in the suit, namely, that a reference to arbitration was made, or agreed to, by a mother on behalf of her minor son, and after the award was published, the mother on behalf of the son applied under clause 20 of the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code that the award should be filed in order that a decree might be passed upon it. The minor thus became, through his next friend, the applicant.

If the other party to the reference raises no objection to the application, and the award is filed and a decree passed in accordance with it, it does not appear to me that it can be said that there has been any agreement on behalf of the minor with reference to the suit in which the next friend is acting, although were the minor the defendant in such a suit as is numbered under clause 20 of the Second Schedule, it might be that a promise given on behalf of the minor to allow the award to be filed without opposition and a decree passed in accordance with it would be an agreement on behalf of the minor with reference to the suit. If a plaintiff gets everything that he applies for without objection by the defendant, it cannot be said that there is a decree by consent in the strict sense of that term. It is only a decree upon the submission of the defendant. The fact that the defendant does not object would not impose upon the Court the necessity of sanctioning anything as a condition precedent to filing the award and passing a decree upon it. The judgment of Mr. Justice Heaton, one of the referring Judges, puts the question of agreement as a matter of assumption of an undisputed fact. He says: "Where, as here, there was a suit to file the award followed after due notice to the defendants by a decree without contest, we must, I think, assume either a tacit or explicit agreement that the award should be filed. It may be urged that this is a question of fact; if so, we can determine it in this appeal which is a first appeal. But when this view, that there was a tacit or explicit agreement between the plaintiff and defendants that the award should be filed without contest, was mentioned in argument, there was no objection made, as I understand, to the assumption. I, therefore, assume that there was a tacit or explicit agreement." That assumption, as it seems to me, comes to this, that the defendant let it be known that he was not objecting to the filing of the award. I do not think that that amounts to an agreement or compromise on behalf of the minor plaintiff with reference to the suit within the meaning of Order XXXII, rule 7. It also appears to me that there is no conflict between the two cases alluded to in the referring judgments. Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade say in Mahadev Balkrishna Kelkar v. Krishnabai (1): "It is admitted that the sanction of the Court was not obtained either to the original agreement of reference to arbitration made by Vinayak Balkrishna Kelkar on behalf of his sons or to the agreement of the same person that the award should be filed or to the decree. It is, in our opinion, essential under section 462 of the Code that the leave of the Court should have been obtained to the agreement before a decree was passed on it." That, as I understand, is the second agreement mentioned, namely, that the award should be filed. That would be an agreement on behalf of a minor defendant after the application had been numbered as a suit. In Vithaldas v. Dattaram (2) Sir Lawrence Jenkins delivering the judgment of the Court said: "Can, then, the decision be supported on the ground that there has been no such leave as section 462 contemplates? We think not. That section obviously contemplates the existence of a guardian and a pending litigation; but here, when the agreement was entered into, there was neither a guardian for a suit nor a suit." I infer from the judgment in the case of Mahadev Balkrishna Kelkar v. Krishnabai (1) that the Court there was of opinion that the original agreement of reference, before there had been any application numbered as a suit, would not require the leave of the Court.

The question referred, must, I think, be answered in the negative.

MACLEOD, J.—The suit in which this reference has been made was filed by the plaintiff, a minor, to set aside the decree passed in his favour on an award. The agreement to refer was made on his behalf by his mother as his guardian, and the grounds on which he applied to have the decree set aside were that the accounts submitted to the arbitrators by his deceased father's partner were not correct, that his guardian was not in possession of true information at the time of the award, and that the award had been obtained by fraud. In the trial Court the suit was dismissed.

In first appeal, the eighth ground of appeal was as follows: "The decree passed on the award contravenes the provisions of Order XXXII, rule 7 of the Civil Procedure Code." When the appeal came on for argument this point seems to have been raised as a preliminary point, for if it was successful, there was no necessity to go into the question of fraud. The difficulty in dealing with the point arises from the fact that it was not taken at the hearing and there is, therefore, no evidence on the record of any agreement which had been entered into on behalf of the minor with reference to the suit by his next friend, and, therefore, the agreement which has now been relied upon by the appellant had to be assumed from the facts already recorded.

Now the only agreement entered into by the minor's guardian was the agreement to refer. But it was argued for the appellant, as far as I can gather, that the agreement to refer implied a further agreement that when the award was made on the reference, it was to be filed and a decree passed on it under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule. In the first place, I do not think that we can infer, from the agreement to refer the matter in dispute to arbitration, a further agreement to abide by the award, but even if we could, the agreement to refer was made before suit and any further agreement implied therein would also be before suit. All that appears on the record to have happened was that the award was made in favour of the minor. His guardian then filed an application under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule that the award should be filed. Sub-paragraph (2) states that the application should be in writing and should be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants. Sub-paragraph (3) states that the Court should direct notice to be given to the parties to the arbitration, other than the applicant, requiring them to show cause, within a time specified, why the award should not be filed; and under paragraph 21, where the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration, and that an award has been made thereon and where no ground such as is mentioned or referred to in paragraph 14 or paragraph 15 is proved, the Court shall order the award to be filed and shall proceed to pronounce judgment in accordance with the award. Notice in the ordinary course was issued, the application came on for hearing, and the defendant raised no objection to the award, such as he might have raised under paragraph 14 or 15 of the Second Schedule. After that it was the Court's duty to pronounce judgment in accordance with the award. Therefore, it cannot be said that there had been any agreement by the guardian after the application to file the award had been made and the matter became a suit, which required the sanction of the Court under Order XXXII, rule 7.

But even assuming that the defendant, after the application to file the award had been made, had promised that he would not take any objection under paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Second Schedule, it cannot be said that there was an agreement by the minor's guardian which would come within rule 7 of Order XXXII. The mere fact that the defendant consented that a decree should be passed in accordance with the award, which involved no action on the part of the guardian, would not in any sense constitute an agreement by the guardian. Therefore, dealing with the question which has been referred, I should be inclined to say that if the defendant in a suit by a minor plaintiff registered under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, raises no objection to the award being filed, and a decree passed thereon, there is no agreement by the guardian of the minor such as would come within the meaning of Order XXXII, rule 7. Therefore, I agree with what has been said by the learned Chief Justice. I may also add that there does not seem to me to be any conflict between the decisions referred to in the referring judgments, in Mahadev Balkrishna Kelkar v. Krishnabai (1) and Vithaldas v. Dattaram (2). In the first case the minor was a defendant and his guardian had agreed to judgment against him, while in the latter the only agreement on the record was the agreement to refer which was made, as in this case, at a time when no suit was in existence. Mahadev Balkrishna Kelkar v. Krishnabai (1) was referred to in the argument and the learned Judges evidently considered that it did not cover the case before them.

SHAH, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice. I only desire to add that the question referred to us is rather in a general form, and that my answer must be taken to be limited to the question read with reference to the undisputed facts of the case.

KESHAWESARINDRA SAHI v. DEBENDRA BALA DASSI.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER NO. 10 OF 1917.

August, 9, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad and Mr. Justice Coutts.

B. KESHAWESARINDRA SAHI—

APPELLANT.

versus

Rani DEBENDRA BALA DASSI—

RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 88, 89—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 3, O. XXXIV, r. 5—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 18—Mortgage suit—Preliminary decree—Order absolute under section 89, Transfer of Property Act after 1st January 1909, validity of—Execution of decree—Estoppel—Objection not taken in previous proceedings, whether can be taken in subsequent proceeding—Application asking for sale of different properties, whether in continuance of previous application—Mistake in entering date of decree, whether material defect—Minor judgment-debtor—Guardian, appointment of—Formal order, absence of, effect of—Sale, setting aside of—Limitation for execution, commencement of.

Where before the coming into force of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit had been obtained under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, and the judgment-debtor having made default in payment of the decretal amount, an application for an order absolute under section 89 of the Act had been made, and notice served on the judgment-debtor:

Held, (1) that the proceedings for order absolute were pending proceedings and, were not, therefore, under section 6 of the General Clauses Act, affected by the repeal of section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act; [p. 249, col. 1.]

(2) that, therefore, the decree to be executed was the preliminary decree made absolute by the order of the Court, and that the proceedings being under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act no final decree was necessary. [p. 249, col. 1.]

Where an order absolute for the sale of mortgaged properties was made under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act during the lifetime of the mortgagor judgment-debtor and with notice to him and no objection was taken by him, it is not open to his legal representative to question the validity of the order made in execution proceedings. [p. 250, col. 1.]

Where several successive applications for execution of a decree are admitted and orders are passed thereon by a competent Court, without any objection being taken by the judgment-debtor regarding the validity of the decree, it is not open to him in a subsequent execution proceeding in respect of the same decree to contend that there is in fact no decree which can be executed. [p. 250, col. 2.]

Where in an execution proceeding the Court by its action has given its sanction to the appearance of a person as guardian of a minor judgment-debtor and that person has so appeared and acted on behalf of the minor, the absence of a formal order of appointment under Order XXXII, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code, is not fatal to the proceedings and the minor is bound by them. [p. 253, col. 1.]

A decree-holder is entitled to treat an application for execution of a decree as in continuation of a previous application even when he wants to proceed to sell different properties. [p. 255, col. 2.]

An execution proceeding can only be vitiated by material defects. [p. 256, col. 1.]

A mistake in entering the date of the decree in an application for execution is not a material defect so as to vitiate the proceedings. [p. 254, col. 2.]

Where an execution sale is set aside on account of the fraud of one of the judgment-debtors in collusion with the auction-purchaser, the decree-holder has, under Article 181 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act, three years from the date of the setting aside of the sale within which to execute the decree. [p. 257, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Chapra.

Messrs. Syed Hasan Imam, Rajendra Prasad and Ambica Prasad Upadhaya, for the Appellant

Sir Rash. Behari Ghose, Messrs. Purnendu Narayan Sinha, Shorashi Charan Mitter and Naresk Chandra Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Chapra rejecting a petition of objection filed under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure in an execution case. The following are shortly the facts of the case:—

On the 29th August 1902 one Ramsunder Sahi, who was commonly known as the Lal Sahab of Manjha, borrowed Rs. 3,40,000 from the estate of Kumar Sirish Chandra Sinha of Paikpara near Calcutta by mortgaging his estate. At that time the Paikpara estate was in the hands of a Receiver, Mr. Mitter. On the 6th November 1902 Kumar Sirish Chandra Sinha died leaving a Will, which had been executed by him on the 18th June 1902. By this Will his mother, Rani Devendra Balla Dassi and Kumar Satish Chandra Sinha were appointed executors. On the 24th July 1903 the executors applied for probate of the Will but the Receiver continued in possession. On the 7th April 1904 Mr. Mitter was discharged from the Receivership and one Mr. Halder was appointed. On the 13th September 1907 Mr. Halder sued on the mortgage. On the 26th May 1908 he obtained a preliminary decree. On 1st December 1908 he applied, under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, for an order absolute for sale of the mortgaged property. The order absolute was passed on the 2nd January 1909 and on the 27th January 1909 the first application for execution was filed. This was registered as Case No. 14 of 1909. On the 18th February 1909 a notice under Order XXI, rule 66, of the Code of Civil Procedure was served and received by the Am-Mukhtear of the judgment debtor. Subsequently on the 22nd February 1909 the decree-holder asked for time to make substitution in place of Lal Sahab, the judgment-debtor who had died. Time was allowed and on the 5th March 1909 the decree-holder applied to substitute Hira Sahab, the brother of Lal Sahab deceased. The order of substitution was made on the 13th March 1909 and on the same date a notice was ordered to be issued to Hira Sahab under Order XXI, rule 66. It was then discovered that Lal Sahab had left two Wills, one in favour of Pertap Sahi, minor son of Sheo Pertap Sahi, and another in favour of Keshwa Sevendra Sahi, minor son of Hira Sahab, and that probate of both Wills had been applied for. The decree-holder, therefore, asked for substitution of both these minors and their fathers. Substitution was made but no guardian was appointed for the minors, and again notices under Order XXI, rule 22, were ordered to issue. These notices were served and subsequently notices were issued under Order XXI, rule 66. Hira Sahab and his son did not appear. On the 6th August 1909 the Receiver of the judgment-debtor's estate made a payment of Rs. 6,039 to the decree-holder and on 21st August 1909 Sheo Pertap Sahi objected to the valuation. A miscellaneous case was started and the proceedings in the execution case were stayed until the hearing of this objection. On the 9th October 1909 the objection petition was dismissed and the execution case was also disposed of, another petition being ordered to be filed. The matter of the Will was amicably settled and probate was ordered by the District Judge to be granted to Hira Sahab as guardian of the minor appellant on 28th September 1909, but it was never taken out.

On the 15th November 1909 a second application for execution was made by the Receiver of the decree-holder's estate. The application was made against Hira Sahab for himself and as guardian of his minor son, but no guardian was actually appointed by the Court. On the 20th November 1909 there was an order for issue of notices under Order XXI, rule 66, and on the 1st December 1909 an application was made by the decree-holder that Rs. 2,000 had been paid by the Receiver of the judgment-debtor's estate. The sale proclamation was then issued and the 7th February 1910 was fixed for the sale. Meanwhile Mr. Halder died and an application was made on behalf of the decree-holder for time to make substitution. Hira Sahab objected to time being granted, and eventually the following order was passed by the Court:—"The present case should be disposed of, leaving it to the legal representative to make another application for execution."

By this time another Receiver Mr. Mozumdar had been appointed and on the 18th March 1910 he made another, the third, application for execution against Hira Sahab for self and as guardian of the minor, which was registered as Case No. 44 of 1910. Again no guardian was appointed. The usual notices were served and the 2nd May 1910 was fixed as the date for the sale. Before the date fixed for the sale the decree-holder asked for permission to bid. This was granted, but at the same time Hira Sahab who had appeared on his own behalf filed a petition of objection to the execution proceedings on the ground that there was a mistake in the list of properties. The decree-holder asked to be allowed to amend the execution petition, but this was refused and on the 28th May 1910 the execution application was dismissed, the decree-holder being directed to make a fresh application.

On the 6th August 1910 Mr. Mozumdar made the fourth application for execution, which was registered as Case No. 107 of 1910. Again no application was made for the appointment of a guardian and no guardian was appointed by the Court. The 17th November 1910 was fixed for the sale, but on that date Hira Sahab filed an objection under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the execution case was adjourned sine die. The decree-holder then made an application, stating that the Receiver of Lal Sahab's estate had paid in Rs. 5,000 on the 22nd November 1910 on account of the decree, and on the 7th

KESHAVESARINDRA SAHI v. DEBENDRA BALA DASSI.

January 1910 the execution case was disposed of. The miscellaneous case was taken up and disposed of on 29th May 1911.

On the 14th June 1911 Mr. Mozumdar made the fifth application for execution, which was registered as No. 118 of 1911 and a date was fixed for the return of the notices under Order XXI, rule 66, but on that date the minor filed an objection under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure through Hira Sahab, his father, and his guardian objected to himself (Hira Sahab) being made a party. This application was allowed and on the same date the execution case was dismissed. An appeal was filed to the High Court against the order dismissing the execution case and it was ordered to be revived and proceeded with. The record was received back in the lower Court on the 16th January 1912 and the 9th March 1912 was fixed for hearing the objection. The objection was disallowed and the 3rd June 1912 was fixed for the sale. Subsequently the decree-holder certified payment of Rs. 4,435. The execution case was then taken up and the sale took place on the 11th June 1912, the properties being purchased by the Maharaja of Hathwa. There was an application to set aside the sale, which was rejected. An appeal was preferred to the High Court and the order of rejection was set aside. The case was then re-heard by the Subordinate Judge, who set aside the sale on the 31st May 1916.

On the 11th July 1916 the 6th application for execution was presented. This application was presented by Rani Devendra Balla Dassi, who is the executrix of the estate of Kumar Sirish Chandra Sinha. She stated that the persons against whom the decree was sought to be executed were "Babu Keshavendra Sahi, minor son of Babu Hari Harendra Sahi alias Hira Sahab deceased, as the sole legatee under the Will of the original mortgagor judgment-debtor, Babu Shaym Sevendra Sahi alias Lal Sahab deceased (of which Will probate was ordered to issue to the said Hira Sahab but not actually issued or taken out) and also as one of the heirs of his father, the said Babu Harendra Sahi alias Hira Sahab deceased, through his said minor's mother and guardian Musammat Dulhin Birja Koer, who was appointed guardian by order of the High Court in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 311 of 1913." There are also two others against whom the application is directed, namely, the sons of Hira Sahab. An objection to this execution was made on behalf of Keshavendra Sahi under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in which the points urged before the Subordinate Judge were—

"(1) That there is no final mortgage decree and the decree stated in column 3 cannot be legally put into execution.

"(2) That the execution petition is not according to law.

"(3) That Rani Devendra Bala Dassi is not competent to file the application for execution, as she has not disclosed the right by which she makes the application and she has not taken any step to get herself substituted in place of the previous decree-holder.

"(4) That the present execution is barred by limitation as against the petitioner, he not having been made a party in the previous execution so that he is not bound by anything done or any order passed in those cases.

"(5) That Babu Chander Sekhar Prasad Singh, the Receiver of the mortgaged property, not being made a party to the execution case, cannot proceed.

"(6) That the decree-holder is not entitled to get the costs of the previous execution cases."

The learned Subordinate Judge by his judgment of the 9th December 1916 has overruled all the objections and directed the execution to proceed. The minor judgment-debtor has appealed to this Court.

The first point taken in appeal is that the execution proceedings are illegal, inasmuch as there is no final decree for the sale of the mortgaged properties as required by Order XXXIV, rule 5, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and hence there is no decree to be executed. The mortgage-decree was passed on the 25th of May 1908 under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) directing the amount due on the mortgage bond with costs and interest to be paid within six months and "on default the mortgaged properties to be sold for the realisation of the sum,"

KESHAVESARINDRA SAHI v. DEBENDRA BALA DASSI.

The sum specified in the decree was not paid within the time fixed for payment and on the 1st December 1908 the decree-holder filed an application, praying that under the provisions of section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act an order absolute for the sale of the mortgaged properties might be made. On the same date the Court directed notice to issue on the judgment-debtor to show cause why the decree nisi should not be made absolute and fixed the 2nd January 1909 for disposal. This notice was served upon the judgment-debtor and on the 10th December 1908 the Court accepted the service as sufficient.

On the 2nd January 1909 the following order was passed on the order sheet in Mortgage Suit No. 235 of 1907: "Defendant is absent though served with a notice, which seems to have been received by his Mookhtear. The decree nisi will now be made absolute with costs." (P. 195.) The Court at the same date made the following endorsement in its own hand on the certified copy of the decree filed by the judgment-debtor. "Decree nisi made absolute, vide order dated 2nd January 1909, with costs, Rs. 2-8-9." This order was copied by a clerk of the Subordinate Judge's office on the original decree and signed by him: this copy does not bear the signature of the Court.

Mr. Hasan Imam on behalf of the judgment-debtor contends that as the present Code of Civil Procedure had come into force on the 1st January 1909 and as amongst other sections of the Transfer of Property Act, sections 88 and 89 were repealed (Schedule V of the Code of Civil Procedure) and in lieu of them Order XXXIV, rules 3 to 5, of the Civil Procedure Code were substituted, a decree absolute as required by Order XXXIV, rule 5, should have been prepared, and that without such a decree the property could not be sold. He urges that the amendment prescribed a new rule of procedure, and that, therefore, the Court had no jurisdiction to make an order under section 89 which had been repealed by the Code of Civil Procedure. Clause 2 of rule 5 requires that when the payment mentioned in a preliminary mortgage-decree under rule 4 is not made, the Court shall, on application made in that behalf by the plaintiff, pass a decree that the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof be sold and that the proceeds of the sale be dealt with as mentioned in rule 4 of the same order. This rule of the Code of Civil Procedure then made this change, that while under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act the Court was only required to pass an order absolute for sale of the mortgaged property, rule 5 requires the Court to make a "decree" for sale of the mortgaged property. This amendment was due to a conflict of decisions in the different High Courts as to whether the right of the decree holder to execute the decree accrued after the passing of the preliminary decree under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, or after an order absolute under section 89 of the Act and also as to whether the period of three years' limitation for the execution of the decree should run from the date of the preliminary decree or from the date of the order absolute. In support of his contention that a final decree is necessary in this case, Mr. Hasan Imam has relied on the case of Mahant Krishna Dayal v. Sakina Bibi (1). In that case the decree absolute under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act was made long before the new Code of Civil Procedure came into force, the application for execution of the decree was made 12 years after the date of the decree, and it was held that the case was governed by the new Code of Civil Procedure, under section 48 of which the execution was barred. This case has no application to the present case.

It has not yet been definitely settled whether in cases in which the preliminary decree has been passed under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, an application made for a decree absolute is governed by the Civil Procedure Code or not. In the case of Madhab Moni Dasi v. Pamela Lambert (2) Mukherji, J., was of opinion that no final decree need be prepared under the new Code of Civil Procedure in order to enforce the preliminary decree passed under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act. KESHAWESARINDRA SAHI v. DEBENDRA BALA DASSI.

v. Sharat Chandra (3) Sir Lawrence Jenkins considered this case but thought that the point did not directly arise, and as there was no necessity to decide the point in the case before him the question was left open. It is also unnecessary for us in this case to consider the point, because the proceeding to make the decree absolute was pending at the time when the Code of Civil Procedure came into force, and the contention of Sir Rashbehari Ghose on behalf of the decree-holder respondent is that this being so and a notice of the application for an order under section 89 having been served on the original mortgagor, the repeal of section 89 does not affect the proceedings pending under that section. This contention is based on section 6 of the General Clauses Act and it appears to us that it must prevail.

In the case of Mungul Pershad Dicit v. Griya Kant Lahiri (4) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that an application for execution of a decree is an application in the suit in which the decree has been obtained, and that nothing contained in section 2 or in part 2 of Act IX of 1871 shall apply to suits instituted before the 1st April 1873, and hence nothing contained in Schedule II of that Act extended to an application for execution of a decree in a suit instituted before that date. In Umesh Chunder Das v. Chunchun Ogha (5) it was held that the mortgage was executed before the Transfer of Property Act came into force and when Regulation XVII of 1806 was in force and notice for foreclosure had been served in a proceeding under that Regulation, the proceeding already commenced was saved by section 6 of the General Clauses Consolidation Act I of 1858 and the new procedure would not apply. Mitter, J., further held that the mortgagee had obtained not only an inchoate right, that is, a mere chance which might be developed into a substantive right, but had acquired a vested right as a mortgagee, and, therefore, the new Transfer of Property Act would not destroy that right. This was also the view taken in the case of Baij Nath Pershad Narain Singh v. Moheswari Pershad Narain Singh (6) and in Mohabir Pershad Narain Singh v. Gungadhur Pershad Narain Singh (7) and also in the case of Madhab Moni Dasi v. Pamela Lambert (2), where an application for an order absolute under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act was made on the 9th September 1908 and was pending at the time when the new Code of Civil Procedure came into force.

In the present case the application to make the decree absolute was made before the new Civil Procedure Code came into force, and the right of the decree-holder to sell had already accrued by the default of the judgment debtor to pay the decretal amount within the time fixed in the preliminary decree of the 26th May 1905. The right to apply for the sale of the property had become vested in the decree-holder and notice of the application had been served. The order absolute was an order made in continuation of the mortgage suit which had been instituted before the Civil Procedure Code came into force and of the preliminary decree which had been made prior to the passing of that Act. The proceeding for order absolute was, therefore, a pending proceeding and was governed by the Transfer of Property Act. This being so, the decree which was to be executed was the preliminary decree of the 26th May 1908, which the order of the Court dated the 2nd January 1909 made absolute and the proceedings being under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, no final decree was necessary.

The learned Subordinate Judge, in his judgment on the application made to set aside the sale, has said that the order absolute passed in this case was in accordance with the usual practice in cases under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act. There is no reason to doubt that this is so, and in fact it would appear that in cases under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act even an order absolute is unnecessary and it is sufficient that there is an order for sale passed on an application of the decree-holder. This was the view in the cases quoted as

KRISHNABHARINDRA SAHI v. DEBENDRA BALA DASSI.

Phul Chand Ram v. Nursingh Pershad Misser (8), Gunindra Prosad v. Bainath Singh (9), Venkataram v. Ohinna Ramayya (10) and Appa Rao v. Krishna Ayyangar (11).

Apart from this, however, it appears to us that it is not now open to the appellant to object to the decree which is sought to be executed. The order absolute for the sale of the properties was made during the lifetime of the original judgment-debtor, Lal Sahab, and with notice to him. No objection was taken by him and the appellant, as his legal representative, cannot, therefore, question the validity of the order made.

Further, the present application is the sixth application which has been made in these execution proceedings and in each of them notices have been served on Hira Sahab for himself and as guardian of the present appellant, and no objections have been taken either to the form of the decree or that a final decree was not prepared. Even in the petition of the minor through his mother as guardian, dated the 10th July 1912, the decree was not attacked. Before the Subordinate Judge, however, the matter was pressed and was decided against the appellant by his separate judgment of the 25th January 1916. No appeal was preferred against this order of the Subordinate Judge to the High Court. In the case of Mungul Pershad Ditchit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (4), which has been followed in a very long series of cases by all Courts in India, their Lordships of the Privy Council in a judgment which was delivered by Sir Barnes Peacock held that although the execution of a decree may have been actually barred by time, yet, if an order for such execution has been regularly made by a competent Court, having jurisdiction to try whether it was barred by time or not, such order, although erroneous, must, if unreversed, be treated as valid. This principle has also been recognised by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Malkarjun v. Narhari (12), where a sale had taken place after the notice having been wrongly served upon a person who was not the legal representative of the judgment-debtor, it was held that the sale was not a nullity and cannot be treated as invalid as the Court had power to decide wrongly as well as rightly. In the case of Kamjas v. Sheo Prasad (13) the notice of an application under section 89 was issued upon the mother as guardian of the minor judgment-debtor on the 21st November 1912, but was returned unserved as the mother was dead. It was held that so long as the order absolute subsists, it is enforceable and its operation cannot be impugned. If by any reason the order was defective, the remedy of the appellant was to get it set aside in accordance with law, but until it is set aside its validity cannot be questioned in execution proceedings. In the case of Moti-Ram v. Banke Lal (14) it was held that it was not open to the plaintiff to question the validity of a final decree made under Order XXXIV, rule 5, on the ground that that decree did not agree with the preliminary decree passed under rule 4 of that Order, when that objection was not taken by him when the final decree was passed. In the case of Gunindra Prosad v. Bainath Singh (9) it was held that a mortgagee is precluded from raising the objection that the sale of the mortgaged property in execution of the decree in the mortgage suit is invalid, by reason of the decree nisi in that suit not having been made absolute if such objection is not raised at an earlier stage of the proceedings. The reason for these decisions is that litigants should be compelled to make all objections that they may have to make at the earliest opportunity; they should not be allowed to make objections piecemeal and thus interminably prolong litigation. In the present case applications for execution were admitted and no objection was taken regarding the decree and orders having been regularly made on these applications by a competent Court—it is not now, in our opinion, open to the judgment-debtor to contend that there is in fact no decree which can be executed.

KESHAWESARINDRA SAHI v. DEVENDRA BALA DASSI.

The next point which has been urged is that Rani Devendra Bala Dassi is not competent to file the application for execution. The first contention in regard to this is that by the Will of Sirish Chandra Sinha the Rani has no interest in the property, because his eldest son is the only surviving son and that the property went to him under the Will on his attaining the age of 18. This interpretation of the Will does not appeal to us, and there is not sufficient evidence to enable us to decide the question of the eldest son's age. It is also not at all certain that the youngest son is dead. Neither of these points was raised in the lower Court, nor were they enquired into, and it is unnecessary to go into them here, because the Rani was appointed executrix by the order of the High Court along with Suresh Chandra Sinha on the 24th July 1903. Suresh died on the 30th January 1908, and she became the sole executrix of the Will and the whole of the property vested in her. The High Court by its order of the 20th November 1912 discharged the Receiver of the estate and made it over to the Rani Devendra Bala Dassi as the sole executrix. On the 6th January 1913 she made an application to be substituted in place of Mr. P. K. Mozumdar as executrix of the estate and the Court accordingly ordered the substitution to be made. Under section 112 of the Probate and Administration Act a legatee cannot take until the executor has assented to the payment of the legacy. This the Rani has never done, so that not only was she competent to make this application but at the time it was made being executrix she was the only person who was entitled to execute the decree.

The next point which has been taken by Mr. Hasan Imam is in regard to limitation, and his first contention is that as it was not until August 1916 that Dulhin Birja Koer, the minor judgment-debtor's mother, was appointed guardian, that is, after the sixth execution application had been made, the minor was not represented until then and this being so, the application has been made more than three years from the date of the decree and is barred by limitation. The facts in regard to this matter are shortly as follows:—

During the pendency of the first execution proceeding the decree-holder discovered that Lal Saheb had died and that he had executed two Wills, one in favour of Sheo Pertap Sahi and the other in favour of the present appellant, Keshwarendra Sahi. On learning this he applied for substitution of the names of both the minors and their fathers for themselves and as guardian of their minor sons, stating that the present appellant was a minor and was under the guardianship of his father and lived with him. The Court ordered substitution to be made as prayed and notice under Order XXI, rule 22, to issue. The notice was as a matter of fact served, as was held by the Court in its order of the 17th April 1909. This execution application was disposed of and subsequently, when the dispute regarding the Wills had been settled in favour of Keshwarendra Sahi, the decree-holder made a second application for execution against Hira Saheb or himself and as guardian of his minor son, the present appellant. This course the decree-holder followed in all subsequent applications for execution including the fifth. In none of these cases, however, was there any order of the Court appointing Hira Saheb as guardian ad litem. The question for consideration is whether under these circumstances the minor was legally represented by Hira Saheb in the execution proceedings. There is no contention that Hira Saheb did not act as guardian of the minor throughout all these execution proceedings. It was held, however, by the Calcutta High Court in its order at pages 4, 5 and 6 of the paper-book that in the 5th execution proceeding he had filed the petitions dated the 4th and 11th June 1912, in which he applied only on behalf of himself without making the minor a party and that in these applications he acted against the interest of the minor. The facts regarding these petitions have been very fully discussed in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge dated the 15th January 1916/31st May 1916, in which he directed that the sale to the Maharaja of Huthwa should be set aside. The sale in that case was fixed for the 3rd June 1912. This date was a holiday, so the matter came up on the following day.

KESHAWESARINDRA SAHI V. DEBENDRA BALA DASSI.

On that date Hira Saheb applied to the Court on his own behalf, without making the minor a party, asking for time in order to enable the Maharani of Huthwa to get permission from the Calcutta High Court to purchase the property at the execution sale. This permission was obtained and on the 11th June 1912, which was the date of the adjournment of the sale, the sale actually took place. On that Hira Saheb again, without joining the minor, made a petition to the Court asking that the property which had been advertised in 48 lots should be sold in one lot. This was done and the property was purchased by the Maharajah of Huthwa. On the 10th July 1912 an application was made on behalf of the minor by his mother to have the sale set aside. In this application she stated that the minor was properly described to be under the guardianship of his father and she admitted that the father acted as guardian throughout. Her only charge against Hira Saheb was that he was not protecting the interest of the minor by applying for setting aside the sale. The reason suggested in her application was that the eldest son of Hira Saheb was married to the daughter of the Maharani of Hathwa, the auction-purchaser, but the marriage is said to have taken place in May 1910, long after several executions of the decree. This application by the minor's mother was refused, but on appeal to the High Court the order was set aside and the matter was referred to the Subordinate Judge for re-hearing. For reasons given in his judgment, the learned Subordinate Judge found that there had been irregularity in the matter of sale which had caused great loss to the minor, and, as has already been said, he set aside the sale. In his judgment he found that Hira Saheb acted against the interest of the minor in making the petitions of the 4th and 11th June 1912.

We are not satisfied that the learned Subordinate Judge has taken a correct view of this case and Hira Saheb's conduct is capable of an entirely different construction. A very simple explanation of Hira Saheb making the applications on the 4th and 11th June 1912 in his own name and not on behalf of the minor is that he did not wish to bind the minor. After the sale when Hira Saheb found that the property was purchased by the Huthwa Raj at 13 times the net income, which was a breach of the arrangement that the purchase should have been 25 times the net income, Hira Saheb negotiated with the Huthwa Raj to give up the purchase and with the decree-holder to take a usufructuary mortgage of the entire property by advancing Rs. 44,000 over and above the amount of the decree. The Maharani of Huthwa, by a petition to the Court, agreed to give up her purchase. From this it would appear that Hira Saheb was really not acting against the interests of the minor. It is also significant that during the hearing of the application for setting aside the sale the allegation of fraud against Hira Saheb was admitted to be not proved, and the learned Subordinate Judge accepted this. We ourselves are of opinion that all that can be urged against Hira Saheb in regard to the sale matter is that he committed an error of judgment in making the applications of the 4th and 11th June 1912.

Even, however, if we accept that in regard to the sale Hira Saheb acted contrary to the interest of the minor, it has nowhere been suggested that before the 4th June 1912 he acted contrary to his interest, nor can it be suggested that he had any interest adverse to him. He applied for and obtained an order for probate of the Will of Lal Saheb for the minor. It is true that he did not actually take out the probate, probably because he did not wish to pay the fees which were heavy. By getting the grant of probate he renounced whatever interest he may have had as brother of Lal Saheb in the property, and throughout the execution proceedings he, as has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge, "fought tooth and nail to thwart the decree-holder." There can be no doubt on this point. Hira Saheb from time to time made various objections to the execution of the decree, all in the interest of the minor. In the 5th application he filed a petition on behalf of the minor dated the 8th July 1911, expressly stating that he had no interest in the estate of Lal Saheb, that the entire estate belonged to his minor son, and that he himself ought not to be made a party to the execution proceedings. The Court allowed the petition and on appeal being made to the High Court by the decree holder Hira Saheb appeared on behalf of the minor and contested that appeal. Taking the worst view of the case, therefore, up to the 4th June 1912 Hira Saheb not only had no adverse interest to the minor but he was doing everything in his power to assist the minor in resisting the claims of the decree-holder. Moreover, Hira Saheb was the obvious guardian of the minor, being not only his father but his executor by implication under the Will. It is true that Hira Saheb was never appointed guardian ad litem by the Court and that under the Code of Civil Procedure the Court is bound to appoint a proper person to act on behalf of a minor, but it has been held in a large number of cases that, although no formal appointment has been made, where the Court by its action has given its sanction to the appearance of a person as a guardian, the absence of a formal order of appointment is not necessarily fatal to the proceedings. This was the view taken in the following cases, Midnapore Zemindari Company v. Gobinda Mahto (15), Krishna Pershad Singh v. Gosta Behari Kundu (16), and by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the cases of Hari Saran Moitra v. Bhubaneswari Debi (17) and Wakian v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (18). In this last case in which the law has been very fully discussed, their Lordships of the Privy Council set aside a decree of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court reported as Suresh Chander Wum Chowdhury v. Jagat Chunder Deb Chowdhurani (19). Mr. Hasan Imam for the respondent has in his argument referred to the judgment of the Calcutta High Court at pages 4, 5, and 6 of the paper-book, by which the matter of setting aside the sale of the 11th April 1916 was remanded to the learned Subordinate Judge for further hearing. In that judgment the learned Judges said that the minor was not represented in the petition of the 4th and 11th of June 1912, and they made some further remarks which might suggest that they held that the minor had not been represented in the execution proceedings at all. This cannot be so, however, because if they had intended to hold that the minor was not represented in the execution proceedings at all, the sale would have been void so far as the minor was concerned and they would not have remanded the case for re-hearing. It is, therefore, clear that there is no finding of the learned Judges in that case that the minor was not represented in the execution proceedings. All that they intended to hold was that he was not represented in the applications of the 4th and 11th June 1912. Further, Mr. Hasan Imam has relied in support of his proposition that the minor was not represented on the cases reported as Rashid-un-nisa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (20), Hanuman Prasad v. Muhammad Ishaq (21), Partab Singh v. Bhabuti Singh (22), Singaravelu Pillai v. Murugesu Pillai (23) and Purna Ohandra Kumar v. Bejoy Chand (24). In the case reported as Rashid-un-Nisa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (20), above referred to, a married woman was acting as guardian without the appointment of the Court. As a married woman was at that time incompetent to represent a minor, the case has no bearing on the present case. In the cases of Hanuman Prasad v. Muhammad Ishaq (21), Partab Singh v. Bhabuti Singh (22) and Singaravelu Pillai v. Murugesu Pillai (23), above referred to, the guardian who acted had an adverse interest to the minor and acted adversely to the interest of the minor. In the case of Purna Ohandra Kumar v. Bejoy Chand (24) their Lordships held that the minor plaintiff, who was not properly represented in the suit, would be bound by the decree if he had any interest in the Patni during the period for which the rent decree was obtained and in order to ascertain that, their Lordships remanded the case to the Court below. These cases are clearly distinguishable from this case and from the case reported as Walian v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (18), in which the principles which must govern the present case are laid down. The minor was, therefore, properly represented by his father certainly up till the date of the application made on the 4th June 1912 and in our opinion throughout the proceedings, and the omission of a formal order to appoint him as such under Order XXXII of the Code of Civil Procedure will not vitiate these execution proceedings by which the minor is, therefore, bound, particularly as it is not disputed that the minor appellant, as the representative of the mortgagor, is liable for the mortgage-decree.

Apart from this, however, on the 8th February 1915 during the pendency of the 5th execution case the High Court directed that the mother should be appointed guardian of the minor and she was allowed to prosecute the application to set aside the sale on his behalf. Subsequently a formal application was made to the Court and she was formally appointed guardian in August 1916 in the present execution. If then there was any defect in the representation of the minor, it was made good as soon as his mother was appointed guardian, and this appointment must be held to relate back to the date of the 5th application for execution made in June 1912. That application itself was within three years of the date of the decree. The minor was, therefore, properly represented and the execution was taken out within time. This was the view taken in Khem Karan v. Hardayal (25), Rup Chand v. Dasodha (26), Peary Mohan v. Narendra Nath (27), Jivat Dube v. Kali Oharan Ram (28) and Ohhayunnessa Bibi v. Kazi Basirar Rahman (29). There are numerous other cases on this point to which it is unnecessary to refer.

The next point urged is that the applications for execution are not made in accordance with law and that the last application is not made in continuation of the previous applications. In support of the contention that the applications are not in accordance with law, Mr. Hasan Imam points to certain defects in drawing up the various applications for execution. The defects to which he refers are (1) that the correct date of the decree has not been entered; (2) that all payments which were made under the decree have not been mentioned in the applications; (3) that the properties mentioned in the different applications are not the same; and (4) that the parties are not the same. We are of opinion that there are no material defects in any of the execution applications and we are prepared to agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the proceedings were all one continuous proceeding, but it is unnecessary to go into this question in detail because the 5th application for execution made on the 14th June 1911 was made within three years of the date of the decree, so that if there are no material defects in the 5th application or the last application and this last application is made in continuation of the 5th application, it is not barred by limitation. It is, therefore, only necessary to deal specifically with defects in so far as they relate to the 5th application for execution and the present application.

The first defect referred to is in regard to the date of the decree. The 5th application gives the date of the decree as the 26th May 1908, that is to say, the date of the preliminary decree. The argument that this date is incorrect has no force because, as we have already held, what was to be executed was the preliminary decree and there was no necessity for any final decree. Apart from this, however, even if there were a mistake in the date of the decree, it cannot be considered to be a material defect because there could be no doubt in the mind of the judgment debtor as to the intention of the decree-holder or as to what decree it was intended to execute. That a mistake in the date of the decree is not a material defect was held in Jivat Dube v. Kali Oharan Ram (28).

The next defect pointed out is in regard to non-entry of payments. The payments which had been made towards the decree are not entered at all in the 5th application, but the entry in column 7 is as follows :—

KESEAWESARINDRA SAHI v. DEBENDRA BALA DASSI.

"Rs. 4,65,535-5-9 besides interest which may be found due up to the date of sale according to the calculation of the office at the rate of six per cent. per annum."

The various payments were all noted in the registers and, as the learned Subordinate Judge has held, in preparing the account the office would certainly consider them in making the calculation and processes would issue for the amount arrived at on such calculation. The fact, therefore, that these payments were not mentioned in the application for execution was not a material point and could not possibly prejudicially affect any one. We, therefore, agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the non-entry of previous payments was not a material irregularity which would be fatal to the application.

The third defect urged is that some of the properties mentioned in the former execution application are not identical with those in the present application. In the body of each of the execution petitions the decree-holder has expressly stated that the properties to be proceeded against are the mortgaged properties, and the schedules refer to these mortgaged properties. It is true that there are some apparent differences in the description of the properties as mentioned in the 5th application and the present application, but they are not material differences. Some of the villages mortgaged are not traceable and in respect of one of the properties the judgment-debtor had only a limited interest which on his death reverted to the Bettiah Raj. In respect of these properties the decree-holder has made an application, dated the 22nd July 1917, that she does not want to proceed against them. As regards one property Godna Masehri, it is described as Masehri only. This is a trivial mistake. The Court below has overruled the objection in regard to the slight difference in the description of properties, on the ground that the mortgaged properties consist of 150 villages scattered over a large part of the District which bear many Touzi Numbers and the trivial mistakes referred to above have been rectified in the last application. The Subordinate Judge has held that the property as a whole sought to be sold is not different from the property mentioned in the previous applications. With this view we agree. Further, we may add that no objection on the ground of difference of properties was taken in the petition of the 2nd September 1916, either generally or specifically. The objection was taken for the first time on the 21st December 1916 and on the authority of Mungul Pershad Ditchi v. Grija Kant Lahiri (4), to which we have already referred, we are of opinion that the appellant was precluded from taking this objection. The case of Bihari Lal Misr v. Jagarnath Prasad (30) also supports this view.

The last defect urged is that the names of the parties are not the same. The difference is that in the 5th execution, Hira Sahab being dead, his two sons, in addition to the minor appellant have been made parties. The minor appellant has been described as a legatee and as heir of Hira Sahab. The other two sons are described as his heirs. It has already been pointed out that probate of the Will of Lal Sahab has not yet been taken out. The decree-holder, therefore, made Hira Sahab as well as his minor son who was mentioned as a legatee in the Will parties to the execution proceedings and when Hira Sahab died, his sons were substituted in his place. It appears to us that this course adopted by the decree-holder was justified. He did not know who the heirs were and in order to make himself secure he brought all the sons of Hira Sahab on to the record. We are supported in this view by the case of Akikunnissa Bibee v. Roop Lal Das (31).

Lastly, it has been contended that the relief sought in the present application is different from the reliefs sought in the previous applications. There is no force in this contention. The decree-holder has throughout prayed for the sale of the mortgaged properties as required by Order XXI, rule 11 J—(ii). It was held in the case of Bihari Lal Misr v. Jagarnath Prasad (30) that the decree-holder was entitled to treat the application in continuation of a former one, even when he wanted to proceed to sell different properties. Mr. Hasan Imam has relied upon the case of Virasami v. Athi (32), where the relief sought in the first application was for sale and in the subsequent application for the arrest of the judgment-debtor. The reliefs, therefore, were obviously different under Order XXI, rule 11J, sub-clauses (ii) and (iii), and this case has no application to the present case. None of the defects, then, pointed out to us either singly or taken as a whole are material defects, and without material defects the execution proceedings could not be vitiated. It is hardly necessary to refer to authorities on this point, but a reference may be made to the Full Bench case of Gopal Chander Manna v. Gasain Das Kalay (33), Ramayyan v. Kadir Bacha Sahib (34), Mathura Prosad v. Anurago Koer (35) and Kalka Dube v. Bisheshar Patak (36).

The applications for execution then are not vitiated by any material defect, they must, therefore, be held to have been made in accordance with law. The 6th application is, in our opinion, an application made in continuation of the 5th, and unless the execution applications previous to the 5th application were properly determined and legally disposed of, the present application for execution will also be in continuation of those former applications. A reference to the orders disposing of the several applications will show that none of these applications were disposed of in accordance with law. The decree-holder was not guilty of any fault or laches in the prosecution of the executions. She is, therefore, entitled to treat the present application in continuation of the former ones in spite of the order of the Court dismissing them. That the last application is in continuation of the 5th application is in accordance with the decision of Ohamier, C. J., in a similar case, Kaniz Zohra v. Syam Kisen (37). In that case it was contended that the application was neither in form nor in fact an application made in continuation of the 2nd application and that it could not be held that the application was one made in continuation of the previous application, because that had in fact been dismissed. The learned Chief

"It seems certain that the Legislature could not have intended that further execution of a decree should be prevented by the fact that execution proceedings remained pending in the Courts for many years. In the present case as the 3rd application was one asking the Court to sell the identical property which had been sold before, I think that we should hold that the application was one made in continuation of the previous application."

That case, in so far as this point is concerned, is indistinguishable from the present case and the view taken appears to us to represent the true intention of the Legislature. The same view was also taken in Rameshwar Singh v. Rateshwar Singh (38), Qamar-ud-din Ahmad v. Jawahir Lal (39). Mr. Hasan Imam has relied on the ruling reported as Mahant Krishna Dayal v. Sakina Bibi (1). In that case a decree was obtained in 1896 and was several times put in execution by the decree-holders. Several applications for execution were made, the last but one being made on the 6th of September 1912. It was dismissed for want of prosecution on the 5th of December 1912 and the last application, which was the one being dealt with, was made on the 18th of July 1913. It was held that the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 did not give a fresh starting point for limitation, and that the execution application was barred as being made more than 12 years from the date of the decree sought to be executed. It was further held that the application was not one made in continuation of the previous application, because the relief asked for was different from the relief claimed in the previous application and was directed against property which was not touched by the former application. It is also to be noted that the application of the 6th September 1912 was dismissed for want of prosecution and hence the subsequent application could not be in continuation of it; Dhukiram Srimani v. Jogendra Ohandra Sen (40). The aforesaid case in the Patna Law Journal has obviously no bearing on the present case. In the present case the last application is clearly an application made in continuation of the 5th application, it is by the same parties for the sale of the same properties, and apart from the fact that it is also in continuation of the earlier applications for execution, both this and the 5th application having been made in accordance with law, the 6th application is not barred by limitation. Even, however, if the 6th application were not in continuation of the 5th application it would not, in our opinion, be barred by limitation. The sale held in the course of the 5th application was set aside on the 30th May 1916 and the present application was made on the 11th July 1916. The right to execute the decree against the minor accrued to the decree-holder after the sale was set aside and the limitation would be three years from the date of the order setting aside the sale under Article 181 of the Limitation Act, as held in the case of Raghunath Sahay Singh v. Lalji Singh (41). It would, therefore, not matter whether the previous execution was defective or not, or whether the present application is in continuation of the 5th execution application or is a fresh application. In either case it would not be barred by limitation. In the case of Abdul Khayar v. Reazuddin (42) it was held that even when the sale was set aside in consequence of the decree-holder's fraud and where the fraud was practised by the decree-holder after his first application for execution, the time would run from the date of the setting aside of the sale. The present case is stronger, inasmuch as the sale was set aside not on account of any fraud committed by the decree-holder but on account of the fraud of one of the judgment-debtors in collusion with the auction-purchaser. The Court on the 31st May 1916 set aside the sale and on that very day it dismissed the execution case.

It is hardly necessary to notice another argument which has been placed before us in the case, that probate of the Will of Lal Sahab not having been taken out, the minor was not the legal representative of Lal Sahab under section 187 of the Indian Succession Act and Hira Sahab fully represented the estate throughout the execution proceedings. In this view of the case also the whole of the execution proceeding has been regular and the decree-holder can proceed against the present appellant after the death of Hira Sahab, which occurred less than three years before the date of the last application for execution.

In the result we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Where an instrument is ambiguous or contains a description which is imperfect or inaccurate as to existing facts, evidence is receivable of all the circumstances surrounding the instrument for the purpose of throwing light on its interpretation, for it is by these, as by a lamp, that the instrument has to be read. [p. 260, col. 1.]

Where the language of a document is not clear and applies partly to one set of existing facts and partly to another, the rights possessed by the vendor may be helpful in determining to which set of facts the description in the sale-deed was intended to apply. [p. 260, col. 1.]

The prohibition contained in section 7A of the Oudh Rent Act applies only to the sale of ex-proprietary rights or the relinquishment thereof for consideration. Where a person sells what he does not own, agreeing at the same time not to claim ex-proprietary rights therein, the vendee can claim compensation for the failure of the vendor to make good his proprietary title. Under section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act a vendor has a right to claim interest on the unpaid purchase-money, unless he has by his own conduct disentitled himself to it. [p. 261, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 30th June 1916.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and J. K. Banerji, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Watir Hasan, Messrs. A. Shaw and Mahmud Beg, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of a claim brought by the plaintiff, Mubarak Ali Shah, for the recovery of the unpaid portion of the purchase-money due to him with interest thereon under a sale effected by him in favour of Achambhit Lal, the father of the defendant, on the 3rd June 1905. The sale comprised a 5 annas 7 pies 4 kirants share in the village Lonawan Dargah, bearing Hadbast No. 668, with the hamlets and other lands appertaining thereto and included 20 bighas of sir and khudkasht lands, stated to have been held by the vendor. The sale was effected in lieu of Rs. 22,968, out of which Rs. 2,500 formed the consideration for the relinquishment by the vendor of his possession over the sir and khudkasht lands, or in other words, of such ex-proprietary or occupancy rights as he might acquire therein by virtue of the sale. With the exception of Rs. 11,885 left in deposit with the vendee for payment to the vendor at any time he might require it by instalments or otherwise before the end of August 1905, the rest of the consideration was received by the vendor. Out of the said sum of Rs. 11,885, Rs. 5,465-15-6 have since been admittedly received by the vendor. The dispute in these appeals relates only to the balance of Rs. 6,419-0-6 and the interest payable thereon.

It appears that after the execution of the said sale-deed two rival suits for pre-emption were filed, one by Musammāt Ruqaiya Bibi and the other by Musammāt Latif-un-nisa, both of whom were sisters of the vendor and also co-sharers in the village. They alleged that a portion of the consideration entered in the sale-deed was fictitious. The suit of Musammāt Ruqaiya Bibi ultimately failed, because it was originally filed in a wrong Court and when filed again in the proper Court it had become barred by time. Musammāt Latif-un-nisa succeeded in getting a decree for pre-emption subject to the payment of Rs. 6,419-0-6 to the vendor, Mubarak Ali Shah, and the balance of Rs. 16,548-15-6 to the vendee (Exhibit 7). This decree was passed on the 4th February 1910. On the 2nd March 1910 Musammāt Latif-un-nisa paid Rs. 6,419-0-6 to the vendor out of Court. The balance was deposited in Court for payment to the vendee. These payments were not, however, considered to be an adequate compliance with the decree and her claim for pre-emption consequently failed.

Musammāt Latif-un-nisa then got a decree against Mubarak Ali Shah for the refund of the money which she had paid to him with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum. She realized the same from Mubarak Ali Shah on the 2nd March 1910. In the present suit Mubarak Ali Shah seeks to recover Rs. 6,419-0-6, being the balance of the purchase money payable to him, with interest thereon by the enforcement of his lien over the property sold. The main defence was that the vendee did not get possession over a 5 annas 7-pies 4-kirants share of the land comprised in Chak Gudar Shah, which, according to the defendant, formed part of the property sold, and that the vendor also failed to deliver possession over 20 acres of the sir area in their entirety, which he had agreed to sell. It is contended that in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to place the vendee in possession of Chak Gudar Shah and the whole of the sir area, the vendee was entitled to compensation in respect of the same. It was further pleaded that Rs. 2,000 had been paid to the vendor, the receipt of which was acknowledged by him in the course of the suit for pre-emption filed by Musammāt Latif-un-nisa; but that plea is not now pressed.

The Court below found that the plaintiff had not agreed to sell any portion of the land comprised in Chak Gudar Shah. It held that the plaintiff sold to the father of the defendant only a 5 annas 7 pies 4 kirants share in the village Lonawan Dargah proper, on the representation that it, comprised, 20 acres of sir and khudkasht lands, and the defendant was entitled to Rs. 1,625 on account of compensation for the failure of the plaintiff to secure him in possession of the entire sir and khudkasht area agreed to be sold. It decreed the claim accordingly for Rs. 4,794-0-6 but allowed no interest on it. Both the parties appeal.

The first question for consideration is whether any portion of the land situated in Chak Gudar Shah was comprised in the sale. The sale-deed describes the property sold as a 5 annas 7 pies 4 kirants share in the village Lonawan Dargah, bearing Hadbast No. 668, together with all hamlets, lands, etc., appertaining to the same. It gives the boundaries of the village and further states that the sale shall include a 5 annas 7 pies 4 kirants share "without subtraction or reduction, in all purwas, hamlets and lands, etc., tanks, pukhta and kham wells, Dargah and mosque, etc., etc. along with income from presents, etc., together with village sites, dih, dabar, reeds, straw, fish, jalkar, bankar, tinni, pasahi, etc., etc., fruit bearing and non fruit bearing trees, and all sayer items, etc., zemin-dari rights, parjawat, chaukidar and patwari rates, houses of tenants, etc., etc., whatever there exists or may come to exist hereafter, and appertaining to the village Lonawan aforesaid, without exception to any right or thing." (Exhibit B 2.) It is admitted that the village Lonawan Dargah is divided into several Mahals, one of which is the Mahal in which the vendor owned a 5 annas 7 pies 6 kirants share. His father owned the entire 16 annas of that Mahal and though on his death in 1895 the name of the plaintiff alone was entered in the revenue papers in succession to him, the widows and the daughters of the deceased subsequently succeeded in obtaining their shares, leaving the plaintiff owner of only a 5 annas 7 pies 4 kirants share on the date of the above sale. His father also owned a 4-annas share in another Mahal, called Chak Gudar Shah, in respect of which a deed of trust was executed by him, dedicating the property for certain specific purposes. The former was ancestral property, the latter was obtained by him by purchase from Beni Madho. The revenue assessed on the former was Rs. 1,000 and that on the latter Rs. 125. There was no necessary connection between the main village of Lonawan Dargah and this Chak, except that they were surveyed together and given a single hadbast number in the settlement records. There were separate khewats prepared in respect of the main village and the Chak area (Exhibits 23 and 24). The share-holders of the main village were not necessarily co-sharers of the Chak; and the shares too, where the co-sharers were common, were not the same. In other words, the village proper and the Chak were separate entities both for the purposes of the settlement records and the payment of revenue, though they formed separate parts for survey purposes of the same hadbast number. The hamlets and land referred to in the sale-deed were the hamlets and land appertaining to the village proper, that is, within the Mahal and not outside it. The sale-deed makes no reference to the Mahal known as Chak Gudar Shah, in which the plaintiff holds no proprietary share. The mention of the hadbast number is only a part of the general description and is by itself insufficient to establish that the vendee acquired any rights to the Chak by virtue of the sale. Being an independent Mahal, the Chak is in no way appurtenant to the village proper and there is nothing to show that the rest of the description of the share sold or the boundaries given in the sale-deed cover it.

Section 92, proviso 6, of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), lays down that any fact may be proved which shows in what manner the language of a document is related to existing facts. In Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out that while the intention of the parties to a deed could be gathered only from a consideration of the documents themselves, such extrinsic evidence of circumstances could be admitted as might be required to show the relation of the written language to the existing facts. In Maung Kyin v. Ma Shwe La (2) the view taken was by no means different, for all that their Lordships of the Privy Council there say is that as against the parties to an instrument or their representatives, the reception of oral evidence should be confined to the ambit prescribed by section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. In other words, where an instrument is ambiguous or contains a description which is imperfect or inaccurate as to existing facts, evidence is receivable of all the circumstances surrounding the instrument for the purpose of throwing light on its interpretation, for it is by these, as by a lamp, that an instrument has to be read. The rights possessed by the vendor may not afford a test for determining the nature of the interest which he intended to convey; but where the language of a document is not clear and applies partly to one set of existing facts and partly to another, the rights possessed by the vendor may be helpful in determining to which set of facts the description in the sale-deed was intended to apply. If the haddast number be taken by itself, it might be wide enough to include the entire area which it represents: but the description of the share conveyed and the nature of the interest held, read with the fact that Chak Gudar Shah was a separate revenue entity not owned by the vendor and that the extent of the share held by the vendor therein as a trustee was not the same, leave no room for doubt that the Chak could not have been intended to be included in the sale.

The subsequent conduct of the parties is not inconsistent with the above construction. It is admitted that the vendee never got possession of even an inch of land in Chak Gudar Shah. Yet we find him admitting in the application for mutation of names, filed by him soon after his purchase, that he had received possession over the whole of the property sold. In the suit filed by Musammāt Latif-un-nisa for pre-emption, the vendee similarly admitted that he owed some money to Mubarak Ali Shah in respect of the sale in question and that Mubarak Ali Shah had not infringed any of the conditions of the sale-deed (Exhibit 6). It is, however, significant that in the written statement filed by the vendee and his son, the present defendant, in the previous suit instituted by the present plaintiff for the recovery of the unpaid portion of the purchase-money, there was no allegation that the land in Chak Gudar Shah was included in the sale, and no compensation was claimed for the failure of the vendor to deliver possession over it. We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in thinking that the plea that Chak Gudar Shah was included in the sale is an afterthought and that at the time of the execution of the sale-deed the parties did not contemplate that it was part of the same. The vendee, moreover, admitted in his previous deposition of the 21st July 1908 that before purchasing the property he had ascertained its income by looking into the certified copies and private papers of Mubarak Ali Shah, that he had also enquired from the people of the village and learnt that the land was worth Rs. 25 per bigha kham, the total area being 1,300 or 1,400 kacha bighas (Exhibit 6). The defendant similarly admits in his deposition in the present suit that he had an opportunity of seeing the khetāuni and other papers relating to the property sold before agreeing to the purchase. It is unlikely in the circumstances that the vendee or the defendant would have omitted to make an explicit mention of Chak Gudar Shah, otherwise known as Mahal Mazhar Husain, in the sale-deed or omitted to take possession of it, if it was included. In a suit filed by Musammāt Ruqaiya Bibi against Mubarak Ali Shah in 1901 for the recovery of possession of her share of the property left by her father, one of the matters in dispute was whether Chak Gudar Shah was wāqf property. The defendant appeared as a Pleader in that case for Musammāt Ruqaiya Bibi and argued that it was not wāqf (Exhibits 21 and 22). He could not, therefore, have been unaware of the existence of the Chak or of the nature of the rights which Mubarak Ali Shah held therein. His failure to take possession of Chak Gudar Shah for more than 11 years subsequent to the sale is inexplicable, except on the hypothesis that he treated the Chak as excluded from the sale.

ADITYA PRASAD v. MUHAMMAD MUBARAK ALI SHAH.

The next question for consideration is whether the plaintiff sold the entire 20 bighas of sir and khudkasht lands specified in the sale deed or only a proportionate share therein and whether the defendant is entitled to claim any compensation for the failure of the plaintiff to secure him in possession of more than a proportionate share. The terms of the sale-deed on this point are clear and specific. The sale purports to convey the entire 20 bighas, specifying the numbers borne by them; and the application for mutation filed by the plaintiff in pursuance thereof says the same (Exhibits B 3 and B-5). The plaintiff apparently treated them as belonging exclusively to him and as he was not able to secure possession of more than a 5 annas 7 pies 16 kirants share of the same, the defendant is entitled to claim compensation for the portion of which he was deprived. In the sale-deed the vendor is stated to have received from the vendee Rs. 2,500 on account of sir and khudkasht lands, the right to cultivate which the vendor agreed to relinquish. There is a further covenant that if the vendor fails to put the vendee in possession thereof he shall be liable to pay damages at the rate of Rs. 3 per bigha kham or that if he claimed any sir or khudkasht land and any right of his, occupancy or ex-proprietary, in respect thereof was declared, he shall pay to the vendee the price of the same at the rate of Rs. 35 per bigha kham. That covenant cannot, however, be specifically enforced; and all that the vendee can claim is a reasonable compensation for that, of which he has been deprived. The Court below has rightly allowed the defendant a proportionate amount out of Rs. 2,500 on account of the loss suffered by him.

It is contended on behalf of the vendor that the agreement to relinquish ex-proprietary rights for consideration was in contravention of section 7A of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), which was added by U. P. Act XII of 1901, and was, therefore, void. So far as the 10 annas 14 pies 16 kirants share of the sir and khudkasht lands are concerned, the sale was, however, a transfer of the alleged proprietary rights which the vendor claimed therein in addition to an agreement to give up possession and relinquish any ex-proprietary rights, which might be acquired by reason of the transfer. Section 7A of the Oudh Rent Act does not cover that portion of the contract which relates to the sale of the proprietary rights, and the decisions in Murlidhar v. Pem Raj (3) and Bhikham v. Ghasi Ram (4) do not apply to the sale of such rights. As pointed out in Ikramullah v. Moti Chand (5), which was confirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Moti Chand v. Ikram Ullah Khan (6), the prohibition applies only to the sale of ex-proprietary rights or the relinquishment thereof for consideration. Where a person sells what he does not own, agreeing at the same time not to claim ex-proprietary rights therein, the vendee can claim compensation for the failure of the vendor to make good his proprietary title.

The Court below has rightly allowed the defendant a set-off for Rs. 1,625, but has erred in refusing to allow the plaintiff interest on the balance of the purchase-money due to him. Under section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act, a vendor has a right to claim the unpaid purchase-money with interest; but he cannot claim any interest prior to the 2nd March 1910, because, as the Court below has pointed out, he has by his own conduct disentitled himself to it. By virtue of the sale he was to have received the money by instalments or otherwise, as he might require it by the end of August 1905. According to the accounts filed by the defendant, various items were paid to him from time to time up to the 16th November 1905 (Exhibit B 49). The two suits for pre-emption followed, in which the present plaintiff pleaded that the sale in favour of the father of the defendant was fictitious. It could not be reasonably expected from the present defendant, in the face of that statement of the vendor and the claims for pre-emption then pending, that he should have made any further payments till the claims for pre-emption were finally decided. The claim of Musammāt Latif-un-nisa failed on the 7th February 1911 (Exhibit B-22) and the claim of Musammāt Ruqaiya Bibi had failed earlier. The plaintiff became entitled thereafter to claim the unpaid purchase-money with interest thereon from the 7th February 1911 at 6 per cent. per annum. He received the balance of the purchase-money now claimed by him from Musammāt Latif-un-nisa on the 2nd March 1910, but he had to refund the same with interest at the above rate (Exhibits 2 and 3). In other words, he did not receive the benefit of that payment and as from the date when the suits for pre-emption ended, he is entitled to be placed in the same position in which he would have been, had no payment been made.

The appeal of the defendant is, therefore, dismissed with costs and that of the plaintiff allowed with proportionate costs here and hitherto in so far that he will be entitled to interest at 6 per cent. per annum on the sum of Rs. 4,794-0-6 allowed to him by the Court below from the 7th February 1911 till the date of payment. A fresh decree will be prepared in terms of Order XXXIV, rule 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and six months' time will be allowed for payment. In other respects the decree passed by the Court below will be confirmed.

Decree modified.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

May 30, 1918.

Present:—Lord Buckmaster, Sir John Edge, Mr. Ameer Ali and Sir Walter Phillimore, Bart.

Maharaja RANJIT SINGH BAHADUR

—APPELLANT.

versus

MAHARAJ BAHADUR SINGH—

RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Arts. 113, 144—Bengal Village Chaukidari Act (VI B. G. of 1870), s. 51—Chaukidari chakran lands, resumption of—Patnidar, rights of—Suit for possession by patnidar—Limitation—'Contract,' meaning of.

The word "contract" primarily means a transaction which creates personal obligations, but it may, though less exactly, refer to transactions which create real rights. It is in this latter sense that it is used in section 51 of the Bengal Village Chaukidari Act and the rights thereby reserved to patnidars and others on the transfer to the zemindar of chaukidari chakran lands, comprehensively included in the word "contracts", are real rights, the enforcement of which is secured not by a suit for specific performance, but by a suit for possession. [p. 264, col. 2; p. 265, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, a patnidar sued the zemindar to recover possession of such lands:

Held, that the Article applicable to the suit was not Article 113 but Article 144 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act, 1877, and that the period of limitation accordingly was not three but twelve years. [p. 264, col. 2; p. 265, col. 1.]

Consolidated appeal from seven decrees of the Calcutta High Court, reversing those of the District Judge, Birbhum.

FACTS.—The respondent was patnidar or dar patnidar of villages included in seven patni grants from the appellant as zemindar. Government resumed the chaukidari chakran lands within these villages under Bengal Act VI of 1870 and transferred them to appellant. Respondent claimed the lands under section 51 and his right to possession being denied, brought seven suits in the Munsif's Court for possession. Appellant pleaded, inter alia, that the suits, which were instituted at periods from five to eight years after the transfers, were barred by limitation, the Article applicable according to him being Article 113, which allows three years only. This contention was accepted by the District Judge, who on appeal from the Munsif dismissed the suits, but the High Court (Chitty and Teunon, JJ.) reversed this decision and decreed the suits, holding that the Article applicable was Article 144, by which the period of limitation is 12 years from the date when possession became adverse.

Hence this appeal.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. C. (with him Mr. Eddis), for the Appellant.—The suits were for specific performance of contracts and were barred by Article 113. The respondent's rights arose solely out of covenants to be implied in the patnis and by virtue of section 51 of Bengal Act VI of 1870, which provides that the transfer shall be subject to rights of contract,

RANJIT SINGH v. MAHARAJ BAHADUR SINGH.

Ranjit Singh v. Kali Dasi Debi (1). The decree in that case was to execute a conveyance on certain terms, not one for possession. Up to the date of the transfer from Government the patnidar had no right to the lands: he had only an implied right to get a conveyance on terms to be fixed. The contract was that the zemindar shall, if Government gives him the chaukidari chakran lands, execute a lease in the patnidar's favour. If there were no such contract, then the transfer to the zemindar was absolute and not subject to any obligation under section 51 of the Village Chaukidari Act (Bengal Act VI of 1870) [Reference was made to Hari Narain Mozumdar v. Mukund Lal Mundal (2).]

Mr. Upjohn, K. C. (with him Sir W. Garth), for the Respondent.—The argument against me rests on a strict construction of the word "contract" in section 51. I say the word is wider, like the Roman transaction it includes conveyance. The contract here is one under which a third person gets a right to land. Lord Parker in Ranjit Singh v. Kali Dasi Debi (1) laid down that the object of section 51 was to preserve the rights of third persons, not personal rights, but real rights—rights in the land. Here a real right was created when each patni was granted, long before the Chaukidari Act, which merely lays down that if other persons have real rights on the land, those rights shall prevail against the zemindar. There was no contract in the technical sense nor are we applying for performance of any, we are simply enforcing a real right on statutory terms. We ask for possession. Who ever heard of a decree for possession in a suit for specific performance before execution of any conveyance? Further, in all these cases judgments are given for mesne profits. There is nothing in the nature of specific performance here, there is no date fixed for the performance of the contract. Article 113 has no application, the proper Article is 144.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The decree is that you shall pay Rs. 58 till the rent is fixed by a future suit. Is that right?]

(2) 4 C. W. N. 814.

We have to pay Rs. 58 anyhow and may have to pay more. It is like having an equitable right. A man's claim in equity is subject to terms to be imposed by the Court.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., replied.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—This is a consolidated appeal against seven decrees of the High Court of Calcutta dated the 5th March 1913. These decrees were made in seven suits instituted by the respondent on the 10th and 20th September 1904 against the appellant and others claiming to recover possession and settlement of certain chowkidari chakran lands in villages of which the appellant is the zemindar. It is unnecessary to deal with the history and vicissitudes of the litigation, as the only question that now arises for determination is whether the suits were barred by the Indian Limitation Act, 1877. This Statute, as is well known, fixed different periods of limitation within which suits of different characters should be brought. The appellant contends that Article 113 of the Second Schedule of that Statute regulates the rights of the parties in the present case, while the respondent asserts that the period is fixed by Article 144 of the same Schedule. By the terms of the Schedule, Article 113 is stated to apply to a suit for specific performance of a contract, the period of limitation is fixed at three years and the time from which the period begins to run is stated to be the date fixed for the performance, or if no such date is fixed, the date when the plaintiff has notice that performance is refused. Article 144, on the other hand, relates to a suit for possession of immoveable property or any interest therein not thereby otherwise specially provided for, the period is twelve years, and the time from which the period begins to run is when the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiff. If Article 113 applies the appellant is entitled to succeed. But it is admitted that he must fail if Article 144 prescribes the true period.

The circumstances out of which the action arose can be briefly stated. The respondent is the patnidar of half and darpatnidar of the other half of the village of Gopalpur, and is patnidar of six other villages, all of the said villages being within the zemindari of the appellant. Some of the lands in these villages included in the patni and the darpatni were originally held as chowkidari chakran lands, but in June 1898 these lands were all resumed by the Collector under the Bengal Act VI of 1870, and then transferred to the appellant. It is unnecessary to state the history of these lands, the circumstances attaching to their tenure and the respective rights of the parties when they were resumed by the Collector, for all these matters have been fully dealt with in a judgment of this Board in the case of Ranjit Singh v. Kali Dasi Debi (1). It was there decided that upon such resumption and transfer to the zemindar as is provided by the Bengal Act VI of 1870, the patnidar or the darpatnidar is entitled under section 51 to possession of the chowkidari chakran lands. That right depended upon the interpretation given by the Board to section 51 of Act VI of 1870. This section operates to transfer the land to the zemindar, "subject to all contracts theretofore made in respect of, under, or by virtue of, which any person other than the zemindar may have any right to any land, or portion of his estate or tenure, in the place in which such land may be situate."

Lord Parker in delivering the judgment of the Board, while commenting upon the fact that these words were not happily chosen, expressed the opinion that their obvious intention was to preserve the rights of third parties. He said:—

"They contemplate a case in which the village in which the resumed lands are situate has been made the subject of a contract by the zemindar, or those through whom he claims and that under this contract some third party may have interest in the lands resumed. They are wide enough to include, and in their Lordships' opinion do include, the rights of a patnidar under a patni grant by virtue of which the patnidar is lessee of the zemindar's interest in the lands resumed, and also the rights of a darpatnidar under a darpatni grant."

There is, therefore, no longer any question as to the right of the respondent to the lands, but the appellant's contention is that as the rights of the patnidar are reserved under the words referred to, they must be assumed to be contractual rights, that consequently a suit to enforce those rights must be a suit for specific performance, and that the date from which the Statute begins to run must be the date of the grants to the zemindar. Their Lordships are unable to accede to this contention. It does not follow that because the rights originally arose by virtue of a grant declared to be a contract within the meaning of section 51 they are, therefore, rights, contractual in the sense that the contract by its terms creates and regulates the personal obligations and duties of the grantor in the circumstances that have arisen. At the time when the patni grants were made the resumption of the chowkidari chakran lands was not even contemplated, and the grant necessarily contains no reference whatever to the circumstances that would arise and the relationships that would exist in the event of the Government resuming possession. Upon resumption of such possession the rights of the patnidar were those conferred on him by the estate and interest created by the patni leases, and it was these rights that were kept alive by section 51 of Act VI of 1870 of the Bengal Council. It is only necessary to examine the words which prescribe the date from which the period begins to run in Article 113 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act to show the difficulties in the way of any contrary contention. This date, as has already been pointed out, is either the date fixed for performance or the date when the plaintiff has notice that performance has been refused, but no date whatever has been fixed for performance in such a case as the present, either by the original grant or by the terms of the Statute; nor has there been any refusal to perform a contract, for there was no unexecuted contract which had to be performed. A suit for specific performance is essentially a suit for enforcing a stipulated obligation relating to property. The word "contract" itself primarily means a transaction which creates personal obligations, but it may, though less exactly, refer to transactions which create real rights. It is in this latter sense that the word was used in section 51, and the rights thereby reserved to the patnidars, comprehensively included in the word "contracts," are real rights, the enforcement of which is secured not by a suit for specific performance, but by a suit for possession, and it is this which, in their Lordships' opinion, is the character of the suits in the present case.

From this it follows the period of limitation is that fixed by Article 144; consequently the judgment appealed from is in their Lordships' opinion correct, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Under-proprietary right in land—Dahiyak, cash—Birtdar's right to deduct dahiyak from rental, nature of.

A cash dahiyak is distinguishable from a birt right in the land entitling the birtdar to hold possession of the land and to deduct the dahiyak from its rental. The former may in a sense be an under-proprietary right but it is not an "under-proprietary right in the land," while the latter is an under-proprietary right in the land so held in possession. [p. 267, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 17th June 1916.

Mr. M. Aditya Prasad, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to Mahal Katauli Nain, which is a hamlet of the village Katauli and forms part of the Birwa Mahnon Estate. The plaintiff is the Taluqdar or owner of that estate. The defendants claim an under-proprietary right in the said Mahal or hamlet. The plaintiff tried to eject them through the Revenue Court, treating them as tenants-at-will, but was unsuccessful.

The present suit was, therefore, filed by him for a declaration that the defendants had neither proprietary nor under-proprietary rights in the said hamlet or Mahal. The Court below dismissed the claim. So far as the claim of the plaintiff for a declaration that the defendants had no proprietary right therein is concerned, the plaintiff has really no cause of action, because the defendants never set up any proprietary right in the land in the said Mahal. The only question is whether they hold under-proprietary rights therein by virtue of the decree obtained by their predecessor-in-interest from the Settlement Court on the 28th August 1874, and whether anything had happened subsequently, which had the effect of detracting from or nullifying those rights.

On the 14th April 1874 Hari Pande, the predecessor-in-interest of the present defendants, filed an application in the Court of the Settlement Officer, Gonda, on behalf of himself and his co-sharers, stating that the village Katauli Nain was held by him and his ancestors by right of birt zemindari from a long time, that it had never been under kham tahsil or direct management of the superior proprietor and that he had all along been getting dasaundh till the death of Thakurain Sarfraz Kuar, when the Court of Wards took charge of the Birwa Mahnon Estate on behalf of her minor daughter, Thakurain Brijraj Kuar, and refused to allow him to have the same. He further stated that he was "in possession of all other rights" and prayed that a decree might be passed in his favour for birt rights in respect of that village (Exhibit A-1). The property claimed was described as the entire village Katauli Nain with the right of siwai, dasaundh, sir, parjout (services of ryots), etc., and other rights. The decree passed by the Settlement Officer on the 28th August 1874 gave further particulars as to the nature of the rights set up by the then claimant (Exhibit 1). It stated that the plaintiffs asked for a decree, declaratory of their right to hold the whole village Katauli Nain as their birt on haq dahiyak terms, alleging that Duniapat, the ancestor of the then Taluqdar, had sold the village in birt to their ancestor, Nain Singh; that the birt patra had been lost in 1209 Fasli, corresponding with 1802 A. D., and asserting that they had held the village pucca continuously on dahiyak terms up to 1264 Fasli. It was then admitted that Hari Pande and his co-sharers were in possession of the village but had not enjoyed any haq dasaundh since the annexation. In the year 1274 Fasli or 1856-1857 A. D. following the annexation, the then Taluqdar apparently refused to allow Hari Pande and his co-sharers to deduct the dasaundh and gave them or their representatives certain leases, fixing the rent. In regard to those leases, the Settlement Officer observed: "As, however, they have held leases of the village since 1264 Fasli, their meaning may be that the haq dasaundh has been deducted from the fixed payment; it may be stated at once, that they produce no wasilbakis of a later date than 1264 Fasli and that therefore the receipt of haq dasaundh, unless it was given in the mode already described, cannot be satisfactorily established. As, however, they are in possession of the whole village pucca, there can be no possible objection to giving the plaintiffs a declaratory decree under section 15, if they can prove enjoyment of their alleged birt rights within limitation." He then proceeded to dispose of the objection that Duniapat had no right to grant a birt, holding that the said objection was not worth consideration and went on to say:—"The defendant further pleaded that the plaintiffs were not birtias at all, but were village residents who had long held the village as thekadars. The plaintiffs produced a great many patras and wasilbakis, some of these seemed newly written, but the defendant would not plead that they were forged; he said he would call the old karindas and abide by their evidence. If these papers are correct, the plaintiffs are shown to have been holding the village on haq dahiyak terms since 1214 Fasli; these witnesses corroborate the documentary evidence, and the plaintiffs are clearly entitled to a decree unless the defendant can bring any proof sufficient to convince the Court that the documents filed are forged." He next discussed the oral evidence produced by the then Taluqdar which went to support the wasilbakis or list of collections and arrears filed by the claimants, and wound up by saying:—"The Court (therefore) in the complete absence of any proof that the papers filed by the plaintiffs are not genuine must conclude that they are so, and as they represent the plaintiffs to have regularly held the village on haq dahiyak terms, a decree must be given in their favour. In this Tahsil or at least in the Gonda Pargana it has therefore (sic) been held that by custom the birtias are not of right entitled to a lease, but they can only claim one-tenth of the nikasi. The defendant, however, has not set up this plea and, therefore, the Court will not disregard the long pucca holding of the plaintiffs." In the end he passed a decree "declaring that the plaintiffs are in possession of the village and that they are entitled to hold it as their birt on haq dahiyak terms," adding that they were of course then bound by "their present lease."

On the same date an order was sent to the Sadar Munsarim in the following terms:—"This case was taken up to day. Plaintiff and the general agent of the Court of Wards appeared. On the grounds recorded in the judgment in English it is ordered that a decree for possession of Katauli on the basis of birt rights be passed in favour of the plaintiff against the defendant. The plaintiff will take one-tenth of the gross rental on account of his rights and will pay the balance to the Taluqdar defendant" (Exhibit A 2).

Hari Pande and his co-sharers were not, however, recorded as under-proprietors during the old settlement. In the wajib-ul arz of the village Katauli it was stated that there were no under-proprietors in it (Exhibit 43). In the khewat register No. 5 prepared in 1304 Fasli in accordance with section 57 of the old Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1876) the present defendants, who had succeeded Hari Pande and his co-sharers, were recorded as holding the Mahal in lieu of 10 per cent. (Exhibit 44).

In the recent Settlement they were recorded as under-proprietors (Exhibit A-6) and on an application made by the father of the present Taluqdar for the assessment of rent under section 79 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1931) rent was assessed on them as such, the parties having, it is said, agreed to the Court assessing the same (Exhibit A 12). The defendants have been paying the rent so assessed to the plaintiff, the superior proprietor, since; and the conduct of the plaintiff in treating them as tenants at-will liable to ejectment by notice and not even as lessees, holding under a decree or judicial decision, is to say the least disingenuous.

He sought in the present case to prove that during the first three or four years after the first Regular Settlement the hamlet in question was held kham by the Taluqdar and was thereafter given in theka to Thakur Ram and Krishna Prasad, who remained in possession for about 8 years. It is added that on the termination of their theka the hamlet was restored to the defendants or their ancestors, but the evidence produced by him in support of that statement was rightly disbelieved by the learned Subordinate Judge and the learned Counsel who appears for the plaintiff-appellant has made no attempt to contest his finding. The further evidence produced by him in support of his allegation that he collected the sayer income from the sale of mango harvest is equally unreliable, for the plaintiff's own witness, Nand Kishore, who was in the service of the Taluqdar, deposes that, so far as the hamlet of Katauli Nain was concerned, the theka of that hamlet included every sayer income such as fish, mango crop, jack fruit produce, sidha and the like and that the thekadars realized and enjoyed the entire sayer income and paid the Taluqdar only the fixed rent (O. P. 26). The khataunis on which reliance is placed on behalf of the plaintiff do not show that the sayer income was realized by the plaintiff on account of the land appertaining to the particular hamlet or Mahal now in question.

Nain Pande was the ancestor of the defendants and the fact that the hamlet or Mahal is connected with or goes by his income is not without its significance. The birt right, which the Settlement Officer conceded, was presumably the birt right which Hari Pande and his co-sharers then claimed, namely, a bai birt or birt by right of purchase, for no other kind of birt right was asserted or set up. In fact the Settlement Officer pointed out that in the Tahsil in which the village in question was situated or at least in the Gonda Pargana it had been held that by custom the birtias were not as of right entitled to a lease but could claim only one tenth of the nikasi, and that no such custom had been set up by the then Taluqdar and the Court could not, therefore, disregard the long pucca holding of the claimants. In passing the decree the Settlement Officer had obviously in view the Record of Rights Circular No. 2 of 1861, paragraph 24 of which declared:—

"But the Chief Commissioner is clearly of opinion that birtias who were found in direct engagement with the State at annexation or who have uninterruptedly held whole village on the terms of their pattas under the Taluqdars, must be maintained in the full enjoyment of their rights in subordination to the Taluqdars. It is no argument that the Taluqdar may not realize more than ten per cent. above the Government demand. Such birt tenures must be considered an intermediate interest between the Taluqdar and the ryot; and, as such, entitled to be maintained."

The suggestion that the Settlement Officer only intended to grant a cash dahiyak or a dahiyak payable by deduction so long as the claimants remained in possession cannot, therefore, be sustained. A cash dahiyak is distinguishable from a birt right in the lard, entitling the birtidar to hold possession of the land and to deduct the dahiyak from its rental. The former, as pointed out in Deputy Commissioner, Gonda v. Bhagwan (1) and Parmeshar, Dat v. Mohammad Abul Hasan Khan (2), may be in a sense an under proprietary right, but it is not under proprietary right in the land, while the latter is an under proprietary right in the land so held in possession. discussed the various kinds of birt tenures prevalent in Oudh, and pointed out that in Gonda the bai birt was spoken of as a birt zemindari and was an under-proprietary tenure. The lease referred to in the settlement decree is not forthcoming. The decree places no restriction of time on the right of the defendants to hold the village as their birt. The periodical revision of the rent is only an incident of an under-proprietary tenure or "intermediate interest between the Taluqdar and the ryot," spoken of in paragraph 24 of the Record of Rights Circular. The rent is under the present law liable to be revised at every Settlement, but before section 40 of the Oudh Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1876), which corresponds with section 79 of the present U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), was enacted, superior proprietors used to revise the under-proprietary rents more often. In stating that the then plaintiffs, while holding the village as their birt on haq dahiya terms, would be bound by their "present lease," all that the Settlement Officer appears to have meant was that the rent payable by the *birt*dars was settled by their "present lease" and did not require determination. That was the rent which the present defendants and their ancestors had been paying till the last Settlement, when it was revised.

The defendants are, in our opinion, clearly entitled to birt or under-proprietary rights in the village on haq dahiya terms by virtue of the above decree and to hold possession of the same by virtue of that right. Nothing has happened since to show that they or their ancestors had surrendered those rights. The construction placed by the Court below on the settlement decree is correct and is confirmed by the subsequent conduct of the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff at the last Settlement.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Decision of Subordinate Judge, whether res judicata in subsequent suit of Small Cause nature.

The decision of a Subordinate Judge in a previous suit is res judicata in a subsequent Small Cause suit between the same parties inasmuch as the inability of the Subordinate Judge to entertain a claim of a Small Cause nature arises not from incompetence but from the existence of another Court with a preferential jurisdiction. [p. 269, col. 1.]

Revision of the judgment passed by the Small Cause Court, Akola, in Suit No. 1884 of 1915, on the 4th November 1916.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Applicant.

The Hon'ble Sir Bipin Krishna Bose, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The defendant Amrit Rao had money dealings with the plaintiff Madhorao, and for the debts due on account of the money dealings he had executed three rujus in favour of the latter. These rujus were

	Rs.	a.	p.	Dated
1 for	3,397	8	0	26-2-1912.
3 "	300	0	0	28-10-1912.

The plaintiff had filed Suit No. 32 of 1915 in the Court of the Junior Sub-Judge, Akola, for Rs. 3,824 14 6 on the ruju for Rs. 3,397-8 0, having admitted a payment of Rs. 1,000. The defendant in that suit had pleaded three more payments of Rs. 1,000, Rs. 1,262 and Rs. 1,000, and had said that these four re-payments had been made on account of not only the ruju then sued upon but also of the two other rujus for Rs. 262 and Rs. 300. The first issue framed in that suit referred to the three additional payments pleaded by the defendant which had been denied by the plaintiff. The Sub-Judge found that all these three re-payments had been made in addition to the one admitted by the plaintiff. The plaintiff has now filed the present suit in the Small Cause Court, Akola, for Rs. 855-1-6 on the two rujus for Rs. 262 and Rs. 300. The defendant's plea in the present suit is substantially the same as in the suit before the Subordinate

NUR-UL-ISLAM v. QADIR BAKHSH.

Judge. He claims that he has re-paid altogether Rs. 4,262 towards all the three rujus, and he admits that Rs. 107.12 0 are due to the plaintiff after receiving credit for the balance of Rs. 4,262 after deducting the amount due to the plaintiff on the ruju for Rs. 3,397-8-0. In both cases the point substantially raised is: what was the total amount paid to the plaintiff on account of the dealings in respect of which the three rujus were executed. This point was decided in defendant's favour by the Subordinate Judge, and the defendant pleads that it is now res judicata, and I think his contention is correct, provided the Sub-Judge was competent to decide the present claim. It is, however, urged for the plaintiff that the Sub-Judge was not competent to decide the present suit as he was not exercising the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court. The reply to this is furnished by the judgment of Jenkins, C. J., in Ghulappa v. Raghvendra (1). It was there held, in a like case, that the inability of the Subordinate Judge to entertain a claim of a Small Cause Court nature arose not from incompetence but from the existence of another Court with preferential jurisdiction and the Subordinate Judge's decision was held to be res judicata with regard to the claim in the Small Cause Court. This application for revision is dismissed with costs.

Personal attendance of parties, when to be ordered.

Before a legal order can be passed against a party directing him to appear in Court under the provisions of Order X, rule 4 of the Civil Procedure Code, it is necessary that the Court should find, in the first place, that there are material questions relating to the suit which must be answered either by such party or by his Pleader, and when such party has a Pleader, it is only when the Pleader is unable or refuses to answer those questions that the Court may direct the party to appear in person. Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 2nd May 1918.

The Hon'ble Mirza Sami-ul-lah Beg, Mr. Aditya Prasad and Babu Raja Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mohammad Fasih, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On an application filed by the plaintiffs-respondents to have an award filed and a decree passed in accordance therewith, the learned Subordinate Judge directed the defendant-appellant under the provisions of Order X, rule 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure to appear in person and answer certain questions. On his failure to appear in person and answer those questions, he pronounced judgment against him and directed the award to be filed and a decree passed in accordance therewith. Before a legal order can be passed against a party directing him to appear in Court under the provisions of Order X, rule 4, it is necessary that the Court should find, in the first place, that there are material questions relating to the suit which must be answered either by such party or by his Pleader, and when such party has a Pleader, it is only when the Pleader is unable or refuses to answer those questions that the Court, under the provisions of Order X, rule 4, may direct the party to appear in person. It does not appear what in the opinion of the learned Subordinate Judge were the material questions in this matter. But, even assuming that there were material questions, it is clear that the learned Subordinate Judge did not call upon the appellant's Pleader to answer them. Such being the case, there could be no failure on the part of the Pleader to answer the questions as he was never asked to answer them; and the order of the Subordinate Judge directing the appellant to attend the Court was, therefore, erroneous.

MACHI RAJU VENKATARATNAM v. VADREVU RANGANAYAKAMMA.

We accept the appeal and the application for revision and send back the case to the learned Subordinate Judge to be restored to its original number and decided according to law. The cross-objections filed by the plaintiffs-respondents as to their costs are disallowed. The parties will pay their own costs in these proceedings in this Court.

Appeal accepted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 58, 63—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 11—Refusal to investigate claim, whether order under r. 63—Order that claim be notified to bidders—Suit by claimant to establish title—Limitation applicable.

Where a Court purports to make an order under the proviso to Order XXI, rule 68, Civil Procedure Code, i.e., an order refusing to investigate, the order comes within the mischief of Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, and Article 11 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. [p. 275, cols. 1 & 2; p. 276, col. 1.]

Narasimha Chetti v. Vijiapala Nainar, 27 Ind. Cas. 944; 2 L.W. 206 and Ponnusami Pillai v. Samu Ammal, 38 Ind. Cas. 937; 31 M.L.J. 247, followed.

An order on a claim petition which expresses no final judgment upon the right put forward but simply directs the sale after notifying the claim, is an order against the claimant and his suit to establish his title is governed by Article 11 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. [p. 276, col. 1.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The practice of notifying claims to intending bidders is not warranted by anything contained in the Code of Civil Procedure. It often leads to the depreciation in value of the property to be sold and is not calculated to advance the right of the claimant in any way. [p. 276, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Godavari, at Rajahmundry, in Appeal Suit No. 32 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Rajahmundry, at Cocanada, in Original Suit No. 23 of 1914.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 12th and 13th March 1918, the Court (Sadasiva Aiyar and Napier, JJ.) made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE TO THE FULL BENCH.

NAPIER, J.—One of the points taken in this appeal was whether the suit is barred by limitation by reason of the provisions of Order XXI, rules 58 to 63, and Article 11 of the Limitation Act. The claim was put in before the District Munsif under rule 58 and the District Munsif dealt with it, as appears in Exhibit V. He first passed an order as follows:—"As this petition was filed late, this claim is ordered to be notified to the intending bidders." A fresh petition was put in before him and he passed another order as follows:—"The allegations of the Zamindarini will be notified to the bidders with the remark that the Zamindarini did not take steps for her claim being enquired into during the last ten months." On the face of it, this order appears to me to be one passed under the proviso to rule 58 of Order XXI—"Provided that no such investigation shall be made where the Court considers that the claim or objection was designedly or unnecessarily delayed." It is argued before us that even if it is a case covered by the proviso, still rule 63 applies and that rule, together with the operation of Article 11 of the Limitation Act, bars any suit on the same subject matter after one year from the date of the order. The question as to the construction of rule 63 had been before this Court and it was decided in a case reported as Narasimha Chetti v. Vijiapala Nainar (1) that "Order XXI, rule 63 of the new Code, is much wider in its scope than the corresponding section 283 of the Code of 1882 and unlike the latter section covers cases in which there has been no investigation." This case was followed by a Bench of this Court in a case reported as Ponnusami Pillai v. Samu Ammal (2). There the order was passed by the District Munsif in the following terms: "Application comes late and is rejected." It was held by the Bench that "the language of Article 11 in the new Act is more comprehensive than that of the previous Act and that has been construed in this Court as covering orders after full investigation as well as orders passed on default" and with that view, the learned Judges in this case were in entire agreement. The matter again came before another Bench of this Court in Second Appeal No. 1926 of 1916, a case to which my learned brother was a party. In that case an objection had been filed and the order passed by the Munsif was as follows:—"The petitioner's objection will be noted in the proclamation." The learned Judges say: "Here there was nothing except an order passed, so far as we can see, after no investigation in any ordinary sense of the term, since it is not shown that anything was considered which could justify a decision as to the validity of the claim, and eventually no decision regarding it was reached. In fact the case resembles Baboo Jodoonauth Chowdry v. Radhamonee Dossee (3) and agreeing with the judgment in that case, we set aside the lower Appellate Court's decision." These decisions are, in my opinion, irreconcilable and I think that it is necessary to refer the matter to a Full Bench for decision, as the question is not one of procedure only. The result of holding that Article 11 applies is to reduce the period of limitation from twelve years to one year without any decision of a Court on the merits and without allowing the claimant or objector to prove his right. It appears that the history of this provision is as follows:—In the Code of 1859, there was a provision for a refusal to investigate in certain circumstances, and there are decisions of the High Court of Calcutta on the language of the Code of 1859, namely, Baboo Jodoonauth Chowdry v. Radhamonee Dossee (3), Roghoonath Doss Mohapattra v. Bydonath Doss Maharatha (4) and Jugobundhoo Bose v. Sachya Bibee (5), to the effect that a refusal to investigate was not an order which gave rise to the shortened period of limitation mentioned in the section of the Code. This view receives some support from the language of the Privy Council in a case reported as Sah Mukhun Lall Panday v. Sah Koondum Lall (6).

Then coming to the Code of 1877, we have sections 278 to 283. All these sections with the exception of section 283 are practically in the same words as in the present Code, but the language of section 283 is "that the party against whom an order under sections 280, 281, or 282 is passed, may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive". It was held by this Court in Sarala Subba Rau v. Kamsala Timmayya (7) that where a Court had, under the proviso to section 278, not made an investigation, it was clear on the face of it that section 283 did not apply because section 278 was not one of those sections mentioned in section 283. That is clear, but it is important to bear in mind that this omission is intentional, the object being to preserve the law as it existed under the Act of 1859, the principle being that in a case where there has been a refusal to investigate, (the Court having full discretion whether to investigate or not) it would not be proper to attribute to such an order a degree of finality as would justify the Legislature in depriving a party of the longer period of limitation given to him in the Code and limit it to the one year provided for by Article 11. That seems to have been the policy of both the Codes.

We now come to the present Code and it is of course to be noted, as has been pointed out in the cases, that the words "in sections 280, 281 and 282" have disappeared. They must disappear because the scheme of the Code is different, in that these sections re-appear in the form of rules in Order XXI, and it is certainly open to argument that the reason for the omission of the definite rule or order was not for the purpose of extending the operation of rule 63, but because of the altered scheme of the Code. Bearing in mind the reason why the order under section 278 was not incorporated in section 283, it is a little difficult to see why the Code of 1908 should introduce a provision of this very drastic nature which had not been in the Codes of 1859 and 1882. Of course, if the language is such that it leads to no other interpretation, then that meaning must be ascribed to the words. Reliance is placed on the general nature of the language in rule 63 "Where a claim or an objection is preferred, the party against whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive." Certainly, the language is more comprehensive. First of all, we get the general words "where a claim or an objection is preferred" which were not in section 283, and then we get the simple use of the words "the party against whom the order is made." Now it is of some importance to look at the latter words of the section because if a party is to institute a suit to establish the right which he claims within a year and in default of that, the order is conclusive, one would expect that the order referred to would be one which definitely disposes of the claim or the petition. But it is clear that the order which is passed under section 278 is a simple refusal of the Court to take any proceedings which are provided for under those clauses, for it neither accepts nor rejects nor does it decide anything. The clauses are headed "investigation of claims and objections" and the proviso in rule 58 is one under which a Court has an option, whether to take the matter on its file or not. On principle, it would seem that where a Court has refused to take the procedure laid down by the section and which it has an option to refuse, an order which is passed refusing to entertain the petition or claim and investigate it, is not one which can be said to be conclusive with regard to the right to the property in dispute.

Suppose an order framed as follows, "I refrain from expressing any opinion on the claim and decline to investigate it as the claim is made at the last moment before sale. What will be sold is the right, title and interest of the debtor, whatever that is; petition for investigation is dismissed." Could it be said that such an order is an order "against a party on a claim preferred" within the meaning of Article 11 or an order "against a party" within the meaning of rule 63? It seems to me that the proper interpretation of rule 63 is that it only applies to investigations and not to refusals and that being so, it would be an unnecessary extension to give Article 11 any wider scope. In this view and on conflict of the authorities, I think it is advisable to refer to the Full Bench the following

QUESTIONS: -

(1) Where a Court purports to make an order under the proviso to rule 58, Order XXI, that is to say, an order refusing to investigate, does such an order come within the mischief of Order XXI, rule 63, and Article 11 of the Limitation Act?

(2) Is Exhibit V an order covered by Article 11 of the Limitation Act?

SADASIVA ARYAR, J.—I agree that the question mentioned in the judgment just now pronounced by my learned brother should be referred to a Full Bench. There was a claim petition filed by the present plaintiff, when the plaint properties were attached in execution of a decree passed against the present 2nd defendant in favour of the present 1st defendant. That petition, so far as it relates to the plaint lands, alleged that the judgment-debtor, the present 2nd defendant, had no saleable interest whatever in the land and that it was the petitioner's private land which had been granted on service tenure to the 2nd defendant's father. She (the petitioner) prayed for the release of the property from attachment. That claim petition was E. A. No. 3307 of 1910 and was filed on the 23rd December 1910. The property had been proclaimed for sale and so the Munsif seems to have at once passed an order that as the petition was filed late it should be notified to the intending bidders. The sale seems to have been afterwards adjourned from time to time and the sale itself seems to have finally taken place only in January 1912. Meanwhile, the claimant, the present plaintiff, put in a fresh petition (evidently as supplementary to the claim petition No. 3307 of 1910) requesting the Court to make an enquiry into the claim petition in respect of the alleged non-saleability of the plaint land. Then the District Munsif, holding his first order of December 1910 as not a final order, passed a final order on the 16th October 1911 on that same claim petition No. 3307 of 1910 as follows:—"The allegations of the Zamindarini" (that is, petitioner) "will be notified to the bidders with the remark that the Zamindarini did not take steps for her claim being enquired into during the last 10 months". Neither in his first incomplete order nor in his final order did he use the word "rejected" or "dismissed" as regards the disposal of the petition. Now the question is whether the failure of the petitioner to file a suit within one year of October 1911 under Order XXI, rule 63, to establish the right which she claims to the property in dispute precludes her by the bar of limitation from establishing the same right in this suit filed in January 1913. Under section 247 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1859, it was enacted, "no such investigation" (that is, into claim or objection) "shall be made if it appear that the making of the claim or objection was designedly or unnecessarily delayed, with a view to obstruct the ends of justice. The order disallowing the investigation shall not be subject to appeal, and the claimant shall be left to prosecute his claim by a regular suit." In the previous section 246, investigation was directed as a general rule on claim petitions, and the last sentence of that section is, "The order which may be passed by the Court under this section shall not be subject to appeal, but the party against whom the order may be given shall be at liberty to bring a suit to establish his right at any time within one year from the date of the order." Thus a clear distinction was made between an order passed after investigation (in favour of one party and against another party) and an order passed disallowing investigation. (I shall not use the expression "without investigation," because that phrase may include cases where the Court was ready and prepared to investigate but through the default of the petitioner to pay Batta or to put in appearance or to adduce evidence, the claim petition was decided against him.) Even in cases of dismissal for default, Kallu Mal v. Brown (8) and Sarala Subb, Rau v. Kamsala Timmayya (7) held that the plaintiff was not precluded under the old

(8) 3 A. 504; A. W. N. (1891) 14; 2 Ind. Dec (N. S.) 257.

Code by the limitation bar of one year. Then the Code of 1877 by the proviso to section 278 gave the Court the same power to decline investigation when it considered the claim unnecessarily delayed and then under sections 280, 281 and 282, provided for orders being passed on investigation, that is, in cases in which it did not refuse to embark on investigation under the powers given to it by the proviso to section 278. Then section 283 enacted that "the party against whom an order under sections 280, 281 or 282" (that is, where it has not refused to investigate) "is passed, may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive." Article 11 of the Limitation Act provides one year's limitation for the suit. The present Code of 1908 under Order XXI, rule 63, omits reference to rules 60, 61 and 62 of Order XXI, which correspond to old sections 280 to 282 and uses the expression 'the party against whom an order is made' (on the claim preferred). The question is whether, where a Court has refused investigation under the proviso to rule 58, it can be said that an order has been made against that party on the claim petition preferred by him. I think no order has been made on the claim preferred under those circumstances, but only an order refusing to make any order on that claim petition either for or against the petitioner: In Subba Aiyar v. Subba Aiyar (9) decided by my learned brother and myself, we thought it unnecessary to consider whether the provisions of the new Civil Procedure Code and the new Limitation Act were intended to and could take away the right of suit under the general law which the plaintiff had till 31st December 1908, where the Court refused to investigate the claim petition which he had preferred on an attachment. In Narasimha Chetti v. Vijiapala Nainar (1) the order which was held to have become conclusive after one year was as follows:—"The claim is based on a sale-deed dated a fortnight before the attachment. I find that the claim has been unnecessarily delayed and dismiss it without investigation. Order XXI, rule 58 (1) proviso." In Ponnusami Pillai v. Samu Ammal (2) the order was, "application comes late and is rejected." The learned Judges, Seshagiri Aiyar and Bakewell, JJ., refused to accept Mr. Devadoss's contention that as there was no investigation, the one year rule did not apply. The learned Judges remarked that "the contention came too late in the day" and they quoted Narasimha Chetti v. Vijapala Nainar (1) and Subba Aiyar v. Subba Aiyar (9) in support. But, as I have said already, Subba Aiyar v. Subba Aiyar (9) did not decide the question as it was considered unnecessary to decide it for the purpose of that case. In Second Appeal No. 1986 of 1916, the order on the claim petition was that the claim would be referred to in the sale proclamation. The claim was neither rejected, nor dismissed expressly in that case. Oldfield, J., and myself held that there was no order passed against the claimant under those circumstances as "no decision regarding the claim was reached." I think the presence or absence of the words "rejected or dismissed" is immaterial, provided that it is clear that what the Court substantially intended to do was to refuse to investigate the claim under the powers given to it by the proviso to rule 58, Order XXI. I am inclined to hold that in this case there was no order on the claim against the claimant but only an order refusing to pass any order on his petition either for or against the claimant and that, therefore, Order XXI, rule 63, does not apply to such an order. But seeing that the decisions in Narasimha Chetti v. Vijapala Nainar (1) and Ponnusami Pillai v. Samu Ammal (2) seem to be against that view and that there are numerous decisions of the Calcutta High Court all of which (if I may be permitted to say with respect) cannot be reconciled with one another, I think that the question whether the order Exhibit V in this case was an order passed on his claim petition against the plaintiff so as to preclude him from bringing a suit after one year to establish the rights which he sought to have investigated by the Court in the claim petition, should be considered by a Full Bench and I agree to the reference proposed by my learned brother. I do not think that the mention in the order of a direction to the ministerial department of the Court to proclaim the fact of the making of the claim to intending bidders is relevant in the consideration of this question.

In pursuance of the above Order of Reference to the Full Bench the appeal came on for hearing on 15th and 16th of July 1918.

Mr. P. Narayanamurti, for the Appellant.—There is a difference between section 223 of the old Civil Procedure Code and Order XXI, rule 63 of the new Code. As soon as a claim is put in, the provisions of Order XXI, rule 63, attach. An order refusing to investigate a claim on the ground that it was put in too late is an order against the claimant. A man who is guilty of laches cannot be put in a better position than the man who prefers his claim promptly. See Narasimha Chetti v. Vijapala Nainar (1), Nogendra Lal Chowdhury v. Fani Bhusan Das (10), Ponnusami Pillai v. Samu Ammal (2) and Kishore Marwari v. Bejoy Krishna Mukherjee (11). A contrary view was taken in Second Appeal No. 1986 of 1916, but the change in the new Code was not brought to the Judge's notice.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and Gopaldasikachariar, for the Respondents.—A refusal to investigate is not an order against a person. There is no conclusive order, the point being left undetermined. The order is tantamount to a refusal by Court to exercise its discretion. Rule 63 of Order XXI contemplates a suit to establish a right. A refusal to investigate a claim is no adjudication of a right. Syed Mahomed Afzul v. Kanhya Lal (12). An order refusing to investigate on the ground of laches is not a summary decision which should be set aside within a year. Syed Mahomed Afzul v. Kanhya Lal (12).

The change in the new Code was due to the fact that it was sought to bring in cases of dismissal for default under Order XXI, rule 63, Kunj Behari Lal v. Kandh Prashad Narain Singh (13), Kishore Marwari v. Bejoy Krishna Mukherjee (11),

OPINION.

WALLIS, C. J.—The general policy of these provisions of the Code, as explained by the Judicial Committee in Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (15), is to secure the speedy settlement of questions of title raised at execution sales. Section 283 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882 only gave a right of suit to the party against whom an order had been passed under sections 280, 281 or 282, and did not provide for the case where the Court under section 278 refused to investigate the claim on the ground that it had been designedly or unnecessarily delayed. In such cases, section 283 failed to provide for the speedy settlement of the questions of title raised by the claim. The Legislature would appear to have intended to supply this omission when in rule 63 of Order XXI of the present Code it conferred the right of suit in general terms "where a claim or an objection is preferred" upon "the party against whom an order is made", instead of limiting it, as in section 283, to cases in which an order had been passed under rules 60, 61 and 62 (sections 280, 281 and 282 of the old Code). Where a claim or objection is preferred under rule 58 (formerly section 278), and the Court rejects it under the proviso to that rule on the ground that it was designedly or unnecessarily delayed, the unsuccessful claimant or objector, in my opinion, clearly comes within the words "the party against whom the order is made." Rule 63 does not speak of any party but of the party against whom an order has been made, and assumes that, where a claim or objection is preferred under rule 58 (section 278), there must always be a party against whom an order is made within the meaning of the rule. I cannot agree with the suggestion in Napier, J.'s Order of Reference that the change in the language of rule 63 was due merely to the altered scheme of the Code. If no change had been intended, rules 60, 61 and 62 would simply have been substituted in rule 63 for sections 280, 281 and 282 in the corresponding section 283 of the former Code. We are bound, I think, to give effect to the clear intention of the Legislature to widen the scope of the rule in accordance with the general policy of this legislation as explained by the highest Tribunal. A claimant, who comes forward too late in the day to entitle him to have his claim investigated having regard to the proviso in rule 58, nonetheless raises a question of title with regard to the attached property; and there is nothing unfair in depriving him owing to his laches of the chance of getting a provision decision in his favour on his claim petition and requiring him to proceed to assert his title by suit within the shorter period of limitation prescribed when questions of title are raised with regard to attached property. I accordingly agree with Narasimha Chetti v. Vijayapala Nainar (1) and Ponnusami Pillai v. Samu Ammal (2). As regards Second Appeal No. 1985 of 1916 the attention of the Court was not called in that case to the alteration in the language of rule 63, on which my opinion is based. Our answer to the first question is that the case comes within the terms of Order XXI, rule 63. As regards the second question, assuming, as Sadasiva Aiyar, J., appears to hold in his Order of Reference, that the Zamindarini's claim in Execution Appeal No. 3307 of 1910 was not finally rejected by the order passed on it on 23rd December 1910, we think that the subsequent order Exhibit V was an order made against the Zamindarini within the meaning of rule 63, and was consequently an order covered by Article 11 (1) of the Limitation Act of 1908. Though the order only was that the allegations of the Zamindarini would be notified to bidders, we think it amounted, and was understood to amount, to a rejection of the claim on the ground that it was filed too late.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree. The language of Order XXI, rule 63, leaves little room for doubt that all orders which negative the right set up by the claimant or the decree-holder are within the rule. Prima facie the decree-holder attaches or gets attached the property in dispute as that of the judgment-debtor, PARTAB BAHADUR SINGH v. BADLU.

The law compels him to give certain information to the Court before the proceedings in attachment are taken. When this requirement is satisfied, unless a third party intervenes, the sale would be effected as if the property belonged to the judgment-debtor. When a claim is preferred, the usual prayer is that the attachment should be raised as the property does not belong to the judgment-debtor but belongs to the claimant. On the presentation of such a petition, if the order is not that the property be released from attachment, it must be taken to be an order against the claimant. The practice of notifying claims to intending bidders is not warranted by anything contained in the Code of Civil Procedure. It often leads to the depreciation in value of the property to be sold and is not calculated to advance the right of the claimant in any way. Consequently it seems to me that the procedure adopted by some of the Subordinate Courts of notifying objection by claimants at the time of the sale without expressing any decision upon those objections should be discouraged. Although the practice is not a salutary one, I fail to see how this procedure can be construed as not having the force of giving a decision against the claimant. His right to raise the attachment must be deemed to have been negatived when the property was ordered to be sold without releasing it from attachment. Therefore, in my opinion, an order on a claim petition which expresses no final judgment upon the right put forward but simply directs the sale after notifying the claim, is an order against the claimant and he is bound to institute a suit under Article 11 of the Limitation Act. The history of the legislation has been reviewed in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice and I do not propose to deal with that question. I agree with the answers proposed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XLVII, r. 1—Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), ss. 120 A, 135—Review—Rent appeal—Judicial Commissioner, whether can review decision.

The Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh has power under the Code of Civil Procedure to review its own decision given in a rent appeal. This power is not affected by the provisions of section 120A of Act XXII of 1886 which gives authority to the Board of Revenue to review its decisions. [p. 276, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous application for review of decree of the 1st Additional Judicial Commissioner, Oudh, dated the 17th December 1917.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Applicant.

Babu Har Govind Das, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for review of my decision of the 17th December 1917. The learned Counsel on the other side has taken a preliminary objection that I cannot review this decision under the provisions of sections 120A and 135 of Act XXII of 1886. This objection cannot be supported. Section 120A gives power to the Board of Revenue to review its orders. No Revenue Court could have a power of review under the Act except what was given by the Act. But the principle could not possibly apply to this Court. It has a power of review under the Code of Civil Procedure, which is not inconsistent with any of the provisions of Act XXII of 1886. I, therefore, proceed to hear the application.

When this second appeal first came before me, I was under the impression that Part 3 of Local Act V of 1894 had come into operation in the Partabgarh Tahsil on the 22nd January 1895. If such had been the case, the order of the Settlement Commissioner of the 24th December 1896 would have undoubtedly covered the point before me, and I should not have permitted any re-arguing of the question. But it has since been brought to my notice that Part 3 of Local Act No. V of 1894 did not come into operation in the Partabgarh Tahsil till 1899. I was not in a position to know that fact at the time, and was misled by the circumstance that it had come into operation in a portion of the Partabgarh District and not in other portions. As it is now settled that Part 3 did not come into operation till 1899, I agree with the learned Counsel for the applicant that Mr. Hooper's order can have no bearing on the question of rural Police rate, and in so far as a rural Police rate is concerned, the matter must be decided irrespective of anything that Mr. Hooper decided in his order. It is an admitted fact that the predecessor-in-interest of the respondents in the appeal did, as under-proprietor of the village, undertake to pay the whole charges of supporting the village Chaukidar in 1874, and that from that year onwards he allowed the Chaukidar rent free land for his support until 1899, when Part 3 of Local Act V of 1894 came into operation. Local Act V of 1894 laid down no clear provision as to the person from whom such Police rates should be recoverable, but that omission is cured by the repealing Act, Local Act II of 1906, which laid down in section 14 that the rural Police rate should be recoverable, in whole or in part, by the landlord from an under-proprietor or permanent lessee, who was bound by law, decree or contract to provide wholly or in part for the maintenance of rural Police. That Act has also been repealed. It has been replaced by Local Act I of 1914, and in that Act the same provision has been enacted in section 8. We thus have it that the predecessor-in-interest of the respondents was liable to support the Chaukidar in full and that, when the Government took over the support of the Chaukidar recovering the expenses by a local cess, the liability was transferred by Statute to the respondents and that no portion of that liability remains to the superior proprietor. In these circumstances I rescind my former order and decree the appeal. The respondents will pay their own costs and those of the appellant in all Courts.

Application allowed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 106—Landlord and tenant—Notice to quit—Requisites of valid notice—Service on one of several joint tenants—Presumption—Delivery by post, effect of.

The principles governing the sufficiency of notices to quit served by landlords upon their tenants are the same in India as in England. Such notices may be good and effective in law, even though not strictly accurate or consistent: the test of their sufficiency is not what they would mean to a stranger ignorant of all the facts and circumstances touching the holding to which they purport to refer, but what they would mean to tenants presumably conversant with such facts and circumstances. Such notices are to be construed so as to effectuate the intention of the parties, "ut res magis valeat, quam pereat." [p. 233, col. 2.]

Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. only requires that a notice to quit should be tendered or delivered to the party intended to be bound by it, either personally or to one of his family or servants at his residence, or if such tender or delivery be not practicable, affixed to a conspicuous part of the property. The personal tender or delivery may take place anywhere: the vicarious tender or delivery must be made at the residence of the person intended to be bound. [p. 287, col. 2.]

In the case of joint tenants service of a notice to quit upon one is prima facie evidence that it has reached the others. [p. 287, col. 2.]

There is a presumption that a notice to quit posted in a letter properly addressed to the person intended to be bound reaches that person. Such presumption applies with still greater force to letters which are registered, and is not rebutted but strengthened by the fact that a receipt for the letter is produced signed on behalf of the addressee by somebody else. [p. 288, col. 2; p. 289, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Calcutta High Court, dated the 16th April 1915, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Hooghly, dated the 19th May 1914, reversing a decree of the First Munsif, Howrah.

FACTS of the case are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment and in that of the Calcutta High Court, and the only questions for decision in this appeal were (1) whether the plaintiff's notice to quit was sufficient; (2) whether it was duly served. The Munsif decided both these questions against plaintiff.

HARIHAR BANERJI v. RAMSASHI BOY.

iff. He held that the notice was vague and ambiguous and that it required the defendants to vacate a portion only (6 cottahs) of their lands, also that some of the defendants were not served with the notice. He dismissed the suit. The Subordinate Judge, on appeal, remanded the case for trial on the merits. He held that the notice was served on all the defendants and that it was sufficient and was not vitiated by the fact that the area and boundaries of the land were misdescribed. The remand order was upheld on appeal by the Calcutta High Court (Fletcher and Teannon, JJ.), who delivered the following judgment:—

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the learned Officiating Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 19th May 1914, reversing the decision of the Munsif of the First Court at Howrah. The suit was brought for ejectment. The property was held on an annual tenancy and the tenancy is said to have been determined by a notice to quit properly served upon the tenants. The Munsif dismissed the suit on the grounds, first of all, that the notice was insufficient and, secondly, that the notice had not been served on all the defendants. The notice called upon the tenants to deliver up possession of a certain holding which was held in the name of one Ramnidhi Manjhi at a rental of Rs. 25 per annum. Those are the words expressed in the notice itself and that is the description of the holding which the defendants were required to give up possession of. It is true that there was to the notice a schedule annexed in which the area of the land was inaccurately stated and apparently also one of the boundaries in that schedule was not given correctly. But the fact remains that the notice required the tenants to deliver up this property originally held by Ramnidhi Manjhi and for which he was paying a rental of Rs. 25 per year. Nobody could doubt when he received a notice like that that what he was required to give up was not a portion of the holding but the whole holding for which Rs. 25 was payable. The errors in the schedule are, as the learned Subordinate Judge observes, mere inaccuracies which do not affect the validity of the notice. That seems to me to dispose of the first point.

The second point is about the service of the notice. The appellants, who are the principal defendants in the case, say that the notice was not duly served on them. As regards the defendants Nos. 1, 4 and 5, they were admittedly served with the notice. The others were served, it is said, by registered letters. The posting of the registered letters is proved. The return through the Post Office and the receipts of the registered letters given to the postman when he delivered the letters and received these receipts in the ordinary course of his business have been given in proof. It is said, however, that as strict proof has not been given in the case of the registered letters, that is, as the signatures of the addressees or their agents have not been strictly proved, the ordinary presumption that when a letter is posted in the ordinary course it reaches the addressee does not take effect. That seems to me a matter that does not require a careful consideration. There is no reason to think that the registered letters were taken less care of than unregistered letters. The defendants did not dare to go into the witness-box to contradict the fact that they did receive these notices through the Post Office. I should have thought that, on that ground alone, the learned Judge was entitled to come to the conclusion that these notices had been duly served upon the defendants. Further, the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 have been found as a fact to form members of the same joint family as the defendant No. 5. It is admitted that the defendant No. 5 was duly served, and one of the necessary incidents of a joint Hindu family is that the family should be living together in commensality and it, therefore, follows that the defendant No. 5, when he received that notice on his own behalf and on behalf of his brothers, was either a member of the family or an authorised agent living at the same residence as the defendants Nos. 6 and 7. There seems to be no doubt that these defendants had been duly served.

The other point is about the receipt given by the Gomashta. The Post Office delivered this registered letter to a person who, it is said, was the Gomashta of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3. It is said that the plaintiffs have not proved that the Gomashtha was a duly authorised agent. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 could have come forward and given evidence before the learned Judge that this letter, although duly addressed and delivered at their residence, had been purloined by some unscrupulous servant and had never, in fact, reached their hands. They did not, in fact, do so. There cannot be the slightest doubt that the person who took in the registered letter was a person authorised to do so, and that that letter duly found its way into the hands of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3. I agree in the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs, two gold mohurs.

TEUNON, J.—I agree.

Defendants preferred this further appeal to the Privy Council.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. O. (with him Mr. Kenworthy Brown), for the Appellants.—The notice to quit was not a proper notice under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. Appellants held $2\frac{1}{2}$ bighas; the notice related only to 6 cottahs. It was not an inadvertent misdescription or mistake; it was a deliberate manoeuvring for position. There were several plots, and the notice related to one single plot in the possession of Ghose: this is clear from the boundaries given: the whole question is, what is Ramnidhi's holding. They do not want to admit that the whole $2\frac{1}{2}$ bighas is that holding so they claim the part hoping by that means to get possession of the whole. Further, the notice was not duly served. The posting of registered letters is not a sufficient compliance with section 106: the notice must be delivered personally or to a member of the family or servant at the party's residence.

Jogendra Chunder Ghose v. Dwarka Nath Karmohar (1) and Subadin v. Durga Charan Law (2) which lay down the contrary are incorrect.

Mr. Branson (with him Mr. Dube), for the Respondents.—The High Court's decision is correct. The notice clearly referred to the whole of Ramnidhi Manjhi's holding. As to service the expression in section 106 is "delivered"; posting of registered letters is a sufficient delivery within the meaning of the section. We rely on Papillon v. Brunton (3).

Mr. DeGruyther, K. O., replied.

JUDGMENT.

LORD ATKINSON.—This is an appeal against a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William, Bengal, dated the 16th April 1915, which dismissed an appeal from the Subordinate Court of Hooghly, dated the 19th May 1914.

The action out of which the appeal has arisen is one of ejectment brought, not by owners or occupiers of land against persons trespassing upon it, but by landlords of a particular piece of land against their former tenants of the same to recover possession thereof, on the ground that the tenancy of those tenants has been determined by an effective notice to quit duly served.

Two sets of defendants have been named in the plaint, the first containing the names of seven persons named Banerji, some of whom were, and still are, members of a joint Hindu family; others were once such members and have ceased to be so. For convenience these are styled the principal defendants, and are alleged by the plaintiffs to have been their tenants from year to year of the piece of land mentioned up to the service of the aforesaid notice to quit. The second set of defendants consists of three limited companies—two milling companies, numbered 8 and 9 respectively; Andrew Yale (Limited), timber merchants, the managing agents of the two first-named companies, and numbered 10, and a firm named Amrita Lal Ghose and Sons, numbered 11. These latter defendants Nos. 8, 9, 10, and 11 are stated to be the subtenants of the principal defendants, and being in the possession of the above-mentioned piece of land are made pro forma defendants. In the third paragraph of the appellants' case it is in effect stated that the only questions in the case which have up to the present been decided are—first, the question whether, assuming that the principal defendants were the tenants of the plaintiffs of the aforesaid piece of land from year to year, the notice to quit alleged to have been served upon them was sufficient and proper in form; and, second, the question whether it had been duly served. The Munsif in whose Court the suit was filed decided both these questions in favour of the defendants, and on this ground dismissed the suit. His decision was reversed upon appeal by the Subordinate Judge, and it was by him ordered that the case be sent back to the lower, i.e., the Munsif's Court, with a direction to remit the suit to its original number, and to proceed to try the issues raised in the suit other than issue No. 2, and determine the suit after giving the parties due opportunity for adducing evidence.

The principal defendants appealed from this order to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal. The appeal was dismissed with costs, this latter Court being, like the Subordinate Judge, of opinion that the notice to quit dated the 9 Assin, 1317, B. S., given by the plaintiffs had been duly served and was effective to determine the alleged tenancy from year to year of the principal defendants.

On the 11th July, in the year 1906, the present plaintiff No. 1 addressed the present defendant No. 10 a letter in the words and figures following:—

"Messrs. Andrew Yule and Co., Calcutta.

"Dear Sirs.

"I am informed that since the 1st day of March last you are filling up and occupying our khas (Patit) vacant land and khal in Char Ramkrishtopur, Howrah, described below. You have taken no permission from us, nor have you made any arrangement with us for it. Please take notice that the land is the absolute property of myself and my co-sharers, and therefore any improvements you may make to it will belong to us absolutely. Further, you are liable to pay for your use and occupation of the land and for all damages that we may suffer thereby from the 1st March last, that is, from the date from which you have been using and occupying it.

"Therefore, on behalf of myself and my co-sharers I demand from you that you do within ten days of receipt hereof make a settlement with us for the land, failing which we shall take such steps as the law provides.

"Description of Land.

"All that piece of (or) parcel of khas Patit land consisting of low land, khal, etc., measuring about 10 cottaks and butted and bounded as follows."

The boundaries are then given, but nothing turns upon them.

This statement that Yule's land is 10 cottaks in extent is of importance. On the 23rd July in the same year plaintiff No. 1 in the present suit, as executor of his father Rammoya Roy and Srimati Adhar Roy, widow and executrix of the same Rammoya Roy deceased, brought an action against the seven principal defendants in the present suit to recover a sum of Rs. 3 14-10, arrears of rent due to the deceased Rammoya Roy.

In the second paragraph of the plaint in the former suit it is stated that the plaintiffs have been in possession of about 6 cottaks of bastu land, mentioned in the schedule, situate in the said village of Char Ramkrishtopur, on payment of the prescribed annual rent of Rs. 25 thereof as Sarbararkars of an annual Gar Mourashi, Thika tenant under the plaintiffs, Rs. 12-8-0 being annually paid by them separately by four instalments to the plaintiff. The statement that the rent of Rs. 25 a year issued out of 6 cottaks of land is undoubtedly inconsistent with their claim in the present suit, in which they allege that it issues out of a holding about 2 bighas 2½ cottaks in extent. It is not, however, more inconsistent with their present claim, than is the defence put in by the defendants inconsistent with the admission they made before the Subordinate Judge, to the effect that they were in possession of a holding belonging to the plaintiffs formerly occupied as tenant by one Ramnidhi Manjhi, and that this rent of Rs. 25 issued out of the holding, whereas the defence is that the lands out of which this rent of Rs. 25 issued is 2 bighas 2½ cottaks in extent purchased benami by their predecessors and belonging to them as longstanding mourashi mokurari land.

Again, on the 18th February 1908 the present appellant No. 1, executor of his late father, and the latter's widow, as his executrix, addressed to the same Andrew Yule and Co:—

"Messrs. Andrew Yule and Co.,

"Managing Agents, Fort William Flour Mills Company (Limited).

"Dear Sirs.

"We are informed that you have filled up a khal situate in the land specified below, and occupied the said land also, which is our khas land, without our permission and without entering into any settlement with us. This land adjoins on the west a piece of land measuring 6 cottahs, for which the name of Nidhiram Manjhi is recorded in our Serishta as a tenant-at-will, having no permanent rights. We also beg to draw your attention to the letter written by one of us on the 11th July 1906, protesting against your filling up the said khal and occupying the said land.

"Under the circumstances, unless you deliver up possession of the said piece of land more particularly described below within one month [torn] date or take a settlement from us on reasonable terms, we shall be under [torn] painful necessity of taking such steps as we may be advised for the recovery [torn] of possession against you and such other person or persons who may claim any right to interfere with our rights and khas possession.

"We further demand from you a sum of Rs. 920 (23 into 4 into 10) on account of the use and occupation of the said land and filled up khal from the 1st March 1906 to the 31st January 1908 and require you to pay the same to us within a month of date.

"Description of the Land.

"All that piece or parcel of khas vacant land consisting of low land, khal, etc., measuring about 10 cottahs or more, situate in our Zemindari of Char Ramkrishnampur, sub-district of Howrah and Thana Shibpur, and butted and bounded as follows."

The boundaries are then set out.

This letter, treating Yule and Co., as trespassers instead of sub tenants of the principal defendants, as they are treated in the present suit, may have, with the other inconsistencies already mentioned, induced, and their Lordships think most probably did induce, the principal defendants to refuse to be content with the decision of the Subordinate Judge and High Court, and to prefer the present appeal to this Board on two points, one of which, the proper service of the notice, is technical and unmeritorious. It is not pretended that the plaintiffs are estopped by these proceedings and documents. But the strangest argument that could well be addressed to any legal tribunal has been founded upon them and pressed on behalf of the principal defendants. It is this, that the plaintiffs deliberately and for some indirect object narrowed their notice to quit to what they knew was a small portion of the holding for which their tenants paid them rent, in order that, having got possession of this portion, they might treat the companies occupying the remainder of the holding as trespassers. If they knew the law, as they must be assumed to do, they must have been well aware that a notice to quit calling upon the tenants of a holding to quit a portion of it is absolutely bad, and they must have known also that this design could not be accomplished unless the ejectment founded on the notice was so framed as to obtain secure possession of the portion mentioned in the notice and no more, and that the action could be at once defeated by the tenants by proof that the contents of their holding were more than the part named.

It is desirable, therefore, to refer to the pleadings to see how the respective parties framed their claims and defences, in order to discover whether the former were fashioned so as to carry out the alleged knavish design. In paragraph 5 of the plaintiffs' plaint the nature of the holding of which they claim to recover possession is described. It is a Jumma of land bearing an annual rental of Rs. 25 in the name of Nidhiram alias Ramnidhi Manjhi, recorded in the Serishta of the plaintiffs, for which the principal defendants paid the annual rent of Rs. 25 and of which they were in possession. So far the description of the holding is reasonably plain and clear, and if it stopped there it is difficult to suppose that any person of ordinary intelligence reading it would not at once see it was the possession of that Jumma in its entirety—nothing more and nothing less—which was claimed. Any difficulty which exists arises from the statement of the contents of this Jumma. The plaintiffs mention 6 cottahs, but it is not quite clear whether by mention of that area the plaintiffs mean to assert that this was in fact its area at the date of the filing of the plaint or merely that it is its area as recorded in the plaintiffs' Serishtah. If the holding be one of char lands, it may well be that its area would be considerably augmented by accretion in the long course of sixty years during which it is alleged to have been in the tenancy of the defendants and their predecessors.

The description, however, does not stop there. In the same paragraph it is further stated that in the suit already mentioned brought by plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 to recover arrears of rent, the principal defendants had stated that the whole quantity of 2 bighas 2½ cottahs was comprised in the Jumma in respect of which the annual rent of Rs. 25 was paid. In the schedule these different estimates or descriptions of the contents of the Jumma are repeated, but whatever its actual contents it is stated to be the land recorded in the plaintiffs' Serishtah in the name of Ramnidhi Manjhi, subject to an annual payment of Rs. 25. In the sixth paragraph of the plaint it is averred that the formal defendants are in the possession of the said lands, that is, the lands comprised in the Jumma, in the immediately preceding paragraph mentioned as monthly tenants under the principal defendants. This paragraph refutes absolutely the suggestion that all the plaintiffs seek to recover is the 6 cottahs of the Jumma in the occupation of Amrita Ghose and Sons. What is sought to be recovered is all the lands occupied by all the pro forma defendants, and not merely the portion occupied by any one of them. The contents of the succeeding paragraph lead to the same conclusion. It appears to their Lordships that in the face of this pleading it is perfectly plain that what the plaintiffs in this suit seek to recover is possession not of a Jumma 6 cottahs in extent, nor yet a portion, 6 cottahs in extent, of a larger Jumma, but the whole Jumma described as formerly held by Ramnidhi Manjhi, for which he and the principal defendants after him paid an annual rent of Rs. 25 and which is in actual occupation of the formal defendants.

The written statements filed by the principal and pro forma defendants suggest the same conclusion. From paragraph 12 of the latter it appears that in the month of May 1900 the principal defendants entered into an agreement with the pro forma defendants to grant to the latter a lease of 13½ cottahs of low land forming part of the "land in suit." The part cannot be equal to or greater than the whole; 13½ cottahs cannot be a portion of 6 cottahs; and thus the lands in suit, in the opinion of the formal defendants, cannot be a mere part of the Jumma 6 acres in area. In this statement it is also averred that the defendant No. 8, the Monarch Flour Mills Company, on the faith of this promise of the lease immediately began to raise the level of the land demised to them and to raise buildings upon it.

It is further averred in the statement that the defendant No. 8 filled up at an expense of about Rs. 3,000 a khal immediately north of the premises of defendant No. 9, and that in May 1905, the principal defendants claiming the lands so made by this filling up, the defendant No. 9 agreed with them to rent a piece of land 17 acres in extent situate east of the plot 13½ acres in extent already mentioned; that the said defendant No. 9, relying on these promises to grant a lease to them, erected buildings upon the said lands and paid rent to the principal defendants in respect of them; that the principal defendants evaded executing these leases though tendered to them for execution, and ultimately refused to execute them; and that defendants Nos. 8 and 9 were about to institute a suit against the principal defendants for specific performance of their agreement to grant the leases when the news of the institution of the present suit reached them.

This written statement was filed on the 22nd December 1911, three days after the filing of the written statement of the principal defendants. Of course, these latter people are not bound by the averments contained in the written statement of their sub-tenants.

The written statement of the formal defendants is that in their view, at all events, the present suit is not brought to recover merely possession of the 6 cottahs in the occupation of defendant No. 11, Ghose and Sons; but is brought for the recovery of the possession of lands which they themselves have promised to lease. In paragraph 9 of their statement it is averred that the land in suit is not the 6 cottahs held by Ghose and Sons, but 2 bighas 2½ cottahs held by them in one plot, not two plots. And they repeat ad nauseam in various forms the statement that the lands in suit are not confined to a Jumma of 6 cottahs bearing an annual rent of Rs. 25; that they never had possession of a jote of 6 cottahs, nor ever paid rent in respect of such a jote; that the lands in suit are not confined in a jote Jumma of 6 cottahs at an annual rent of Rs. 25, alleged by the plaintiffs in their plaint to be recorded in the name of Ramnidhi Manjhi; and further that if there be any such jote of 6 cottahs recorded in the plaintiffs' Serishtas, the principal defendants never had any connection with it or interest in it.

In paragraph 12 of the written statement they repeated the assertion already mentioned that the 2 bighas 2½ cottahs for which they pay Rs. 25 is ancestral property acquired in the way already described, but not a particle of evidence was given by the defendants at the hearing to sustain any one of the averments contained in this paragraph. Nor was any evidence whatever then given to sustain the accusation that the plaintiffs harboured the stupid and fraudulent design attributed to them in framing their notice to quit in its actual form. The form of their pleading repels the idea. This is a vital matter, because of the principles upon which, according to the authorities, notices to quit containing errors honestly but mistakenly or inadvertently made are to be construed. These principles would be entirely inapplicable to inaccuracies deliberately inserted for fraudulent purposes. The principles that the notice to quit should be construed ut res magis valeat, quam pereat applicable in the first class of cases could not be applied to the second. There is no reason why, if the plaintiffs before they served this notice to quit had obtained more full and accurate information as to the precise facts touching this holding for which the principal defendants paid them this annual rent of Rs. 25, they should not have availed themselves of it and embodied it in their notice to quit.

In their Lordships' view there is nothing whatever to show that the plaintiffs were actuated by a desire to play any trick, or effect any fraudulent purpose in connection with this notice to quit or the ejectment suit consequent upon it, or to show they did not serve the notice and institute the suit in the honest desire to exercise legitimately the rights which the law conferred upon them in reference to the possession and enjoyment of their own property.

If this were a case arising in England the English authorities would, therefore, be applicable. It has not been suggested, and could not, their Lordships think, be successfully contended, that the principles they lay down are not equally applicable to cases arising in India. They establish that notices to quit, though not strictly accurate or consistent in the statements embodied in them, may still be good and effective in law; that the test of their sufficiency is not what they would mean to a stranger ignorant of all the facts and circumstances touching the holding to which they purport to refer, but what they would mean to tenants presumably conversant with all those facts and circumstances; and further, that they are to be construed, not with a desire to find faults in them which would render them defective but to be construed ut res magis valeat quam pereat. To take a few of these authorities out of many to illustrate these principles.

In Doe d. Huntingtower v. Culliford (4) the defendant went into possession of a house and an acre of land in the parish of Ilchester on the 4th August 1821 as tenant to the plaintiff. On the 28th September 1822 the plaintiff served upon the defendant a notice, dated the 27th September 1822, to quit this house and this land at Lady-Day next or at the end of your current year. Lady-Day next would be the 25th March 1823 and the current year of the tenancy would be the 4th August 1823, but acting on the above-mentioned principles it was held to be a good notice to quit on Lady-Day, 1823, i.e., the 25th March 1823. Abbott, C. J., in delivering judgment said:—

(4) (1824) 4 Dowl. & Ry. (K. B.) 248,

"There is one rule of construction in cases of this nature which is no less sound than ancient, namely, to give such a sense to ambiguous words as will effectuate the intention of the parties. Applying that rule to this case, it appears to me the words 'at the end of your current year' may be understood to mean the end of the current year ending at the ensuing Lady-Day. The words, I think, are plainly applicable to the current year Lady-Day, 1823."

Bayley, J., said:—

"We are to look at the intention of the landlord. When general language is used which is open to doubt, the rule is to make it sensible, not insensible. The state of the defendant's holding shows it to be clear that the landlord did not mean the year ending Michaelmas Day. He could not intend to give notice to quit in two days, because that would be no notice whatever. By mentioning Lady-Day next it is clear he meant to give a six months' notice, or such notice as the law requires. He intended to give an effective notice, and it is quite sufficient if the tenant understands what is meant."

In Doe d. Williams v. Smith (5) the tenant, who held lands under a demise originally from May 1832 to the 2nd February 1833 and held certain buildings from May 1832 to May 1833, retained possession after February and May 1833 without any express contract. On the 22nd October 1833 the landlord served a notice to quit and deliver up possession of all the buildings and the land at the expiration of half a year from the delivery of the notice "or such other time or times as your present year's holding of or in the said premises or any part thereof respectively shall expire after the expiration of half a year from the delivery of this notice." Lord Denman, C. J., in delivering judgment said:—

"I think the notice was well enough. It is admitted that it would be good from May 1834. The half year would expire in April 1834. It would, therefore, not be a good notice for the 2nd February 1834 but I think that, although the word 'present' is used, the notice may be referred to 2nd February 1835, which was after the expiration of the half year, and that there was no danger of the tenant being misled."

Littledale, J., concurred for the same reasons, saying:—

"This is certainly a lame and inaccurate notice; but, such as it is, we must endeavour to give it a rational interpretation."

Patteson, J., said:—

"It is not required that a notice should be worded with the accuracy of a plea. This is not drawn with strict precision, but I think it is sufficiently clear."

That case was followed and approved of in Wride v. Dyer (6).

The case of Doe v. Archer (7) is very applicable to the present case. There a farm was leased for twenty-one years at a rent of £180 per annum, consisting, as described in the lease, of Town Barton and its several parcels described by name at a rent of £33, other closes named at rents of £5 5s. and £11, and the Shippon Barton and several parcels described by name at £86, reserving to either party power to determine the lease at the end of fourteen years on giving two years' previous notice. It was held that a notice by the landlord to the tenant to "quit Town Barton, etc., agreeably to terms of the covenant between us on the expiration of the fourteen years of your term" was sufficient.

Lord Ellenborough in delivering judgment said:—

"The landlord must have intended to give such a notice to quit as the lease reserved to him the liberty of giving, and not a void notice to quit a part only, and so the notice in question must have been understood by the tenant."

"The notice to quit Town Barton, where the mansion was, meant the Town Barton cum sociis, especially with reference to the lease, which only gave him power to determine the tenancy as to the whole of what was let together."

HABIBAR BANERJI v. RAMSASHI ROY.

Le Blanc, J., said:—

"There being no power under the lease to determine the tenancy as to part only, the notice to quit could have no operation at all unless taken, as it must have been intended, to apply to the whole."

Bayley, J., said:—

"We are to construe a notice to quit in such a way ut res magis valeat, quam pereat."

In order to judge of what the notice to quit in this case conveyed to those of the principal defendants upon whom it was served, it is necessary by examination of the evidence given at the trial before the Munsif to ascertain what were the material facts in reference to the connection of those defendants with the lands in suit. Three witnesses were examined on behalf of the plaintiffs, namely, Ramsashi Roy, Suresh Chandra Chatterji and Hira Lal Kar. The second of these gave no material evidence upon the point now under consideration. One witness, and only one, namely, Jyotish Chandra Banerji, was examined on behalf of the defendants. Ramsashi Roy proved amongst other things that the plaintiffs in the suit are the Maliks of two Towzi Nos. 3994 and 3994A acquired by purchase, of which the latter belonged to the witness and his mother, and the former belonged to Guru Das and his cousins; that the Banerjis were the tenants of the lands in suit; that he accepted rent from them; that Nidhiram was the tenant; that somehow or other the Banerjis got the lands from Nidhiram; that they paid rent to the plaintiffs for it, and their rents were accepted; that the Banerjis were not trespassers; that Nidhiram was treated in his witness's Serishtas as dead; that the land in the possession of the principal defendants was included within the boundaries given in the notice to quit; that the actual occupiers of the lands were Messrs. Andrew Yule and Co. and Amritsa Lal Ghose; and that he, the witness, only came to know in May or June 1900 that the Banerjis had under-tenants who paid them rent.

In reply to the Court he said the Banerjis (defendants) are not trespassers; they are tenants in the sense that they pay him rent; that he accepts rent from them as Sarbararkars, meaning thereby that they were occupying the place of tenants; that he has been accepting rent from them since 1900; he believed his uncle (the owner of Towzi No. 3994) also receives rent from them; that he did not know when they acquired their interest in the lands in suit; that he treated them as tenants to the extent of receiving rent from them as Sarbararkars. On being further cross-examined by Counsel he said that the quantity of land in the possession of defendant No. 11 was 6 cottahs; that there are no pucca structures upon it; the quantity of land in the possession of defendants Nos. 8 to 10, he said, was 30 cottahs, the total quantity 2 bighas; that before 1900 the lands were khal (a closed channel) and Patit; that to the east of the 2 bighas odd there is no public pathway, but a private pathway, 6 to 10 feet wide, used by Andrew Yule and Co. solely; that to the east of that pathway lie the lands of the Port Commissioners; that these latter lands formerly belonged to his, witness's, predecessors, and were acquired by the Commissioners; that he did not include in the plaint this eastern pathway within the disputed land.

The witness Hira Lal Kar stated that he was Gomashta for all the plaintiffs. He proved that he received rent from the Banerjis for the plaintiffs and gave receipts for it, eight of which were apparently produced, proved, and marked Exhibit A and Exhibits B (1) to B (7). They have not been printed in the Appendix, as they ought to have been since they may describe the holding in respect of which the rent was paid and throw light upon the point in controversy.

Well, in the face of this evidence, it is not surprising that when the case came before the Subordinate Judge it is stated in his judgment that it was admitted on both sides that the defendants', i. e., the Banerjis', tenancy consisted of the holding of Ramnidhi Manjhi. It is not suggested that the knowledge of this fact was recently acquired by the principal defendants and the sufficiency or insufficiency of the notice to quit must, therefore, be determined having regard to the fact that admittedly the principal defendants were, to their own knowledge, tenants of Ramnidhi Manjhi. The fact that in their written statement they don't deny this fact, but studiously evade admitting it, while they have given no evidence whatever to disprove it, all suggest that they were well aware who their predecessor in occupation was. And it is almost impossible to believe that the Counsel for the principal defendants would have omitted to confine his clients' admission to their state of knowledge subsequent to the service of the notice to quit if he could have honestly and truthfully done so.

Turning to the contents of the notice to quit, the material part of it is:—

"You are informed by this notice that Char Ramkrishtopur, Pergunnah Boro, recorded in Towzi Nos. 3994 and 3994A in the Collectorate of district Hooghly, within station Sibpur, is our Zemindari. The Bastu land, bounded as below, within the said Char, is land, bearing a yearly Jumma of Rs. 25 standing in the name of the late Nidhi Ram alias Ram Nidhi Manjhi. You have been in possession of the said land on payment of rent at the said rate and taking dakhilas in the name of the said Nidhi Ram Manjhi as Thika tenants-at-will of the said one Jumma only under us. Now it being necessary for us to take khas possession of all the lands comprised in the said Jumma, you are informed by this notice that you should vacate that land, by removing the huts, etc., that exist on the said land on or before the last day of the month of Chaitra of the current year 1317 B.S. We shall take khas possession of all the lands comprised in the said Jumma on the expiry of the said fixed time. In case we do not get khas possession of the said land on the expiry of the said time fixed, we shall take khas possession of that land by instituting a suit in proper Court against you, and you shall be liable for all damages.

"The 9th Assin, 1317 B. S.

"SCHEDULE.

"1 (one) plot of bastu land, about 6 cottahs in area, situate in village Char Ramkrishtopur, within station Sibpur, Pergunnah Boro (6 cottahs).

"Boundaries.

"North : Ramkrishtopur Ghat Road.

"West: Jamai land of the late Thakur-das Banerji.

"South : Jamai land of the late Bhuban Mohan Banerji.

"East : Land included in the said Towzi."

The question is what must that notice have conveyed to an ordinary reader, much less to tenants who were aware, as the principal defendants have admitted, that they held Ramnidhi Manjhi's holding.

The notice begins by stating that the bastu lands, bounded as below within the Char of Ramkrishtopur, are lands bearing yearly Jumma of Rs. 25 standing in the name of Nidhi Ram alias Ram Nidhi Manjhi. It is then averred that the principal defendants have been in possession of these lands on payment of rent at the aforesaid rate, taking dakhilas in the name of the said Nidhi Ram Manjhi, as Thika tenants-at-will, of "the said one Jumma only under the plaintiffs." It is then averred that it is necessary for the plaintiffs to take khas possession of all the lands comprised in the Jumma already mentioned. The principal defendants are then required to vacate that land, that is, all the land comprised in the aforesaid Jumma, before a day named, and they are informed that on the expiry of that time the plaintiffs will take possession of all the lands comprised in the aforesaid Jumma. If the boundaries alone were added it could not, their Lordships think, be successfully contended that the meaning of this notice to any ordinary reader was not that possession of the entire Jumma in the tenancy of the principal defendants, which has stood in the name of Ram Nidhi Manjhi, and for which he and they paid a rent of Rs. 25 per annum, should be delivered up to the plaintiffs. To tenants who, like the principal defendants, were admittedly in possession of the entire Jumma and paid this rent, that must have been clear to demonstration, but it is contended that all this clearness is obscured, and this certainly rendered doubtful by the statement in the schedule that the lands the possessions of which are to be delivered up are one plot of bastu lands 6 cottahs in extent.

The principal defendants knew perfectly well that a plot of 6 cottahs in extent is only a small fraction, one sixth or one-seventh of the lands in the entire Jumma. They must presumably have known the law that a notice requiring a tenant to quit only a small portion of the holding of which he was tenant was bad and ineffective; but the presence of these words 6 cottahs in the schedule, it was, in effect, contended, reverses all the presumptions such as would apply in English cases and necessitates that the landlord should be presumed to have intended to serve a notice bad and ineffectual to his own knowledge rather than a valid and effectual one, and that the notice itself should be construed ut res magis pereat quam valiat instead of the contrary. No argument has been addressed to their Lordships and no authority produced to show that the principles of the above recited English cases are inapplicable to Indian cases. From the very nature of a notice to quit, which is merely the formal expression of the landlord's will that the tenancy of his tenant shall terminate, it would prima facie appear that they are applicable. In addition, it may well be that the description of the lands of the Jumma as bastu lands may refer to their condition as originally held by Ramnidhi Manjhi, and not to their condition after the defendants Nos. 8 and 9 had, during the years subsequent to the year 1905, built pucca buildings upon them, and defendant No. 11 had erected huts upon his 6 cottaks.

In their Lordships' view the erroneous statement of the contents of the Jumma does not predominate over the description given of it in the earlier portion of the notice to quit. They have not the slightest doubt that the principal defendants were perfectly well aware that the notice required the defendants, as the plaintiffs desired and intended that it should, to quit and deliver up possession of the entire Jumma for which they for years paid the rent of Rs. 25. If anything additional were needed to convince one that this was so, it would be the evidence of the only witness examined for the defendants. He says not a word about the principal defendants and their predecessor having from time immemorial had ancestral mokurari rights in the property containing 2 bighas and 2½ cottaks bearing an annual rental of Rs. 25, not a word to the effect that although he got, as he admits, the notice to quit he did not understand that it referred to the whole Jumma for which Nidhiram formerly and the principal defendants in succession to him paid this rent of Rs. 25 per annum. Their Lordships are, therefore, clearly of opinion that the notice was a good notice to quit this last named Jumma in its entirety, whatever its area may be. What its actual area is can be determined at the trial, and the possession of that area can be recovered in these proceedings.

Next and lastly as to the service of the notice to quit. The 106th section of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, only requires that such a notice should be tendered or delivered to the party intended to be bound by it either personally or to one of his family or servants at his residence, or if such tender or delivery be not practicable, affixed to a conspicuous part of the property. The personal tender or delivery may take place anywhere; the vicarious tender or delivery must take place at the residence of the person intended to be bound by the notice. Well, in the case of joint tenants, each is intended to be bound, and it has long ago been decided that service of a notice to quit upon one joint tenant is prima facie evidence that it has reached the other joint tenants. [Doe d. Macartney v. Orick (8), Doe d. Bradford v. Watkins (9), Pollock v. Kelly (10).]

It was proved and found that defendants Nos. 5, 6 and 7 are members of a joint Hindu family, and that of these No. 5 was duly served with a duplicate of the notice to quit. The mode of service adopted was this: Hira Lal Kar, the Gomashta of all the plaintiffs, who knew all the defendants and their addresses, sent to each by registered letter addressed to them at these addresses duplicates of the notice to quit signed by all the plaintiffs. For these notices he received receipts on the registration of them. And the peon of the Post Office, who, the defendants' only witness admitted, knew all their houses, got from all of them receipts for the letters when delivered. These receipts were produced, one purporting to be signed on behalf of Srimati Panchkawri Dabi, the guardian ad litem of the minor defendant No. 7, by a person signing on behalf of the addressee with the initials F. C. B.; another addressed to Babu Nula Kumar Banerji, the minor, purporting to be signed in something the same way; a third addressed to Babu Narinda Nath Banerji, defendant No. 6, purporting to be signed for the addressee in the same way; a fourth addressed to Fakir Chandra Banerji, defendant No. 5, signed by the addressee; a fifth addressed to Babu Haribar Banerji, defendant No. 1, signed by the addressee; a sixth addressed to Babu Jyotish Chandra Banerji, defendant No. 4, examined as a witness on behalf of his co-defendants, signed by himself; a seventh addressed to Babu Narayan Chandra Banerji, defendant No. 2, purporting to be signed on his behalf by Jogendra Nath Dey; and an eighth addressed to Babu Para Chandra Banerji, defendant No. 3, purporting to be signed on the addressee's behalf by the same person, Jogendra Nath Dey. The defendant No. 4 in his cross-examination stated he did not know a person named Jogendra Nath Dey, but, strange to say, after the signatures of five of the principal defendants, including Narayan Chandra Banerji, Para Chandra Banerji and Jyotish Chandra Banerji, to their written statement filed in the suit of the plaintiffs to recover rent instituted in July 1906, already referred to, appears the statement: "Satisfied from the statement of Jogendra Nath Dey." That was followed by something which is now illegible. It probably was the signature of some official before whom the defendants or their signatures to the written statement were identified or verified.

Hira Lal Kar stated that he left all the notices with Babu Prabodh, a man 30 years of age, son of defendant No. 2, who lives in his father's house. There would seem to be some error in the print of this witness's evidence on this point, as the witness is represented as having said he gave all the notices, not one notice, to Babu Prabodh. The Subordinate Judge found that this was good service on Narayan, the defendant No. 2. The Munsif held there was no proof of the service of the notice to quit on any of the defendants other than those numbered 1, 4 and 5. He seemed to be of opinion that the registered letters must be presumed to have been delivered to the person who signed on behalf of the addressee the receipt of it, but not to the addressee himself in the first instance or at all, and that as there was no proof that the persons other than the addressees who so signed were the duly authorised agents of the addressees to receive these notices the proof of service was defective. Service of a notice upon or delivery to such an agent would be good service or delivery to the principal, though in fact the notice was destroyed by the agent and never was seen or heard of by the principal [Tanham v. Nicholson (11)]; but it is an entire mistake to suppose that the addressee must sign the receipt for a registered letter himself, or that he cannot do so by the hand of another person, or that if another person does sign it on the addressee's behalf the presumption is that it never was delivered to the addressee himself mediately or immediately. For instance, if a servant in the addressee's house saw a notice handed in by the postman carried to the addressee and handed to him, that servant could certify that it was delivered to his master and could, if requested by the master, sign the receipt on the latter's behalf, though he was not the agent of the master authorised to take delivery on his, the master's, behalf.

The latest, clearest, and most conclusive authority upon the question of the sufficiency of the service or delivery of a notice to quit by post is probably the case of the Gresham House Estate Company v. Rossa Grande Gold Mining Company (12). There, the defendants, who were sued for rent, contended that they had, before the rent accrued due, terminated their tenancy by a notice to quit enclosed in a letter which they had put into the post correctly addressed to the plaintiffs, and which, if delivered in due course, would have been received in time to determine the tenancy. The plaintiffs called evidence to show the letter had never been received. The learned Judge presiding at the trial directed the Jury that a notice to quit enclosed in a letter sent through the post was prima facie evidence that it had been received, and left to the Jury the question whether it had, in fact, been received or not. The Jury found it had been received. On a motion for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, the Court, consisting of Cockburn, C. J., Blackburn, Mellor, and Hanan, JJ., held that if a letter properly directed, containing a notice to quit, is proved to have been put into the post office, it is presumed that the letter reached its destination at the proper time according to the regular course of business of the post office, and was received by the person to whom it was addressed. That presumption would appear to their Lordships to apply with still greater force to letters which the sender has taken the precaution to register, and is not rebutted but strengthened by the fact that a receipt for the letter is produced signed on behalf of the addressee by some person other than the addressee himself.

The only one of the defendants who appeared as a witness admitted he had received through the post office the notice addressed to him. None of the other defendants appeared as witnesses to deny that they had received the notices properly addressed to them and properly posted. In their Lordships' view the evidence of delivery of the notices to quit to all the principal defendants was, under these circumstances, adequately and sufficiently proved, and constituted good service of them within the meaning of section 106 of "The Transfer of Property Act, 1832." They are, therefore, of opinion that the appeal fails upon both the points raised for decision, and should be dismissed, and will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. As they think that the erroneous mode in which the plaintiffs shaped their claims in the years 1906, 1907 and 1908, in the letters and litigation already referred to, may have misled the defendants and brought about this appeal, they think the parties should be left to abide their own costs incurred in it.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 845 OF 1916.

April 22, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Spencer and Mr. Justice Krishnan.

BADAGALA JOGI NAIDU—PLAINTIFF

versus

BENDALAM PAPIAH NAIDU AND OTHERS

—DEFENDANTS NOS. 2 TO 4—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Antecedent debt—Mortgage of joint property by father—Subsequent mortgage in renewal of prior one—Sons, liability of.

A prior mortgage over joint family property created by a Hindu father cannot be treated as an antecedent debt for the purpose of binding his sons' interest in co-parcenary property under a subsequent mortgage between the same parties. [p. 292, col. 1; p. 293, col. 2.]

A debt contracted by the father on the security of the joint family estate cannot be treated as a debt of the father within the meaning of the doctrine as to antecedent debts. The doctrine must be restricted to cases of antecedent debts borrowed on the father's sole responsibility with no obligation on the joint family or its properties. [p. 293, col. 2.]

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 26th of September 1917, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—It is not improbable that the plaintiff's omission to ask questions of his witnesses to prove that the signatures of the persons executing Exhibit B were in the handwriting of those persons and his omission to prove the handwriting of the executants and attestors of Exhibit C were due to oversight. The District Judge appears to have granted the plaintiff's application to examine further witnesses, when it was made, and his judgment does not contain anything to show that it was subsequently refused at the time of hearing the appeal.

We must call for findings on the questions:—

(1) Whether the mortgage deeds, Exhibits B and C, are genuine? and

(2) Whether Exhibit A is wholly or partially binding on 2nd defendant?

It would be binding on him if the money was borrowed by the father for the necessary purposes of the family or if the mortgages were executed by the father to discharge an antecedent debt [Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1)]. The onus of proving the whole of this issue will lie on the plaintiff, as the 2nd defendant was not a party to these documents.

Fresh evidence may be admitted. The finding will be submitted in two months, and ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the District Judge of Ganjam at Berhampore submitted the following FINDINGS.

The suit has been remanded for findings on the following issues:—

(1) Whether the mortgage deeds, Exhibits B and C, are genuine?

(2) Whether Exhibit A is wholly or partially binding on 2nd defendant.

2. Both parties have examined witnesses at the remand hearing. Plaintiff now says that he saw the mortgagors sign Exhibit B and that he can identify their signatures on Exhibit C. P. W. No. 3 is the son of the man who wrote Exhibits A, B, C and he identifies his father's writing and signature. P. W. No. 5 is the son of Enni Appanna, whose name appears among the witnesses who attested Exhibit B, and he identifies his father's signature and says that he was present himself and saw Exhibit B executed though he did not attest it. P. W. No. 2 is a retired postman who attested Exhibit C and says that he saw the mortgagors sign, and P. W. No. 4 who is related to all the defendants says that the signatures of the mortgagors on Exhibits B and C are genuine. The only evidence on the other side is that of 2nd defendant, who says that the signatures of the mortgagors on Exhibits B and C are not genuine.

The evidence now on record is certainly sufficient to prove Exhibits B and C, if it be true and the question is whether it should be believed. There is little or nothing to be said against plaintiff's witnesses, but it has been argued—

(1) that the circumstances show that the deeds were forged to create a title for defendants Nos 3 and 4 to the mortgaged properties;

(2) that the endorsement of discharge on Exhibit C was found by my predecessor to be a forgery;

(3) that the mortgagees under Exhibit C were not examined; and

(4) that 3rd defendant was not examined to prove that he had executed Exhibits B and C. The first argument is based partly on the evidence of D. Ws. Nos. 2 to 4, who were examined to prove that the mortgaged property belonged to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and that plaintiff managed their property for a number of years because 1st defendant was incompetent, and partly on recitals in Exhibits A, B and C about the property. The defence witnesses are clearly interested, and I cannot see that the recitals in the mortgage-deeds afford any foundation for defendants' case that there has been a long series of forgeries. In Exhibits B and C the recital is that the property had been in the possession of an aunt of the fathers of defendants Nos. 1 and 3 and that she had given it to 1st defendant's father, or (as in Exhibit C) that it had devolved on him by means of adoption, and the recitals would surely have been very different if these deeds had been forged with the object of creating a title for the father of 3rd defendant. Besides this there is the all-important fact that 1st defendant, who was alive at the time of the original trial, was not put into the witness box to deny his signatures on Exhibits A and B. Second defendant stated at one time before the Subordinate Judge that 1st defendant did manage their property. The plea of his incompetency was not supported by any independent evidence, and even the witnesses who were examined did not speak of him as an idiot.

No proof has been offered of the endorsement on Exhibit C, but the omission of this endorsement in the public copy given on 25th May 1915 is not conclusive proof that this endorsement is a forgery. It is insignificant in appearance and position, and it has been omitted in the translation appearing in the printed book. In any case I think there is clear proof that Exhibit B is genuine and Exhibit C recites a debt due to the mortgagee of Exhibit C. I am inclined to think that Exhibit C is genuine too. Two circumstances on which my predecessor laid some stress, viz., that plaintiff did not retain the paddus and that no record was made of payments said to have been made under Exhibit A, may be explained by the close relationship between the parties, and I have taken these circumstances into consideration in forming an opinion about Exhibits B and C. My finding on issue No. 1 is that Exhibits B and C are genuine.

2. The second issue is "whether Exhibit A is wholly or partially binding on 2nd defendant?" and it is stated in the referring order that "it would be binding on him if the money was borrowed by the father for necessary purposes of the family or if the mortgages were executed by the father to discharge an antecedent debt [Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1)]." In the case quoted, the words "antecedent debt" have been defined as meaning "an obligation, not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded, or supposed to be available by such estate", and in another passage their Lordships speak of the father's power to bind his son as being confined to cases "where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immovable assets which do not personally belong to him, but are joint family property." The consideration for Exhibit A was made up of Rs. 2,000 required to discharge Exhibit B, and of Rs. 1,000 said to have been borrowed from time to time. Money was borrowed under Exhibit B to discharge Exhibit C, a mortgage deed held by a third party, and Exhibit C is said to have been executed in discharge of yet another mortgage deed—Exhibit E. In all these cases money was borrowed on the security of the family property, and if this is one of the tests to be applied in deciding whether a debt is an antecedent debt or not, the Rs. 2,000 secured by Exhibit A must be held not to be an antecedent debt. It has been argued that a different interpretation has been put on this case by the Madras High Court, or rather that the Madras High Court has held in Vinjanampati Peda Venkanna v. Vadlamannati Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (2) that this ruling cannot be held to apply in Madras, but the question decided in Vinjanampati Peda Venkanna v. Vadlamannati Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (2) was rather different and did not depend on the meaning of the words "antecedent debt." I think I am bound to follow the Privy Council case, and as there is no proof of necessity apart from the fact that there was a prior debt due to plaintiff himself, and as plaintiff, being a near relation, should be in a position to prove necessity, if any existed, I find that Exhibit A is not binding on 2nd defendant to the extent of Rs. 2,000 of the original consideration. The balance, according to the terms of Exhibit A, was borrowed at various times for household expenses and to pay Government assessment, but there is no evidence that money was really required for these purposes, and according to defendants' evidence, which has not been contradicted in this respect, the family lands yielded an ample income. P. W. No. 2 said that he saw money paid on two occasions, and there is no other evidence to show when this Rs. 1,000 were advanced, but even if it be assumed that the money was advanced before the mortgage deed was executed, I doubt whether the debt can be treated as an antecedent debt coming within the terms of the very restricted definition given by the Privy Council. If money is borrowed ostensibly for household expenses and to pay Government assessment, the debt can hardly be said to have been incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate.

My finding on issue No. 2 is that Exhibit A is not binding on 2nd defendant.

(2) 43 Ind. Cas. 225; 33 M. L. J. 519; 22 M. L. T. 334; 6 L. W. 649; (1918) M. W. N. 55; 41 M. 136.

BADAGALA JOGI NAIDU v. BENDALAM PAPIAH NAIDU.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing on the 17th April 1918, after the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—We must accept the learned District Judge's findings of facts, (1) that Exhibits B and C are genuine; (2) that family necessity has not been proved for the debts secured by Exhibit A, apart from the fact that there was a prior debt due to the plaintiff secured by the previous instruments (Exhibits B and C) executed by the 1st defendant and 3rd defendant and their fathers which mortgaged the family property.

On the question of law, which is whether a prior mortgage over joint family property created by a father can be treated as an antecedent debt for the purpose of binding his sons' interest in co-parcenary property in a subsequent mortgage between the same parties, I think we are bound to give the fullest effect to the words of Lord Shaw in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). If the arguments advanced before their Lordships are read with what preceded and followed this expression of the Judicial Committee's opinion, there cannot be any doubt as to what was meant by the words "an obligation not only antecedently incurred but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate."

If the law were different from what it is here pronounced to be, it would be open to a father to create a mortgage over the joint estate of himself and his sons one day and the next day to execute a second mortgage over the same property citing the first mortgage as an antecedent debt to make the transaction binding on the sons' interest. The effect would be to give the sanction of law to the very evil which the Privy Council seek to avoid when they speak of the undue and improper extension of this exception in respect of antecedent debts to the manager's power of mortgage.

The effect of the decision in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) has been considered in a recent decision of this High Court in Vinjanampati Peda Venkanna v. Vadlamani Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (2).

The question that arose in that case was whether a creditor could proceed against the son's share during his father's lifetime to recover a debt upon a promissory note executed by the father after partition in renewal of a note executed before partition. It was held that the Privy Council decision was not intended to overrule the whole current of authorities on this topic. The learned Chief Justice observed that the latest Privy Council decision did not question a creditor's right to bring the son's interest to sale for an antecedent debt. The new definition of what is an antecedent debt was not discussed in his judgment or in that of Kumarasami Sastri, J., who sat with him. There was nothing said, nor could there be, to diminish the authority of this pronouncement by the Privy Council, and even if anything in earlier judgments of that tribunal can be cited as being difficult to reconcile with this we should have to follow the more recent.

I consider that the appeal must be allowed to the extent of giving the plaintiff a decree in the usual mortgage form, including costs of this suit throughout, against the share of the deceased 1st defendant in the hands of his son the 2nd defendant, allowing 6 months for payment and that as regards the 2nd defendant's share the appeal must be dismissed with costs and a decree will be made accordingly.

KRISHNAN, J.—The learned District Judge has now found on the 1st issue that the prior mortgage deeds—Exhibits B and C—are genuine and on the 2nd issue that Exhibit A is not binding at all on the 2nd defendant. The finding on the 1st issue is not objected to and must be accepted. The appellant has, however, contested the finding on the 2nd issue before us and we must consider it.

The 2nd defendant is not a party to Exhibit A; his share in the joint property mortgaged is sought to be made liable on the ground that his father executed Exhibit A, and that the consideration for it is binding on him. The consideration for Exhibit A as recited in it consists of two parts, viz., Rs. 1,000 said to have been borrowed by the father at various times to pay household expenses and the BADAGALA JOGI NAIDU v. BENDALAM PAPIAH NAIDU.

Government assessment on the joint estate and Rs. 2,000 to pay off the prior mortgage on the same property under Exhibit B. It is now found that there was no necessity to borrow either of the sums. Exhibit B was executed for paying off the mortgage under Exhibit C and that again to pay off the mortgage under Exhibit F. No evidence was given to show that there was any necessity to borrow under Exhibit F; and, therefore, Exhibit A also is not shown to be justified by necessity. This finding that Exhibit A was not proved to have been executed for any necessary purposes of the joint family was not seriously contested before us. The appellant has based his claim to make Exhibit A binding on the 2nd defendant on the ground that it was executed by his father for 'antecedent debts'. That a mortgage interest can be created on joint property by the father alone, so as to bind the son, to pay off his antecedent debts is not disputed. But the question is, whether the consideration for which Exhibit A was executed can be held to be 'antecedent debts'. As regards the Rs. 1,000 it is not clear whether there was a debt at all before Exhibit A, and whether the moneys were not paid as consideration for the mortgage itself; the alleged paddus were not produced at all. We must take it that plaintiff has not established the existence of any debts for Rs. 1,000 antecedent in time to and dissociated in fact from the mortgage sued on, and, therefore, as laid down by the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) his claim to enforce Exhibit A on that ground against the son to the extent of Rs. 1,000 fails. The question, whether the previous mortgages should not be treated as antecedent debts is a more difficult one. As stated already, Exhibit A was partly to pay off Exhibit B, and that again to pay off Exhibit C which was to pay off Exhibit F. They are all mortgages on the same joint family property; Exhibits A and B were in favour of plaintiff; but Exhibits C and F were in favour of third parties. If any of these deeds created a valid charge on the son's share as having been executed for an antecedent debt itself, the subsequent ones no doubt will also be binding to the extent that they were executed for paying off such a valid charge. It is not shown that there was any antecedent debt to pay off which Exhibit F was executed; but the argument has been that each prior mortgage was an antecedent debt for the one next in time. This argument must fail under the recent ruling of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). Their Lordships make it clear that a debt borrowed by the father on the security of the joint family estate cannot be treated as a debt of the father within the meaning of the doctrine in question. They say: "In their Lordships' opinion these expressions, which have been the subject of so much difference of legal opinion, do not give any countenance to the idea that the joint family estate can be effectively sold, or charged in such a manner as to bind the issue of the father, except where the sale or charge has been made... to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. The exception being allowed as in the state of authorities it must be, it appears to their Lordships to apply, and to apply only, to the case where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immoveable assets which do not personally belong to him, but are joint family property." Their Lordships observed in an earlier part of their judgment, "this (that is, the doctrine of the validity of mortgages or sales by the father for antecedent debts against his sons) being an exception from a general and sound principle, their Lordships are of opinion that the exception should not be extended and should be very carefully guarded." There cannot be any doubt on their language that they meant to restrict the doctrine to cases of antecedent debts borrowed on the father's sole responsibility with no obligation on the joint family or on its properties. We are bound to follow this expression of opinion which is quite clear, as pointed out by Mr. Ramesam, and we cannot consider any arguments about its correctness.

The lower Court's finding that Exhibit A is not binding on the 2nd defendant's share of the property must, therefore, be accepted.

AGENT, G. I. P. RAILWAY V. KARAYA LAL.

The 1st defendant, the father, being himself the executant of Exhibit A, the liability of his half-share in the plaint property is not disputed. His death after the decree in the District Court cannot in any way affect the liability. Recitals in Exhibit A are good evidence against its executant and as there is no proof that such recitals are false, the claim must be taken to be proved against the father. There must be a mortgage decree as prayed for, with the variation that only half the plaint property will be made liable.

I agree to the order proposed by my learned brother.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), ss. 76, 80—Suit against Railway Company for compensation for loss of goods—Burden of proof—Goods carried over two Railways—Decree against both, legality of.

Under section 76 of the Railways Act a plaintiff suing a Railway Company for compensation for loss of goods has ordinarily only to prove the loss. Thereupon it is for the Railway Company to show that the loss occurred under circumstances which exempt a bailee from responsibility for the loss, or it may rely upon a special contract exempting it from liability. [p. 295, col. 1.]

Where, however, a risk-note exempts the Railway Company from all liability except in certain specified circumstances, the plaintiff can only succeed if he establishes that his case comes within those exceptions. [p. 295, col. 1.]

Under section 80 of the Railways Act a decree can be passed against a Railway Company to whom the goods were not entrusted for carriage, only if it is proved that the loss occurred while the goods were in the custody of that Company. In no case can a decree be passed against both the Companies under that section. [p. 295, col. 2.]

Application for revision of the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Saugor, dated the 15th December 1915.

Mr. P. Lobo, for the Applicants.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—This is an application for revision under section 25 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act. The plaintiffs who are partners sued the two defendant Railway Companies for compensation for the loss of 9 tins of Ghee consigned from Saugor for delivery at Calcutta. The defendants rely upon a risk-note in Form H approved by the Governor-General in Council under section 72 (2) (b) of the Indian Railways Act, and signed by one of the plaintiffs on behalf of the firm. No evidence has been given as to how the loss occurred. The lower Court has decreed the plaintiffs' claim against both the Companies.

The risk-note recites that in consideration of special reduced rates, the plaintiffs agree and undertake to hold the G. I. P. Railway Administration and all other Railway Administrations, working in connection therewith, harmless and free from all the responsibility for any loss, destruction, or deterioration of or damage to all or any of such consignments from any cause whatever, except for the loss of a complete consignment or of one or more complete packages forming part of a consignment due either to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or to theft by or to the wilful neglect of its servants: provided the term wilful neglect be not held to include fire, robbery from a running train or any unforeseen event or accident. The lower Court has found that the loss was due to pilfering on the part of the Railway servants. There is not an iota of evidence, direct or indirect, to justify such a finding. This is a pure conjecture on the part of the Small Cause Court, and must be ignored. The case must be decided upon a consideration of the burden of proof upon the pleadings. The plaintiffs rely on section 76 of the Railway Act, which runs as follows:—

"In any suit against a Railway Administration for compensation for loss, destruction or deterioration of animals or goods delivered to a Railway Administration for carriage by Railway, it shall not be necessary for the plaintiffs to prove how the loss, destruction or deterioration was caused." The section is very general in terms. But I think that ordinarily the plaintiffs have only to prove the loss. Thereupon it is for the Railway Company to show that the loss occurred under circumstances which exempt a bailee from responsibility for the loss, or the Railway Company may rely upon a special contract exempting them from liability. In the present case, the defendants have not attempted to explain how the loss occurred. But they have relied upon the risk note, the terms of which have been already given above. Now the risk-note exempts the defendants from all liability except in certain specified circumstances. The plaintiffs can, in my opinion, only succeed, if they establish that their case comes within those exceptions. This view is in accordance with the judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Sheo Barat Ram v. Bengal and North-Western Railway Company (1). Fletcher, J., in East Indian Railway Company v. Nilkanta Roy (2) expresses a similar opinion, though the case was actually decided on a different ground. Under section 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, every Railway and Canal Company shall be liable for the loss of or injury to animals or to goods occasioned by the neglect or default of such Company, or its servants, notwithstanding any notice, condition or declaration made and given by such Company contrary thereto. Erle, C. J., in Harrison v. London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Company (3) speaking of this section, says: "It creates a liability for loss of, or injury to, a thing, not howsoever caused, but occasioned by the neglect or default of the Company, the contest being whether a Company could exempt themselves from liability for misconduct. Under this construction the Statute would only come into operation where, in an action for the loss of or injury to a thing carried, the defence should be a condition exempting from liability. Then if the plaintiff showed that the loss of or injury to the thing was occasioned by the neglect or default of the defendant, the condition would be void."

That is no doubt an interpretation of an English Statute, and here we are concerned with the form of contract sanctioned by the Governor-General in Council in pursuance of a Statute. It seems to me that it was for the plaintiffs to prove that the loss occurred under circumstances which would make the defendants liable under the special contract.

The lower Court in passing a joint decree against both the Railway Companies has misunderstood the provisions of section 80 of the Indian Railways Act. That section authorises the plaintiffs to sue the G. I. P. Railway Company as the Company to whom the goods were delivered, but as there is no proof that the loss occurred whilst the goods were in the custody of the East Indian Railway Company, no decree could be passed against that Company. In no case can a decree be passed against both the Companies. The decree of the lower Court is set aside and the suit is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—This appeal arises out of an application for Probate of the Will of one Bhayaharini Debi, dated the 2nd Agrahan 1288.

By her Will she appointed her husband's brother's sons Girindra and Harendra, her daughter Lambodari and her husband Tara Nath, her executors. It was also provided in the Will that Sankar Nath (the appellant), who was the son of another brother of Tara Nath, when he attained majority, would be able to act as executor: and that in case Tara Nath, was willing and able to act as sole executor, he would be entitled to do so. Bhayaharini died two days after the execution of the Will: and as Tara Nath was not willing to apply for Probate, Girindra, Harendra and Lambodari applied for, and obtained, Probate in January 1882 and went on administering the estate until April 1888 when Tara Nath having applied for Probate, he was appointed executor.

In the year 1893, Girindra, Harendra and Narendra as also Sankar Nath and his two minor brothers represented by their mother were called upon to state whether they would accept the bequest in their favour, which consisted of certain immovable property subject to an annuity of Rs. 2,400 a year in favour of Lambodari. Girindra, Harendra and Narendra filed a petition in Court giving up the legacies. In 1894, there was an agreement between Tara Nath and her daughter Lambodari and daughter's son Mohini Mohan under which Lambodari and her son gave up their right to certain properties and also the annuity given to her under the Will, and Tara Nath gave certain properties to her absolutely. Tara Nath died in 1908, and in 1910 Girindra and Harendra applied for Probate. Notice was served upon Sankar and he stated that he could not apply for Probate owing to ill health but that he would do so later on.

It appears that after the death of Bhayaharini, Tara Nath married a second wife and had a son Baroda Bhusan, who died sometime before 1910 leaving a widow Biddutlata, who is the respondent before us. In August 1910 Biddutlata, who was a minor, filed an application through her father for revocation of the Probate granted to Girindra and Harendra and the grant was accordingly revoked.

Then the present application was made by Sankar on the 9th March 1894 for the Probate of the Will of Bhayaharini. The application has been refused by the Court below and Sankar Nath has appealed to this Court.

The testatrix died more than 35 years ago, and presumably the estate has been fully administered. But it was contended on behalf of the applicant in the Court below as well as in this Court that there were certain debts and legacies unpaid, and that it was necessary to grant administration to manage the properties dedicated for deba sheba provided for in the Will of Bhayaharini.

As regards the debts, it appears that there was a mortgage bond executed by Bhayaharini on the 25th Falgun 1283. The mortgagee obtained a decree against Tara Nath apparently as executor. On the 1st Ashar 1311 Tara Nath mortgaged certain properties in lieu of the debt due under the mortgage decree obtained by the creditor, asserting his own right to the properties, presumably based upon the ekrar with Lambodari. The properties mortgaged appear to have formed part of the estate left by Bhayaharini, but Tara Nath took over the liability of the debt upon himself and the creditors chose to take the properties to which Tara Nath asserted his own right, as security. In these circumstances, we do not think that a fresh Probate should be granted on the fresh ground.

Then as to the legacies under the Will, we have seen that Harendra, Girindra and Narendra refused to accept the bequest burdened with the annuity in favour of Lambodari. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that there is no evidence that notice was served upon Sankar. On the other hand, we were referred on behalf of the respondent to a finding of the District Judge in a previous revocation case as showing that Sankar had been served with notice; and it is also contended on her behalf that Sankar having in 1897 stated in his deposition that Tara Nath was in possession and had got his own name registered as proprietor, any claim for the bequest was barred by limitation. But these questions cannot be gone into by the Probate Court and we do not think that we should consider them. It appears that specific property or rather a share in a certain specific property was bequeathed to Sankar and his brothers, and they can enforce the right against the persons in possession if they have any subsisting right. We do not think it necessary or proper to grant Probate 35 years after the death of the testatrix in order that Sankar may get the property bequeathed to him, when the genuineness of the Will and the right of the parties under the Will have been established by the grant of Probate previously made.

The last point relates to deba sheba and the contention is that the sheba is to be carried on by the executors. This contention was raised in another appeal to this Court arising out of the application made by Biddutlata for revocation of the Probate granted to Girindra and Harendra Nath Mookerji. Mr. Justice Coxe in disposing of that contention observed as follows:—"As regards the idol it is argued that the sheba has to be performed for ever and that consequently the estate cannot have been completely administered. It appears to us that this argument amounts to reductio ad absurdum. The Will provides that: 'If any of the aforesaid executors died, his successive male descendants will be able to act as executors.' But it is impossible to hold that the estate can never be completely administered and that the heirs of the executors will be entitled to apply for Probate of this Will till the end of time. The appellants held the Probate of the Will for seven years. They had full opportunities for making all necessary arrangements for the sheba of the idol. In Ranjit Singh v. Jagannath Prosad Gupta (1), the executor had been empowered to appoint a Shebait and had failed to exercise that power. But in the present case all that was done was to leave certain property to certain idols, and there is nothing to show that the idols are not in the full enjoyment of the property." Vide Respondent's Book, page 51.

We agree with those observations and also with the observations made by Brett, J., as to the position and duties of an executor in Taran Singh Hazari v. Ramratan Tewari (2). "The position and duties of an executor in this country are not very well understood, and considerable confusion exists as to duties of the executor, in administering the estate. The duties of the executor are to administer the estate of the deceased only so far and so long as to enable him to carry out the terms of the Will of which he is executor. After the property has ceased to be the estate of the deceased and has become the property of the residuary legatee under the Will, the executor as such has no authority to manage the estate on his behalf. Under the Will, the beneficial interest in the property vested in the minor as soon as the testator died, and Gouri Debi was appointed as executrix to manage the property till the minor attained majority. In describing her as executrix for this purpose, there has, in our opinion, been a confusion or misinterpretation of the term 'executrix.' What was intended appears to us to be that she should as executrix administer the estate and see that the terms of the Will were carried out, and, this being done, that she should manage the property covered by the Will, not as executrix under the Will and administratrix of the deceased's estate, but as manager for the minor till he attained majority. The intention clearly was to appoint her to be manager of the minor's estate. We think that in interpreting the Will, we must have regard not merely to the words used but to the evident intention of the testator."

We think under the circumstances that it is not necessary to grant Probate, for the administration of the estate as the estate really does not require what is technically meant by 'administration.' If there is any controversy between the parties as to the Shebaitship of the disputed property, they must seek for a decision in a title suit framed for the purpose. In this view of the case, it is unnecessary to consider whether the appellant had any locus standi to make the application for Probate.

The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs, five gold mohurs.

JUDGMENT.—The two questions raised for our decision in this case are: (1) Whether an appeal lay to the lower Appellate Court and (2) whether Miscellaneous Petition No. 178 of 1912 contains a sufficient acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act to give a fresh starting point for 1st respondent's application.

The 1st plaintiff sued to recover the amount due to him under a simple mortgage bond by sale of the property mortgaged. On 27th October 1910 a preliminary mortgage decree was passed in his favour giving defendants time till 27th April 1911 to pay the amount found due. Money was not so paid, and the present application out of which the civil miscellaneous second appeal before us arises was filed by the 1st respondent on 16th September 1914 under Order XXXIV, rule 5, clause (2), for a final decree for sale. The 1st Court dismissed the application as barred by limitation under Article 181 of the Limitation Act. On appeal the lower Appellate Court reversed that order and has passed a final decree. The 1st defendant has appealed to us against that decision.

On the first question raised, the appellant is right in his contention that the order cannot be treated as one under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, in execution of the preliminary decree. It is an order in the suit itself. The effect of the order is to dismiss the plaintiffs' suit so far as it prayed for the realisation of the mortgage money by sale of the mortgaged property. It is a final adjudication on that part of the plaintiffs' case so far as the Munsif's Court is concerned, and, therefore, falls within the definition of decree under section 2, Civil Procedure Code. A formal decree was drawn up by the Munsif dismissing the petition, but it did not expressly dismiss the suit for sale. This, however, seems immaterial as the effect of the order was to so dismiss. In Suppu Nayakan v. Peru- mal Chetty (1) this Court held that an order declaring that a suit had abated because the legal representative of the deceased defendant had not been brought on record in time was a decree and appealable as such, though no formal decree dismissing the suit had been drawn up. The principle of that decision applied to the present case. If the plaintiffs' application had been allowed by the Munsif and a final decree passed, there can be no doubt that an appeal would have lain against it. It would be an anomalous position if we were to hold that an appeal does not lie where the application is refused. The ruling of the Full Bench in Mudho Ram v. Nihal Singh (2) shows that appeals are allowed in that Province from such orders as appeals from decrees in suits. We think that is the right view and that the appeal to the lower Appellate Court was a competent one under section 96 of the Civil Procedure Code.

On the question of limitation it is now settled that Article 181 applies to an application under Order XXXIV, rule 6, clause (2); see Nimmala Mahankali v. Kallakuri Subba Rao (3), and it is clear that section 19 of the Limitation Act also applies. The question then to be decided is whether there is a sufficient acknowledgment in the present case. Miscellaneous Petition No. 178 of 1912, relied on by the plaintiffs as containing the necessary acknowledgment, was put in by the mortgagor for obtaining an adjournment of the sale of the mortgaged properties in Court auction. It should be explained that, at one stage of the proceedings in this suit, the Court had treated the first decree as an executable decree and had ordered sale of the properties. It was during the time that this view was in force that Miscellaneous Petition No. 178 of 1912 was filed. Subsequently the Court ruled that a final decree should be obtained before execution and that order has now become final between the parties, so that no question about the executability of the 1st decree itself having become res judicata arises. In Miscellaneous Petition No. 178 of 1912 the 1st defendant says: "The date of sale in auction has been fixed for the 17th of this month. I have applied for extension of time till the re-opening of the Court to pay the plaintiff the decree amount. Plaintiff has also consented. I pray that the Court may be pleased to pass orders directing that the auction to be held on the 17th instant may be stopped and the sale may be adjourned till the re-opening of the Court without issuing any further sale proclamation". There can be no doubt that the mortgagor clearly acknowledges by it plaintiffs' right to the decree amount and their right to realise it by sale of the suit properties. Appellants' Vakil, however, urges that such an acknowledgment is not sufficient to save the present application and that the acknowledgment must expressly be of the right to apply for a final decree, and he relies on Andiappa Chetty v. Devarajulu Naidoo (4). Under section 19 the acknowledgment of liability must be "in respect of the right" in respect to which the application is made. What then is that right in the present case? Is it the right to apply for a final decree as appellant contends, or the right to realise the decree amount by sale of the mortgaged properties through Court as the respondent argues? The substantial right the plaintiff has is the latter; his application to Court is only for obtaining a final decree to enable him to enforce that right. The Privy Council has laid down in Sukhamoni Chowdhurani v. Ishan Chunder Roy (5) that it is not required that an acknowledgment within the Statute shall specify every legal consequence of the thing acknowledged. Similarly the right to take legal steps for enforcing the right itself need not be expressly acknowledged, if the right itself is acknowledged. The language of section 19 is clear on the point that the right itself should be acknowledged, and not the right to apply. In Venkatrav Bapu v. Bijesing Vithalsing (6) an application for the postponement of the sale under a mortgage decree, which said the mortgagor would pay the amount of the decree, was held to contain a sufficient acknowledgment to give a fresh starting point for the plaintiff's subsequent application to execute the decree. The only difference between that case and the present one is that here the application is to get a final decree before applying for execution; this does not seem to be a material difference in this connection. The acknowledgment of plaintiffs' right to sell the properties in Court auction involves an acknowledgment of their right to get the final decree for the purpose.

We think the Subordinate Judge is right in holding that there was a sufficient acknowledgment in this case. The respondents' Vakil has not attempted to support the Subordinate Judge's view on the question of waiver and on the question of previous execution applications giving fresh starting points for limitation under Article 181, which are obviously wrong. His decree is, however, right and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 161 (a)—Incumbrance, meaning of—Interest of purchaser of portion of tenancy, whether incumbrance.

The interest of the purchaser of a portion of a tenancy is not an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which the purchaser of the tenancy in execution of a rent decree would have to annul under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. An incumbrance implies a limitation of the rights of the tenant, and not a total extinction of them.

Appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 14th July 1916, modifying that of the Munsif, Additional Court at Jangipur, dated the 15th July 1915.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs arising out of a suit brought to recover a plot of land measuring 1 bigha 14 cottahs. Plaintiffs were the landlords and they purchased the land in execution of a rent decree obtained by them against their tenant Bandia Bewa. It is said that Bandia Bewa had sold 5 cottahs of the land to defendant No. 2. The question is whether that creates an incumbrance which the purchasers would have to annul. The learned Subordinate Judge relied upon the case of Ohundra Sakai v. Kalli Prosanno Chuckerbutty (1) and held that it was an incumbrance. He also referred to the case of Jogeshwar Mozumdar v. Abed Mahomed Sirkar (2). Those cases, however, have been distinguished in more recent cases. In Tmizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (3) the case last cited was distinguished and it was held that an incumbrance must imply a limitation of the rights of the tenant and not a total extinction of them. In the case of Abdul Rahman Chowdhuri v. Ahmadar Rahman (4) the same view was taken. That was a case of sale of a portion of a putni tenure; but otherwise it was indistinguishable from the present case. We think that these recent decisions should be followed and that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be supported. The most recent case of Abdul Rahman Chowdhuri v. Ahmadar Rahman (4) does not seem to have been brought to his notice. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

It is not open to him to defeat the law of limitation by issuing an abortive notice of the same character shortly before the institution of the suit. Such a proceeding cannot bring the suit within time if the right has already lapsed.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 7th March 1918, modifying that of the Munsif, Musafir-khana (Sultanpur), dated the 14th September 1917.

Mr. Fakhruddin Hasan, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff appellant sued for a declaration that the defendants had no proprietary or under-proprietary rights in the plots in dispute. The Court of first instance dismissed the claim. The lower Appellate Court upheld that decree in regard to three of the plots, on the ground that the claim with regard thereto was barred by limitation and discharged it in regard to the 4th plot, holding that the defendants had proprietary or under-proprietary rights therein.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant contends that the right to sue accrued to the plaintiff when the notice issued by him to eject the defendants was cancelled in March 1916. But as a previous notice to the same effect had been issued by the plaintiff in 1905 and cancelled by the Revenue Court on the ground that the defendants were more than ordinary tenants, the right to file a suit to challenge that order accrued in 1905 and the present claim was, therefore, barred by time. It was not open to the plaintiff to defeat the law of limitation by issuing an abortive notice of the same character shortly before the institution of his suit. Such a proceeding cannot bring the case within time if his right has already lapsed. The plaintiff was not in possession constructively or otherwise, and as the Court below has pointed out, his title, so far as it is inconsistent with the order cancelling his notice, ceased to exist after the expiry of six years from that date.

The appeal is, therefore, rejected.

The expressions 'kayam' and 'saswatham' occurring in lease-deeds ordinarily import a permanent tenancy. Even if literal effect is not given to these words so as to involve as a necessary inference a permanent tenancy, the surrounding circumstances may be looked at and a permanent tenancy may be inferred from the use of these words. [p. 302, col. 1.]

Where a deed of lease is a renewal of prior documents in respect of which a permanent tenancy was judicially upheld, the presumption may be made that a permanent tenure was intended to be conferred by the later document. [p. 302, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Salem, in Original Suit No. 13 of 1915.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Salem in a suit brought by a Mittadar to eject the defendants, who claim to hold under a permanent lease.

Two questions have been argued before us: (1) whether the defendants hold on a permanent tenure; and (2) whether, if they did so hold, they have forfeited their tenure by renouncing their character as lessees by setting up a title in a third person, within the meaning of section 111 (g), of the Transfer of Property Act.

As regards the first point we have been referred to the cases reported as Rajaram v. Narasinga (1), Foulkes v. Muthusami Goundan (2), Venkataramanna v. Venkatapathi Nayani Varu (3) and Rama Iyengar v. Anga Guruswami Ohetti (4), in which the meaning of the words "Saswatham" and "kayam" occurring in leases have been construed. We do not think it necessary again to discuss the meaning of these terms or the correctness of the decision in Rajaram v. Narasinga (1), because it has been abundantly established in later cases that, even if literal effect is not to be given to these words so as to involve as a necessary inference a permanent tenancy, yet the surrounding circumstances may be looked at and a permanent tenancy may be inferred from the use of these words. In the present case, we find that the lease in the suit was a renewal of previous documents, and that previously to the execution of this instrument the lessees had been held to hold on a permanent tenure in the suit of 1819. That consideration, in our opinion, is sufficient to show that it was intended to confer a permanent tenure in favour of the lessees by virtue of Exhibit J in this case. Therefore, on that ground, we agree with the learned Subordinate Judge.

The next question is a somewhat interesting one which has been very ably argued by Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar for the appellant, namely, whether the denial by the present defendants of the title under which the Mittadar claims the whole Mitta in a previous suit, brought by the Mittadar not in respect of the suit land but to recover Jodi in respect of certain Inam lands in the Mitta which were also held by the defendants, is a sufficient setting up by the lessees of a title in a third person to the suit lands. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar has argued that directly and by necessary implication, the written statement in that suit Exhibit G should be held to contain a setting up of the title in a third person to the suit lands. We asked him to cite the strongest cases which he could in support of that proposition and he referred us to Doe d. Davies v. Evans (5), Doe d. Calvert v. Frowd (6); Doe d. Phillips v. Rollings (7). In every one of these cases, the denial of title, whether it was direct or whether it was inferential, was in respect of leasehold premises and there is no case in which a denial of the landlord's title to some other lands has been held to operate as a forfeiture of his title to the suit lands, merely because one thing would logically follow from the other. Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar for the respondents has contended that the denial by the defendants of the Mittadar's right in the suit for the Jodi of the Inam lands is consistent with the plaintiff's having the rights of a lessor in respect of the suit lands which he might have acquired in other ways than by transfer of the Mittadar's title from the plaintiff's predecessor to the plaintiff. The doctrine of forfeiture, which is embodied in section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act, is not one to be extended, and we think we should be extending it if we were to treat the denial in the written statement Exhibit G in this case as a setting up of a title of a third person to the lands in this suit. Hindu Law—Minor—Guardian de facto, powers of—Alienation by guardian to pay off ancestral debts, whether binding on minor.

K. and G. were two Hindu brothers who had executed a mortgage of their joint properties. K. died leaving him surviving as his heiresses two minor daughters who were married, but whose husbands did not assert any claim to the management of their properties. G. with whom the two minor girls were living, acting as the de facto guardian of their property, executed conveyances of portions of the joint properties for paying off the ejmali debts of himself and his deceased brother K.

Held, that the conveyances were binding upon the minors, inasmuch as had they not been executed, the probable result would have been that either the whole of the joint properties would have been endangered or at any rate bigger sacrifices would have been inevitable. [p. 306, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Burdwan, dated the 6th of May 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 3rd Court, at that place, dated the 6th April 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Ram Chandra Mozumdar (with him Babu Gauranga Nath Banerjee for Babu Pro-both Chandra Ghosh), for the Appellants.—My points are:—

(1) What was sold was the right, title and interest of Ganesh in the property and hence so far as the minors' shares in these properties are concerned, they are unaffected.

(2) The next point is that even if it is held that the minors are bound by the debt as originally contracted by their father and if Ganesh paid the whole debt, he might be entitled to have half of the debt from the minors, the debt being the debt due by their father; but that is a different thing from whether by the conveyances the minors' shares were affected or not.

(3) The third point is that if legal necessity is pleaded by Ganesh for which he mortgaged the property he must prove that necessity. Simply showing that the transaction was for the benefit of the minor won't do. Trevelyan on Hindu Law, page 131, referred to.

The original mortgage was substituted by two kut kobalas and one kistibandh. In the mortgage, only $9\frac{1}{4}$ bighas of property were mortgaged and in the kut kobalas also $9\frac{1}{4}$ bighas were mortgaged. If Ganesh chooses to realise half of the debt from the property of the minors he can do so by regular suit, but this suit is framed in a different way. The finding is that it is for the actual benefit of the minors that the property was sold.

The case of Mohanund Mondul v. Nafur Mondul (1), referred to by the Subordinate Judge, is hardly any authority where de facto minors are involved and not de jure minors. I beg to invite your Lordships' attention to Balwant Singh v. Rev. Rockwell Clancy (2) in support of the view that Ganesh, the defendant No. 1, could not be de facto guardian-in-law of the minors, as the husbands of the minors were both alive at the time the said kobalas were executed. That being so, what actually passed was Ganesh's entire share and not the share of the minors; Balwant Singh v. Rev. Rockwell Clancy (2) referred to and also Mansaram

ISHANI DAS V. RAJENDRA NATH JASH.

Das v. Ahmad Hosain (3). Exhibit A is the conveyance of jamai land. By that Ganesh conveys the right, title and interest he had to the land. There is not a single word in the deed about the minors or that Ganesh was acting on behalf of the minors. In the other two deeds (Exhibit G and Exhibit J) also nowhere is anything mentioned about the minors.

Babu Bipin Behari Ghosh, II (with him Babu Narendra Nath Chowdhury), for the Respondents.—The money was borrowed to satisfy a debt which the minors were bound to pay off, as their father was a debtor. Krista Chandra v. Ratan Ram Pal (4) referred to. What is necessity? If interest on the debt increases and if the manager sees that part of the mortgaged property is required to be sold in order to satisfy the debt, that is necessity; Krista Chandra v. Ratan Ram Pal (4) referred to. Here there was such necessity and hence the property was sold; otherwise there was no other means of paying off the debt. Then again in Mohanund Mondul v. Nafur Mondul (1) it is laid down that a manager can part with the property for legal necessity and for the benefit of the minors. In this case there was absolute necessity for the sale. So far as the contention of the other side is concerned, viz., that the minors' interest was not sold as nowhere the names of the minors are mentioned, I beg to refer to Judoonath Chuckerbutty v. Mr. James Tweedie (5). There it was held that if the vendor intended to sell the whole property that was sufficient. In the deed the recital shows that everywhere Ganesh says that as my brother and I incurred debts and as there is no other means of paying it up, etc.

Trevelyan on Minors, page 163, and Makundi v. Sarabsukh (6), referred to.

In Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammatt Babooee Munraj Koonweree (7) the observation of their Lordships on this point occurs.

The recital is very loosely framed, and where from the surrounding circumstances it may be gathered that the vendor intended to sell the whole property then the whole property would pass by such a conveyance.

As to my friend's remark that a de facto guardian cannot act where there is a de jure guardian, the word de facto guardian applies only when there is a de jure guardian but he does not act and then a de facto guardian can act.

Babu Ram Chandra Mozumdar, for the Appellants, in reply.—If the other side has got any remedy against my client, they can certainly enforce that; but that is a quite different matter from an absolute sale out and out. What I say is that the minors' shares were not at all actually sold. There is no doubt that Ganesh was actually dealing with his own property.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The facts of the case from which these appeals arise are as follows. Two brothers, Kartik Rakshit and Ganesh Rakshit, borrowed Rs. 500 on mortgage from the wife of one Asakrit Chandra Chowdhuri in Chaitra 1313 B. S. in order to pay off debts due to various creditors. They mortgaged all their property in this deed. In the following year Kartik died, leaving two daughters who are still minors and are the plaintiffs. In Sraban 1317 B. S. no part of the debt on the mortgage had been paid off and Ganesh entered into a fresh arrangement; he executed two kat kobalas in favour of the same lady, one for Rs. 100 and covering 2 bighas of land, and another for Rs. 400 in respect of 7 bighas and a quarter and a kistibandi bond for the sum of Rs. 256. By the kat kobalas the principal of the original mortgage was satisfied, and the kistibandi bond was for the unpaid interest that had accrued. Under the terms of the kat kobalas the creditor was to remain in possession until the sums mentioned were paid to her, and from the usufruct she was to pay the rent due to the landlord, and to take the balance as interest. Under the kistibandi bond Ganesh was to pay Rs. 64 per annum from 1318 to 1321. In 1318 and 1319 Ganesh executed three conveyances, selling 3 bighas for Rs. 150 to the contesting defendants in Suit No. 97 on Jaist 13th 1318, nine bighas and a quarter for Rs. 600 to the contesting defendants in Suit No. 69, and one cotta and a quarter for Rs. 119 to the contesting defendants in Suit No. 98 on Chaitra 8th, 1319. With the purchase-money he paid off the sums due under the kat kobalas and the kistibandi bond.

ISHANI DASÍ v. RAJENDRA NATH JASH.

His nieces were married in 1316 and 1317, and they have brought three suits through their husbands for a declaration that the conveyances executed by Ganesh did not affect their eight-annas interest, and for recovering possession of their share as successors-in-interest of the deceased Kartik.

The Courts below have agreed in dismissing the suits and the plaintiffs have appealed.

In the first Court it was urged that the transactions were fraudulent, but that contention has been given up. The points that have been put forward in this Court are as follows :—

(1) Ganesh did not purport to convey more than his own right, title and interest, and, therefore, the conveyances could not affect the plaintiffs' interests.

(2) If it be held that the plaintiffs were bound by the debt contracted by their father Kartik, and if Ganesh paid the whole, he might recover from the plaintiffs their share in the amount paid to the creditor, but that is a very different thing from selling the plaintiffs' share without authority.

(3) Even if Ganesh purported to act as guardian of his minor nieces, and in that capacity to sell their share, it must be shown that he did so under the stress of necessity, and it is not enough to show that the transactions were for the benefit of the minors.

On the first point the learned Subordinate Judge says, "if the documents are liberally construed, it would appear clear that Ganesh sold the 16-annas interest of himself and his minor nieces for paying off the ejmali debts of himself and their father Kartik." All the conveyances speak of the joint debt which had to be paid off if the property was to be saved, and except in one of them there is no suggestion that Ganesh was trying to discharge the debt at the expense of his own share only. The exception is Exhibit H, the conveyance to Harimani Dasi, in which the interest sold is 'my share' in the homestead. It is conceded that this conveyance did not affect the minors, but here I refer to it only as showing that the other conveyances were framed differently. I think the view taken by the lower Appellate Court is correct.

The second point need not be discussed. Ganesh might have followed another course, but that will not matter if the Courts below are right in holding that he was acting under the force of necessity.

The third point is the one on which most stress was laid. It was found by the first Court, and it is not disputed now, that the plaintiffs were living with Ganesh when the conveyances were executed, and it is conceded that he was managing the property. The plaintiffs' husbands were their natural guardians, but there is no reason to suppose that they had ever asserted any claim to the management of the property. It seems to me clear that Ganesh was de facto guardian of the minors' property, and it must have been as such that he purported to convey their interest by the kobalas. The question then becomes, whether under the circumstances he was legally entitled to make the sales. It appears from the record that the original mortgage covered six cottas Lakhiraj bastu with the buildings, four cottas of rent paying bastu, and over twenty-four bighas of jamdi land. In four years the interest had reached the sum of Rs. 256 and not an anna had been paid. If Ganesh had allowed the mortgage to run on, in a few years the whole of the family property would have been swallowed up. His first step, the kat kobalas and the kistibandi bond, was obviously a wise one. After that there was no urgency about the land transferred under the kat kobalas, but no payment had been made under the kistibandi bond. It is urged that this bond made no provision for the whole sum becoming payable on one default: the wording is rather ambiguous, but I think that stipulation is in the bond, and in any case there was a provision for compound interest at the rate of one rupee eight annas per centum per mensem. Under the bond the ancestral property and dwelling house were given as security. Looking at these facts it seems to me that the position of Ganesh was little less than desperate, and that the course he took was that of a prudent administrator. It is said, however, that though the sales may have been beneficial to the minors, they were not compelled by necessity, and, therefore, the plaintiffs are not bound by them. This sharp distinction between the effect of benefit and the effect of necessity is not warranted by the authorities. In Huncomanpersaud Panday's case (7) their Lordships of the Privy Council say: "It (i.e., the power of a manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his own) can only be exercised rightly in a case of need or for the benefit of the estate The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted, or the benefit to be conferred upon it in the particular instance, is the thing to be regarded." Mr. Mayne in his book speaks of the minor being bound "if under the circumstances the step taken was necessary, proper or prudent." Reference may also be made to Sir Ernest Trevelyan's remarks on page 154 of his book "The Law Relating to Minors" (IVth Edition) and to the decision of a Bench of this Court reported as Krista Chandra v. Ratan Ram Pal (4). Applying the principles laid down by these authorities, I think the question can be determined in the present instance by asking what would have been the probable result if Ganesh had not taken the steps which he did take. In my opinion the answer must be that the whole property would have been endangered, at any rate that bigger sacrifices would have become inevitable. That being so, I think the Courts below were right in holding that the sales were binding on the minors.

With regard to the sale to Harimani Dasi, the learned Munsif points out that the plaintiffs have $2\frac{3}{4}$ out of the 4 cottas, so they are not entitled to ask for any part of the $1\frac{1}{4}$ cottas. This is correct.

Muhammadan Law—Minor—Mother, power of, to deal with minor's estate.

Under the Muhammadan Law the Courts should uphold the acts of a mother in dealing with her minor son's estate, provided they are to the manifest advantage of the minor or for urgent or imperative necessity. [p. 307, col. 2]

Where, however, a Muhammadan died leaving a widow and a minor son with a good and profitable estate on which they could live with comfort, and the widow nevertheless constantly borrowed small sums at exorbitant rates of interest for domestic purposes:

Held, that the debts having been incurred neither for the benefit of the minor nor for urgent or imperative necessity, they could not be held to be binding on the minor's estate. [p. 308, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 13th August 1914.

Khwaja Feroze-ud-Din Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mehr Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a money-lender sued two brothers, Kapura and Ghulam, the latter of whom is a minor, on a balance due on a book account which began in Sambat 1956. The original account was in the name of the father of the defendants and was continued in the names of his widow and his three sons. The eldest son, Nura, has executed a bond on account of his share of the debt and the present suit for Rs. 1,700 was brought against the other two sons. The first Court gave the plaintiff a decree in full against both defendants. As far as the minor defendant was concerned, it held that the debts had mostly been incurred by his mother for household necessities and that his estate was, therefore, liable. The lower Appellate Court upheld this decision, merely stating that the items appeared to have been taken for household necessities. Against this decision the defendants have put in a second appeal, Ghulam contesting the decision on the ground that his mother had no power to bind his estate and Kapura asking merely for instalments.

As far as the case against Ghulam is concerned, the only question before us is whether his mother, acting as his so-called de facto guardian, was competent to raise the debts in question so as to bind her minor son. Many authorities on the legal point involved were quoted before us and as the power of a guardian de jure or de facto under the Muhammadan Law to bind minor's estate appears to be frequently misunderstood, it is advisable to refer to some of the most important recent decisions on the question. The Calcutta High Court in Moyna Bibi v. Banku Behari Biswas (1) held that under Muhammadan Law a mother, not being a de facto guardian of her minor son, had no power to bind his estate in any way and that any acts by her to this effect were entirely void. The same Court has, however, in later decisions considerably modified this view. In Mafazzal Hosain v. Basid Sheikh (2) it was held that though the mother of a Muhammadan minor is not the guardian of his property, yet if she deals with his estate her acts, if for his benefit, should be upheld. Another decision on page 65 of the same volume [Ram Charan Sanyal v. Anukul Chandra Acharjya (3)] is to a similar effect. The same matter has been dealt with at length by a distinguished Muhammadan Judge of the Madras High Court in Hyderman Kutti v. Syed Ali (4). After referring to authorities it was held that the de facto guardian of a Muhammadan minor can alienate his estate in cases of urgent and imperative necessity or do other acts on behalf of the minor which must necessarily be beneficial. The learned Judge proceeded to lay down that there is no substantial difference between the power of a de jure and a de facto guardian, though cases existed where the powers exercisable by a lawful guardian were not within the competence of other persons. The question in that case was whether a sale by a Muhammadan mother of her minor son's property to find money for the expenses of his sister's marriage or for the discharge of family debts or for family purposes was a justifying cause. It was held that the sale of the minor's property for such purposes was not for his benefit and was, therefore, invalid. The Allahabad High Court in Majidan v. Ram Narain (5) has interpreted the powers of a de facto Muhammadan guardian in a similar manner. The law on the subject has been summed up in Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Volume II, 4th Edition, page 611, to the effect that if the acts of a mother in dealing with her minor son's estate are to the manifest advantage of the minor the Court should uphold them. To this we might add the dictum of Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim reported in Hyderman Kutti v. Syed Ali (4) that the acts of a mother, if they are for urgent or imperative necessity, must be upheld.

In view of the decisions quoted above and the exposition of the validity of a mother's acts in dealing with her minor son's estate, we have to consider whether her acts in the transactions disclosed in the present suit should bind the estate of her minor son, Ghulam. His father had commenced dealings with the plaintiff in Sambat 1956. He died apparently in the following year, and the first transaction after his death showed a debt of Rs. 112-9-0 principal and Rs. 32-5-6 interest. He left a widow and three sons and one and a half squares of canal-irrigated land on the Gugera Branch. The account was then charged against the name of his eldest son, Nura, and shortly afterwards the name of the widow was also introduced and in Sambat 1962 the name of Kapura, the second son, appeared in the account. In Sambat 1965 Nura's account was separated and his debt was settled by the execution of a separate bond, and the name of Ghulam minor was then inserted in the account. The result of the frequent borrowings and the additions of interest has been that the debt now standing against Kapura and Ghulam alone has increased to Rs. 1,700. It is admitted that the whole business with the plaintiff was conducted by the mother of the minor. The accounts show the frequent borrowings of small sums for apparent household necessities, and under some circumstances it might be held that these borrowings were necessary for the minor's subsistence and that he was, therefore, liable. In the present case, however, the family was left with a good and profitable estate on which it could have lived with comfort. We cannot see, therefore, how it was in any way beneficial for the minor for his mother to borrow constantly small sums at exorbitant rates for domestic purposes. There was neither any manifest benefit to the minor nor does any urgent or imperative necessity appear to have existed. We, therefore, accept his appeal and dismiss the suit against him.

The appeal of Kapura for instalments was little pressed and his claim to this effect was not raised in the lower Appellate Court. We, therefore, dismiss his appeal.

As for costs, we give Ghulam his costs calculated on half the claim in all Courts. As Kapura's appeal was only for instalments, we see no reason why he should pay costs in this Court. He will pay costs to the plaintiff on half the claim in the lower Courts.

Appeal accepted.

Evidence Act (1 of 1872), s. 32 (5)—Statement by agent of deceased member of family, admissibility of—Principal and agent—Pedigree filed by agent in suit to which principal was party—Presumption.

The statements of the deceased relatives, servants and dependents of a family are as much admissible under section 32, clause (5), of the Evidence Act as the statements of the members of the family, provided they had special means of knowledge requisite to render their statements admissible [p. 309, col. 1.]

In a suit for inheritance the plaintiffs relied upon a pedigree which purported to have been filed in a previous suit by the general agent of one of the parties to that suit. The latter was a member of the family to which the parties in the inheritance suit belonged and he and his general agent were both dead:

Eld, (1) that the presumption was that the general agent must have filed the pedigree under the instructions of his master; [p. 309, col. 1.]

(2) that the pedigree was admissible in the inheritance suit under section 32, clause (5) of the Evidence Act. [p. 309, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated the 1st December 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, Sandila, Hardoi, dated the 22nd May 1917.

Mr. Gopal Sahai, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by certain persons who claimed to be the reversionary heirs of Ganga Bakhsh Singh deceased. They sued for a declaration of their title to the property left by him as their nearest reversioners or in the alternative for the recovery of possession of the said property. The defence was that the defendants were the nearest heirs of the deceased. Both the Courts below found in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed the claim.

In appeal it is contended that the pedigree relied on by the Courts below was inadmissible in evidence, inasmuch as it purported to have been signed and filed on behalf of Balwant Singh by his general agent Rudradat. Balwant Singh was a member of the family to which the parties belong. In 1866 he filed a suit for redemption of a mortgage against Kalyan

MONMOHAN PANDAY v. BIDHU BHUSAN RAY CHOWDHURY.

Singh. The pedigree was then filed which supports the claim of the present plaintiffs. It is difficult to say under what circumstances Radradat signed the pedigree on behalf of his master. It is possible that Balwant Singh might have been illiterate or unable to sign, and it is equally possible that he might have sent his general agent to file it. In any event Balwant Singh being dead, the presumption is that the general agent must have filed it under the instructions of his master. As pointed out in Garuradhwaja Prasad v. Superundhwaja Prasad (1), the statements of the deceased relatives, servants and dependents of the family are as much admissible under section 32, clause (5), of the Indian Evidence Act as the statements of the members of the family, provided they had special means of knowledge requisite to render their statements admissible. The evidence adduced by the defendants was disbelieved by both the Courts below.

The appeal is, therefore, rejected.

Order XXX, rule 4, of the Civil Procedure Code applies only to a case where the suit is brought in the name of the firm. [p. 310, col. 1.]

In a suit where the description of the plaintiffs as given in the plaint was "the proprietors and maliks" of a firm and then the names of the plaintiffs were mentioned, the Court below gave a decree to the plaintiffs and in the decree one B. and other persons were described as the plaintiffs without the addition of the words that they were maliks of the firm. After an appeal from the decree had been filed by the defendant one of the plaintiffs-respondents died, but his legal representatives were not brought on the record within the time allowed by law.

Held, that the decree being in favour of the plaintiffs jointly the appeal could not proceed in the absence of the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff-respondent. [p. 310, col. 1.]

Dr. Sarat Chunder Basak, Babus Jatindra Mohan Ghose and Sib Chander Palit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—We think that the preliminary objection taken to the hearing of the appeal must prevail.

The appeal arises out of a suit to recover money on a hatchitta executed by two persons, named Upendra Nath Banerjee and another, as managing partners of the "Calcutta Hosiery" in favour of Ray Chowdhury and brothers. The suit was instituted, however, by Bidhu Bhusan and several other persons as plaintiffs. In the plaint the description of the plaintiffs was—"The proprietors and maliks of the firm styled: Ray Chowdhury brothers," and then the names of the plaintiffs were mentioned. The Court below gave a decree to the plaintiffs and in the decree the names of Bidhu Bhusan and other persons were described as the plaintiffs without the addition of the words that they were maliks of the firm of Ray Chowdhury Brothers. After the appeal had been filed in this Court, one of the plaintiffs, Dakhina Ranjan, died and his legal representatives were not substituted within the time allowed by law.

It appears that an application was made out of time and that a Rule was issued to show cause why the substitution should not be made though out of time. The Rule, however, was discharged, the result being that the appeal was dismissed as against one of the plaintiffs, the deceased Dakhina Ranjan.

Now, the decree being in favour of six plaintiffs jointly, the appeal cannot proceed in the absence of the legal representatives of one of them.

BUCHANAN V. MALL.

The learned Pleader for the defendants-appellants refers to Order XXX; rule 4, which lays down that notwithstanding anything contained in section 45 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, where two or more persons may sue or be sued in the name of a firm under the foregoing provisions and any of such persons dies, whether before the institution or during the pendency of any suit, it shall not be necessary to join the legal representative of the deceased as a party to the suit. It is contended that the suit was really instituted in the name of the firm of Ray Chowdhury Brothers.

We are unable, however, to take that view. The suit was brought in the names of the particular individuals who were described as plaintiffs, and not in the name of the firm, and this is made clear by the decree that was passed in the case. In the case of Ram Narain Nursing Doss v. Ram Ohunder Jankee Loll (1) in a suit by surviving partners for the recovery of a partnership debt which became due during the life of a deceased partner, the representatives of such deceased partner, having regard to section 45 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), were held to be necessary parties. The title of the suit was—Issur Dass and Jugarnath, surviving partners of Nursing Dass deceased who carry on business in 99, Cross Street, Calcutta, in the name and style of Ram Narain Nursing Dass... That appears to be a stronger case than the present. Order XXX, rule 4, does not help the appellants, as that rule applies only to a case where the suit is brought in the name of the firm.

But even if we are to hold that the appeal can proceed in the absence of the representatives of the deceased plaintiff, we do not think that there would be any benefit to the appellants because the representatives of the deceased plaintiff can apply for execution of the entire decree against the defendants as the decree in their favour cannot be touched by us.

Under the circumstances, we think that the appeal must fail and is accordingly dismissed with costs, two gold mohurs, to Dr. Basak's clients. The Deputy Registrar's costs have already been deposited.

GREAVES, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

S. C. MALL—DEFENDANT.

Trading with enemy Royal Proclamation of August 5, 1914—Contract to buy German goods—Goods shipped from Germany before War—Price of goods demanded after outbreak of War and prohibition of trade with enemy—Buyer, whether bound to pay.

Sometime before the outbreak of War A entered into a contract with B. at Rangoon. Under the contract A was (i) to buy certain goods in Germany, (ii) to obtain a contract of affreightment to Rangoon, (iii) to take out a policy of insurance; and (iv) to ship the goods in July 1914. B. on his part agreed to buy those goods from A for a price which was fixed c. i. f. Rangoon. A performed his part of the contract and on the 12th August 1914 caused to be presented to B for acceptance a bill of exchange covering the price, etc., of the goods and payable ninety days after sight. Along with the bill of exchange were tendered the bill of lading, invoice and insurance note. B refused to accept the bill of exchange as well as the documents of title, inasmuch as the War having broken out on the 4th of August, the ship containing the goods was seized by the Belgian Government and trade with Germany was prohibited by the Royal Proclamation, dated the 5th August 1914:

—Held, (1) that the Royal Proclamation rendered the contract abortive and illegal and so void: [p. 312, col. 1.]

(2) that the effect of the outbreak of the War was that the contract of affreightment was dissolved; [p. 311, col. 2.]

(3) that A was bound to tender and B was entitled to get valid and effective documents by which B could recover what might be lawfully recovered under such documents, but as A did not and could not tender such documents in respect of the contract of affreightment, B. was entitled to refuse to pay against them. [p. 312, col. 1.]

Mr. Olifton, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Mehta, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract whereby plaintiff bought 18 tons of German tool or faggot steel. The price was fixed per ton c. i. f. Rangoon, shipment to be in July 1914. Plaintiff obtained a contract of affreightment by the SS. "Schildturn," whereby the goods were to be shipped and carried from Bremen to Rangoon and the goods were so shipped. Plaintiff also arranged a contract of insurance.

In accordance with the contract plaintiff drew a bill of exchange on defendant payable ninety days after sight with interest added. On the 12th August 1914 plaintiff caused the bill of exchange to be duly presented to the defendant for acceptance through the Mercantile Bank of India, Ltd., and with it were tendered the bill of lading, invoice and insurance note. Defendant refused to accept the bill of exchange and plaintiff now sues him for the price of the goods, etc.

War having broken out on the 4th August 1914, the SS. "Schildturn" was seized by the Belgian Government at Antwerp.

Defendant pleads the Royal Proclamation of the 5th August 1914 and urges that as the bill of lading was a German bill to plaintiff's order the contract has become void. It is not denied that the bill of lading is a German bill of lading. The contract of affreightment was with a German line. Plaintiff urges that he has done all that he had to do under the contract, that the outbreak of War would only affect an executory contract and that the goods, though in a German ship, were to be delivered to a British subject at a British port. He says that the risk thus became the defendant's risk and that he is entitled to be paid.

I have tried the issue as a preliminary issue. I have been referred to certain recent authorities, Duncan, Fox & Co. v. Schrempt & Bonke (1). The decision was affirmed on appeal, Duncan, Fox & Co. v. Schrempt & Bonke (2).

The goods in this case were to be delivered in Germany and further performance of the contract would have involved a trading in goods destined for the German Empire in violation of the Royal Proclamation of the 5th August 1914.

This authority need not be referred to further. The next case is that of Arnhold Karberg & Co. v. Blythe, Green, Jourdain & Co. (3). This involved two contracts for the sale of beans to be shipped from Chinese ports to, Naples and Rotterdam. Payment was to be net cash in London on arrival of the goods at port of discharge in exchange for bills of lading and policies of insurance but not later than three months from date of bills of lading. The beans were shipped in July 1914 on German vessels which on the outbreak of the War entered ports of refuge in the east. At the expiration of the three months the sellers tendered to the buyers the shipping documents, in one case a German bill of lading and an English policy of insurance, in the other both the bill of lading and the policy of insurance were German. The buyers refused the tender and were held entitled to do so. This decision was appealed but the decision was affirmed, Arnhold Karberg & Co. v. Blythe, Green, Jourdain & Co. (4).

This decision was followed by Mr. Justice Beaman in Marshall & Co. v. Naginchand Phulchand (5). Lastly in Cama & Co. v. K. K. Shah (6) of this Court Sir Charles Fox, C. J., took the same view.

Having regard to this mass of authority I need only briefly record my findings, full authority for which can be found in the cases referred to above and in the rulings referred to in them.

By the contract entered into plaintiff undertook to buy the goods, to enter into a contract of affreightment to Rangoon, which will be evidenced by a bill of lading and to take out a proper policy of insurance. The defendant undertook to pay as settled by the contract against these documents. When this has been done the plaintiffs as sellers will drop out, but they must supply defendant with a bill of lading and a policy which are still subsisting and can be enforced. Now here the contract of affreightment was made with a German subject with reference to a German ship and the effect of the outbreak of the War was that the contract of affreightment was dissolved. The result was that the shipper was no longer bound to continue the voyage and there was no force left in the bill of lading by which defendant could compel him to do so or to recompense him.

It is not sufficient to say that the policy of insurance was with an English subject, for defendants are entitled to have the contract carried out by plaintiff before they pay, and that plaintiff could not do.

GAURISHANKAR BALMUKUND v. CHINNUMIYA.

The Royal Proclamation of the 5th August 1914 forbids the obtaining from the German Empire or from any person resident therein any goods, wares or merchandise: it also forbids the trading in any goods, wares or merchandise coming from the said Empire or from any person resident, carrying on business or being therein. If the contract had remained good, the effect would only have been that to pursue it defendant might have had to enter into contractual relations with a German subject or subjects.

The Proclamation, by forbidding trading in goods coming from the German Empire as these did, rendered the contract abortive and illegal and so void. Plaintiff was bound to tender and defendant was entitled to get documents that were valid and effective, documents by which he could recover what might be lawfully recovered under such documents. Plaintiff did not and could not tender such document in respect of the contract of affreightment and this being so, defendants are entitled to refuse to pay against them.

The suit, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Suit dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 320, 325A—Execution of decrees—Transfer of decree affecting immoveable property to Collector—Restriction on power of judgment-debtor to mortgage, extent of.

The incompetence to alienate without the Collector's permission, imposed upon a judgment-debtor by section 325A of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, is absolute and is not limited to the time during which the property is under the Collector's control. Therefore, a mortgage created by a judgmentdebtor in defiance of the prohibition is of no effect even after the property has come back into his hands. [p. 313, col. 2.]

Magniram v. Bakubai Rakhma Lohar, 16 Ind. Cas. 570; 36 B. 510; 14 Bom. L. R. 598, overruled.

Murray v. Murat Singh, 3 N. L. R. 171 at p. 172 and Salu Bai v. Bajat Khan, 42 Ind. Cas. 200; 13 N. L. R. 130 (F. B.), approved.

Appeal from the decision in First Appeal No. 15-B of 1912 of the Judicial Commissioner's Court (Mr. Stanyon, A. J. C. and Mr. Batten, A. J. C.) of the Central Provinces, dated the 26th April 1913, affirming that of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti.

FACTS.—The sole question in this appeal was whether a mortgage effected by the owner of immoveable property without the Collector's permission, at a time when such property was under the Collector's control in terms of section 320 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, was valid after the property had been released from the Collector's control. The lower Courts both held that such mortgage was absolutely void. Hence this appeal.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., and Parikh, for the Appellant, submitted that the incompetency to mortgage, imposed upon the judgment-debtor by section 325A of the Civil Procedure Code, must be construed secundum subjectam materiam. The result of sections 320, etc., of the Code was that after the debts, for which the Collector was put in, were discharged, the Collector had no further rights over the property: why then should the judgment-debtor be debarred from mortgaging the residue which would revert to him? A limitation should be placed on the literal words used. We submit that the mortgage is enforceable against the mortgagor himself, once the Collector's management has ceased.

Magniram v. Bakubai Rakhma Lohar (1), Jhabulal Kalar v. Rampershad (2).

Our submission is supported by section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and section 18 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877.

The decision in Murray v. Murat Singh (3), affirmed by a majority in Salu Bai v. Bajat Khan (4), is incorrect: We rely on the dissenting judgment of Mittra, A. J. C., in the latter case.

The mortgagor is estopped from denying that the mortgage was good.

GAURISHANKAR BALMUKUND V. CHINNUMIYA.

[LORD SHAW.—This is the case of a statutory prohibition, not one of the misrepresentation of authority contemplated by section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act.]

[SIR W. PHILLIMORE.—If the Statute is part of public policy, the mortgage should not be allowed to defeat it. There is a close analogy in England—the case of a married woman restrained from anticipation.]

The respondents did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW.—By section 325A of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) it is provided that:—

"So long as the Collector can exercise or perform in respect of the judgment-debtor's immoveable property, or any part thereof, any of the powers or duties conferred or imposed on him by sections 322 to 325 (both inclusive), the judgment-debtor or his representative-in-interest shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate such property or part except with the written permission of the Collector, nor shall any Civil Court issue any process against such property or part in execution of a decree for money."

In the present case the two salient facts are simply these: That in 1891 the Collector of the district came under the Act into possession of the property in question; and that, secondly, while he was still in possession of that property, a mortgage upon it was granted on the 22nd July 1892 by the judgment-debtor. It is now sought to make that mortgage operative in the appellant's favour by reason of this; that the construction, it is alleged, of section 325A is not to be read in the complete and operative sense natural to the words, that is to say, of incompetency to mortgage such property, but must be read with an implied limitation. The limitation suggested is that there still remained in the judgment-debtor a power to mortgage the property so as to become operative over any residue that might arise to the latter after the Collector's regime had ended. It is the fact that the Collector's regime has now ended, but it is also the fact that, pending his regime, namely, on the 22nd July 1892, the mortgage which is now founded upon was granted.

Their Lordships have been referred to authority upon this question. That which is founded on by the appellant particularly is the case of Magniram v. Bakubai Rakhma Lohar (1). Their Lordships are of opinion that that case was erroneously decided. Upon the contrary, the case of Murray v. Murat Singh (3), referred to in the judgment under appeal, and the case which has been decided recently by the Full Bench of the Central Provinces in Salu Bai v. Bajat Khan (4) are, in the opinion of the Board, proper decisions and sound in law.

In short, the sole point in this appeal is, whether a declaration by Statute that a judgment-debtor shall be incompetent to mortgage his property is or is not to be read in the exact and plain sense which the words imply. It is not necessary to go into reasons for the Statute, but if reasons were to be implied, it is manifest that a confusion of title of a somewhat extraordinary kind would arise if it was held that there was a competency on the one hand to mortgage the residuary interest, so to speak, of the judgment-debtor by him, leaving, on the other, uncontrolled and unimpaired during the same time, all those acts of administration by a Collector, which it is admitted in argument would be perfectly competent. The confusion emerging from such a situation is not hard to figure. Their Lordships content themselves with holding that the judgments of the Courts below on this point are right, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be disallowed. No other point was taken upon the appeal. The respondents not having appeared, there will be no order as to costs.

Appeal disallowed.

—RESPONDENT.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1839), Sch. V, r. 2—Nomination paper, form of—Description of candidate, omission of, effect of—Proposer, whether can sign as approver—Alternative nomination papers, validity of.

What is contemplated by rule 2 of Schedule V of the Calcutta Municipal Act is that a nomination paper should be self-contained and complete and that the nomination paper which is presented by the candidate must contain all the matters which are specified in the rule, one of them being the description of the candidate. [p. 317, col. 1.]

It is clear from the wording of clause (d) of the rule that if a person signs the nomination paper of a candidate, either as proposer or seconder, he cannot also sign it as an approver. [p. 317, col. 1; p. 319, col. 1.]

The name of a firm which is not the signature of an individual voter is not a good signature of an approver under clause (d) of the rule. [p. 317, col. 2.]

The intention of the rule is that a nomination paper in order to be valid should, among other matters, contain the name of the candidate, and the names of the proposer and seconder, and then the names of the approvers. [p. 317, col. 2.]

per Woodroffe, J.—Under rule 2 of Schedule V of the Calcutta Municipal Act alternative nomination papers may be sent to the Chairman, so that if one is held, either in whole or in part, to be invalid, the other may be used. In such case, however, each nomination paper should be complete in itself. [p. 318, col. 2.]

A candidate may send in a nomination paper with names of more than 18 voters as mentioned in the rule, in order to meet the case of possible objections to any of the voters whose names appear upon the paper. In such case, more than one nomination paper may be used but the papers must be connected by placing on each paper the name, description and address of the candidate as appearing in the first paper. [p. 318, col. 2; p. 319, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri, dated the 15th March 1918, sitting on the original side.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of CHAUDHURI, J.—This is an application under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act, relating to the acceptance of the nomination paper of Babu Narendra Nath Mitter for the forthcoming Municipal election. The Chairman of the Corporation has held the nomination of that gentleman as valid. His decision is questioned on several grounds. The nomination paper, he holds, contains the necessary particulars required by rule 2 of the election rules. He has treated as part of the nomination paper a letter written by the candidate signed by himself containing this description, "Honorary Presidency Magistrate, Landlord and Banker, Hindu, Bengali." As an annexure to that letter there are three printed forms containing signatures. In the printed forms which have been signed by the proposer, seconder and approvers there is no description of Narendra Nath Mitter. The Chairman has held that the covering letter of Narendra Nath Mitter can be treated as part of the nomination paper. I am unable to take the same view. The letter itself speaks of the nomination paper as a separate document. It seems clear to me under the rules that the nomination paper should contain the description of the candidate. The very same question came up in England, and it was held that an omission of the candidate's description was fatal and could not be regarded as a misnomer. In Reg. v. Tugwell (1) Chief Justice Lord Cockburn has held that a total omission of description was not an inaccurate description and was not cured by section 142 of the English Act, and it was, therefore, fatal to the validity of the voting paper. We have no section corresponding to section 142. Justice Hannen also said in that case that he could not think it would be right to hold that the nomination paper was valid notwithstanding a total omission of the description of the candidate. It was argued that the description was for the purpose of enabling the Chairman to identify the candidate. But I think it has been rightly argued on the other side that it is for the purpose of enabling the persons who are approvers to identify the person whom they are approving.

The second point relates to sub-rule 2 (d) of the election rules, namely, that the signatures of 18 voters as approvers ought to appear. As I have said, the nomination paper in this case consists of 3 sheets. The first sheet contains, amongst other things, the signatures of the proposer and the seconder and of 18 persons as approvers. The second sheet contains the names of 14 persons, it being pasted on to the first sheet. On the third sheet, also pasted, there are three signatures. Objection has been taken by the applicant before me that the signature of Tandulal on the first sheet (he being No. 6 on that page) ought not to have been accepted and similar objection has been taken to Nos. 3, 8, 12, 14, 10 and 15. Nos. 10 and 15 have been rejected by the Chairman, and, therefore, it is not necessary for me to consider them. With regard to Tandulal it is said that there is no such voter. The Chairman says, "the full name of Tandulal is said to be Tandulal Kanori, voter No. 1821." Now on the electoral roll there is no such name as Tandulal. The name of Tandulal Kanori appears. There is also another name on the electoral roll, that of Tandulal Agarwalla, who is put down as voter No. 615 in that list. How it could be decided without an enquiry by the Chairman as to whether Tandulal was Tandulal Kanori or some other person, I cannot make out. Tandulal was not present, and the Chairman seems to have relied entirely on an allegation made on behalf of the candidate Narendra Nath Mitter. I do not think that he was competent to do so. What he has got to do is to compare the name of the signatory with the name appearing in the election roll. It is to avoid elaborate enquiries as regards the identity of voters that that rule ought to be strictly observed. As authority for this proposition, reference has been made to Moorhouse v. Linney (2). There ought not to be a laborious enquiry into these matters, but the question ought to be determined by mere comparison of the nomination paper and the electoral roll. An objection was also taken to No. 3, Jagabandhu Mookerji, who apparently wrote a letter saying that he had not approved of the candidate. No enquiry was made into that matter, and yet the signature was accepted. With regard to No. 8, Benoy Krishna Chakravarty, his signature appears on page 1 as well as on page 2. So far as page 2 is concerned, I shall have to say later as to why it has been rejected, and, therefore, I do not want to deal with that man's case at present. With regard to No. 12, the name of Ananda Mohan Shaw appears as voter No. 1509. In the list the number put down against No. 12 is 1509. It is said to be a mistake for voter No. 1484. Here again the name on the electoral roll and the signature do not agree and I do not, therefore, think that the Chairman should have accepted that signature as the signature of a voter. With regard to No. 14, the signature appears as Srigopal Bilas Roy. The Court Munshi has read it as such, it has also been supported by an affidavit, relied upon by the applicant before me; and it is not said that it could be read in any other way. The name appears on the election roll as Srigopal Bilas Ram, and, therefore, the Chairman was not competent to treat the signature on the nomination paper as that of a voter.

With regard to page 2, a very serious allegation has been made. Some of the persons whose names appear on that list, have said that they never intended to approve of the candidate Narendra Nath Mitter. Certain others have come forward and said that they were prepared to approve of that candidate. It appears, however, from the petitioner's affidavit that some of the signatures, at any rate, on that page were signatures which were put down in connection with the proposed election of one Pramatha Nath Pramanic. It is curious how a document of that character should have come to be pasted on to the nomination paper upon which the candidate Narendra Nath Mitter has relied, and I think that the Chairman was quite right in not taking into consideration the signatures on that page.

With regard to the third sheet, it contains three signatures but not the name of the candidate proposed. There is nothing to show that those persons approved of the proposal made by the proposer and the seconder, and relying upon the case of Harmon v. Park (3). I hold that those signatures ought not to have been accepted.

The result of my decision, therefore, is that there are not 18 approvers approving of the candidate Narendra Nath Mitter, and on that ground also the nomination paper ought not to have been accepted. The Rule, is, therefore, made absolute with costs.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by Mr. Narendra Nath Mitter against the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Chaudhuri. The matter arose in connection with the candidature of Mr. Narendra Nath Mitter for the forthcoming Municipal Election in Calcutta. This gentleman was a candidate for the Corporation, and he sent in certain documents to the Chairman of the Corporation in connection with his nomination. An objection was taken to these documents as not constituting a valid nomination.

The Chairman decided in favour of Mr. Narendra Nath Mitter. A Rule was obtained under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act; and, upon the hearing of that Rule the learned Judge made it absolute, with the result that he overruled the decision at which the Chairman of the Corporation had arrived.

Now, the Rule which relates to this matter is one of the rules relating to the conduct of elections which were made in pursuance of the Calcutta Municipal Act of 1899. This is rule 2, and it runs as follows:—

"Every person who is a candidate for election shall send to the Chairman, not less than fourteen days before the day fixed for the election, a nomination paper containing:—

"(a) his name and description and a statement of his place of abode,

"(b) the name of the ward or wards for which he proposes to stand,

"(c) the signature of two voters other than the candidate in each such ward who respectively propose and second his candidature, and

"(d) the signature of eighteen voters other than the candidate in each such ward who approve his nomination."

The candidate in this case Mr. Narendra Nath Mitter sent in four documents. The first was a letter signed by himself and addressed to the Chairman of the Corporation of Calcutta in these words:—

"Dear Sir,

"I beg to send you herewith my nomination paper for election as Municipal Commissioner for Ward No. 6 at the ensuing General Election. The nomination paper is duly proposed, seconded and approved.

"Yours truly,

"(Sd.) Narendra Nath Mitter, Hony. Presidency Magistrate, Landlord and Banker, Hindu, Bengalee."

Attached to that letter, by means of a clip as we were informed, were three forms of a nomination paper. These three forms, it appears, were gummed together. The first one is as follows:—

"I hereby propose Babu Narendra Nath Mitter, wrongly put down as Nagendra Nath Mitter in the election roll, of Premises No. 84, Muktaram Babu's Street, who is recorded as Voter No. 1553 of Ward No. 6 as a candidate for election as Commissioner of Ward No. 6."

Then the name of the proposer is written and his number as voter and that of his ward and, then the name of the seconder is written, Atal Coomar Sen, with his number as voter and the number of the ward. Underneath there are the names of the 18 approvers with their numbers as voters, and the number of the ward opposite to their names. The name of Atal Coomar Sen appears as approver as well as seconder, and the Chairman of the Corporation has found that No. 15, the name of which is Sew Kissen Srikissen, is that of a firm, and the signature is not the signature of an individual.

The second nomination paper is in the same form as that which I have read, but it does not contain the names of the proposer, and the seconder, nor does it contain the name of the candidate. That form is signed by 14 people, the name of Atal Coomar Sen again appearing as an approver.

The third document is another similar nomination form, and that again does not contain the names of the proposer and the seconder, nor does it contain the name of the candidate.

Now, the first objection which was taken to these documents being a valid nomination was that the nomination paper did not contain the description of the candidate.

The answer which was given to that objection was, that it was true that the actual form of the nomination paper did not contain the description of the candidate, but the description of the candidate appeared fully from the letter which had been attached to the nomination paper and that the letter and the three nomination forms ought to be taken together as one nomination paper, and that consequently the nomination paper did contain the description of the candidate.

In my judgment that contention is not sound, and I think that the first objection which is raised to these documents being a valid nomination paper, viz., that the nomination paper does not contain the description of the candidate, is a good objection. I think it is clear that what is contemplated by the rules is that a nomination paper should be self-contained and complete and that the nomination paper which is presented by the candidate must contain all the matters which are specified in rule 2, one of them being the description of the candidate. We were informed that the forms which were used were supplied by the Corporation: if this be so, I think it is somewhat unfortunate that the forms do not contain a space which is allocated to the description of the candidate. There is a space allocated to his name and there is also a space allocated to his place of residence, but there is no space allocated to his description, as is the case in the forms which are prescribed under the Municipal Corporation Act in England: in those forms there is a separate column provided for the description of the candidate.

On the facts of this case, in my judgment, the nomination paper which has been sent to the Chairman of the Corporation does not contain the description of the candidate.

The second point which is urged against the validity of this nomination was that the name of the seconder had been included as one of the approvers. I think it is clear from the wording of the rule that if a person signs the nomination paper of a candidate, either as proposer or seconder, he cannot also sign it as an approver.

Therefore, I agree with the decision of the Chairman of the Corporation when he decided that the signature of Atal Coomar Sen as an approver was not in order.

The Chairman of the Corporation has also decided that No. 15 is the name of a firm and not of an individual: and, the learned Advocate-General has quite correctly, if I may say so, admitted that he could not support that as a good signature of an approver on the ground that it is the name of a firm and not the signature of an individual voter. Consequently, if the nomination is to be confined to the first of these three forms, in my judgment it is not a good nomination, for the following reasons:—

First, that it does not contain the description of the candidate, and, secondly, that it does not contain the names of 18 approvers in addition to the names of the proposer and seconder.

The result is that there is really an end of this matter, unless this Court thinks it right that either the second or the third form ought to be taken into consideration and ought to be treated as part of the nomination paper. In my judgment neither the second nor the third form ought to be taken as part of the nomination paper, and the ground of my decision is, that neither the second nor the third form contains the name of the candidate and the names of the proposer or seconder. The intention of the rule is, that a nomination paper, in order to be valid, should, among other matters, contain the name of the candidate, and the names of the proposer and seconder, and then the names of the approvers. And, to my mind it would not be right for us to say that the second form and the third form should be taken as part of the nomination paper, merely because the three forms are gummed together and sent in to the Chairman at the same time. If we were so to hold, we should be laying the procedure in respect of these elections open to the possibility of considerable abuse, because unless the names of the candidate, his proposer and seconder appear on the paper which the approvers are asked to sign, it might be that signatures of approvers might be obtained by representing that they were giving their approval to a particular candidate, when, as a matter of fact, their signatures were intended to be used for another candidate. I do not say that this was done in this case. I only use that as an illustration for pointing out that it would be impossible for us to hold that the second and third forms ought to be looked upon as part of the nomination paper simply because they are attached to the first nomination paper and sent to the Chairman at one and the same time. I do not express any opinion as to whether the second and third forms might have been looked at for the purpose of seeing whether the nomination is valid, if they had contained the names of the candidate and of his proposer and the seconder. I confine my judgment to the facts of this case and hold that we cannot look at the second and third forms for the reason that neither of them contained the names of the candidate, the proposer and the seconder.

There is one other matter to which I wish to refer before I conclude my judgment. It is said that it was alleged before the Chairman of the Corporation and also before Mr. Justice Chaudhuri that some of the signatures of the approvers, in what I call the second form (which contains the names of the 14 approvers), were intended to be in support of the candidature of some person other than Mr. Narendra Nath Mitter, and the learned Advocate-General applied to the Court that we should admit certain affidavits with regard to that matter, inasmuch as he said that reflection had been cast upon the reputation of his client. It appears that those affidavits had not been used before Mr. Justice Chaudhuri, but that the learned Counsel who was then acting for the appellant, (which learned Counsel is not before us to-day) decided not to use those affidavits before the learned Judge.

Under those circumstances, the respondent objected to their admission on the hearing of the appeal and we declined to admit them.

Having regard to the conclusions which I have already expressed in the first part of my judgment, it is not necessary for me to come to any decision about this matter; I express no opinion as to whether there is any ground for the suggestion that some of these names were obtained for another candidate or another proposed candidate.

In this connection I may draw attention to the fact that, as I read the judgment of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri, the learned Judge gave no definite finding on this point. Therefore, that matter, in my judgment, remains undecided: at any rate, so far as my judgment goes, I express no opinion one way or the other, as, for the reasons I have stated, it is unnecessary for my judgment.

For these reasons I think that the appeal should be dismissed with costs and the Rule discharged with costs.

At the request of the learned Advocate-General to deal with a further point that he urged, I will add this to my judgment. The learned Advocate-General contended that the nomination paper did contain a description of the candidate because after the address of the candidate appear these words:—

"Who is recorded as Voter No. 1553 of Ward No. 6"

In my judgment that by itself is not a "description" within the meaning of rule 2 (a). When one refers to the election roll, one finds there the name of Narendranath Mitter, which ought to be Narendra Nath Mitter, opposite the number 1553, and his address No. 84, Mukhtaram Babu's Street. This carries the matter no further than the nomination paper itself. I cannot think that such a reference by itself can be held to be a description of the candidate within the meaning of the rule.

WOODROFFE, J.—Rule 2 of the election rules says that a nomination is to be sent to the Chairman. In my opinion, if there be one such paper, it must be complete in itself, which is not the case here, for the description given on an appended letter from the candidate is not sufficient. I see, no reason, however, why alternative nomination papers should not be sent to the Chairman, so that if one is held, either in whole or in part, to be invalid, the other may be used. In such case, however, each nomination paper should be complete in itself. I see also no reason why the candidate should not send in a nomination paper with names of more than 18 voters as mentioned in the rule, in order to meet the case of possible objections to any of the voters whose names appear upon the paper. In such case, more than one nomination paper may be used, but the papers must be connected (otherwise than as here by mere pinning together). That connection is effected by placing on each paper the name, description and address of the candidate as appearing in the first paper. If we were to hold otherwise, we should open the door to fraud:

Here the first paper does not contain a description of the candidate such as is given in the letter appended to the nomination paper. I agree with the Chairman that a seconder cannot also sign as an approver. The 18 voters in clause (d) of the rule are clearly 18 voters other than those mentioned in clause (c). This excludes Voter No. 10 on the first mentioned paper. The number of approvers in the first paper is (excluding also, as is admitted, Voter No. 15 which is the name of a firm) 16 only. This is insufficient, unless we include voters on the other two papers said to be attached to the first paper. The second paper must be excluded. It is said to include the names of voters who say that they intended to support Babu Promotha Nath Pramanick. But apart from this, that appears not complete. I think the third sheet ought to be excluded on the same ground, namely, that it is not in itself complete and is not thus connected on its face with the first paper, so as to make it capable of being read with it.

It is suggested that some impropriety was committed in putting forward the second paper as to which Mr. Justice Chaudhuri, according to the report read to us, does not seem to have come to any definite finding. It is impossible to accede to the application of the appellant to put in further affidavits, for his learned Counsel said at the hearing before Mr. Justice Chaudhuri that he would not give evidence on this point. It is not necessary, however, to go into this matter further, for the appeal fails on the technical ground stated and should be dismissed with costs. I agree that reference to the number of the candidate in the election roll is not by itself a sufficient description within the meaning of the rule: though if it were, the appeal fails on other grounds stated.

Appeal dismissed.

Contract to supply labour, construction of—Covenant, implied—Maps and specifications.

Plaintiffs agreed to supply labour to the defendants by loading and unloading waggons of sand for purposes of reclamation on the foreshore. The agreement was accompanied by maps and specifications. The plan showed a low rubble construction shown in section which was designated "temporary rubble toe to protect filling during reclamation." Plaintiffs sought to import into the contract an implied term that the defendants were to provide adequate protection to the filling up by sand by a temporary rubble during reclamation:

Held, that assuming that the contract had an implied condition, the condition was only to execute the protection as shown in the plan and that it was impossible to spell out of the plans and sections an obligation to do more than what was there shown. [p. 321, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

LORD DUNEDIN.—The plaintiffs in this suit are the contractors who contracted to supply labour for reclamation work undertaken by the defendants, the Karachi Port Trust, at the north pool of Karachi.

By the contract entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendants the plaintiffs were to supply the labour for filling and emptying the waggons used in transporting sand from places on the shore and laying it down on the foreshore to be reclaimed. Work was done by the plaintiffs and payments were made therefor by the defendants.

The claim as originally launched consisted of one large item of Rs. 72,514 and of various small items. The trial Judge disallowed item 1 in toto, and in respect of the other items allowed Rs. 650, Rs. 150 of which had been admitted, and found the defendants entitled to the costs of the action. The Appeal Court recalled the judgment of the trial Judge and allowed Rs. 17,640 for the first item, and Rs. 1,900 in respect of the other items, and made a new order as to costs.

Before their Lordships' Board the parties agreed to settle all items except the first by allowing judgment for the plaintiffs for Rs. 1,350, the question of costs to be unaffected by this arrangement.

The sole question, therefore, that has been argued before this Board has been the question of liability for the first item. That item was in respect of 89,000 brass (a brass=100 cubic feet) of sand, alleged to have been handled and not paid for.

The clauses of the contract which are material to the determination of the question involved are as follows:

"1. The work required to be done by the contract is to find the necessary labour for filling and emptying the waggons.

2. The contract will be paid by measurement of the area reclaimed and before commencing work he must satisfy himself as to the correctness of the depths shown on the sections of the ground and agree to abide by same and the following stipulations.

* * * *

"11. The Port Trust are at present engaged in putting rubble protection to enclose the area to be reclaimed and this will be in progress probably when the work is commenced, and the contractor is not to make any claim for alleged or actual loss of material being washed away during the progress of the work and when quoting his rate for the labour in filling and emptying it, must include all and every such contingency as loss in bulk through washing or spreading by the sea, sinking and settlement, or leaking or blowing out of the waggons during transit from the sand hills to the site of reclamation.

12. There are approximately about 2,50,000 brass to be reclaimed, but the contractor will be paid strictly in accordance with the work when actually done on the sections of the ground at the completion of the work and no allowance whatever as stated in paragraph 11 will be entertained for sinking, washing away, etc."

The area reclaimed was measured, after the operations of the plaintiffs were finished, by the engineers of the defendants. The plaintiffs, though invited to send their engineer to check the measurements, did not do so. In the result the defendants brought out the sum which was due in accordance with these measurements and paid the plaintiffs accordingly. As to the accuracy of these measurements there are concurrent findings of fact by the trial Judge and the Court of Appeal. The trial Judge says:—

"The defendants' calculations have been explained in full detail by the Port Engineer, Mr. Coad, and appear to have been liberal and reasonably accurate. The calculations have been entirely redone in light of such incorrectnesses as have been pointed out, and the result has been to show not a deficit but a considerable overpayment. It remains only to observe that plaintiffs declined defendants' offer to be present at and check the final measurements on the ground, and that it is impracticable to check them now on the ground owing to the subsequent completion of the reclamation. There would, therefore, appear to be no reason to suppose that there were any material miscalculations of the work done on the reclamation."

The Appeal Court Judges say:—

"Nor do we think the plaintiffs have shown that the final measurement sectional drawings are wrong, or that the depths in them are incorrect."

The plaintiffs, being thus debarred from challenging the defendants' measurements as to the amount of sand actually deposited on the ground, seek to make their case in the following way. By a calculation of the number of waggons filled and the average contents of each waggon, they say that they prove that so much sand was actually put on the ground. The difference between the amount so brought out and the amount as disclosed by the engineer's measurements is sand which has in some way disappeared. This sand, they say, has been washed away. Turning to the contract, they argue that the contract, when read with the plans and specifications, shows an implied covenant on the part of the defendants to afford a protection of rubble work to keep the deposited sand from being washed away, and averring that the defendants failed to afford such protection, they claim the value of their work on the sand deposited but rendered unavailable as damages for breach of contract on the part of the defendants.

Both the trial Judge and the Judges of the Court of Appeal were of opinion that the plans added an implied term to the contract, but they differed as to what that term was. The trial Judge held that it was to supply the protection actually shown on the plans and sections, that being a low rubble construction shown in section and designated on the plan "temporary rubble toe to protect filling during reclamation." He held that, judged by that standard, the defendants had, as a matter of fact, constructed all that they had covenanted to do. The result was that the plaintiffs had proved no breach and consequently no damage. The Judges of the Court of Appeal held that the implied covenant was to supply an "adequate" protection, and they considered that inadequacy was proved by the mere fact of the discrepancy between what they considered the proved waggon loads deposited, and the proved amount measured, there being in their view no means of accounting for that difference except by the supposition that the missing amount had been washed away and the fact of its being washed away being per se proof of the inadequacy of the protection.

It was argued on behalf of the defendants that as the contract itself is silent on the point, an implied obligation to afford "protection" by means of rubble work could not be drawn from the plans and sections, and that section 11 of the contract above quoted was destructive of any such idea. Their Lordships do not find it necessary to express an opinion whether that argument is sound or not. They are clearly of opinion that it is quite impossible to spell out of the plans and sections an obligation to do more than what is there shown. Indeed the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs admitted that he could not support the view of the Court of Appeal, which would extract from the contract which is silent on the point, and from the plans and specifications which contain no words of obligation, but only show certain proposed construction, a covenant on the part of the defendants to afford an "adequate" protection. This concession, though candidly made, could not, in the opinion of their Lordships, have been with any prospect of success withheld.

This dislodges the judgment of the Court of Appeal, which is also based on what seems to their Lordships a fallacy. Taking the measurements of the contents of the waggons on the one hand, and the measurements of the stuff on the ground on the other, as equally accurate, and finding that the sum of the latter is less than the sum of the former, the learned Judges draw the inference that the difference must be accounted for by washing away. This, however, is a non sequitur. Not only may part of the sand have been blown away in transit, but the discrepancy might be caused by subsidence (the measurements having been effected from the data furnished by sectional drawings), and further the sectional drawings themselves might be erroneous, an error which by clause 2 of the contract the plaintiffs were content to abide by. Indeed the method employed by the learned Judges entirely ignores the stipulation of the contract that measurement of the area was to be the basis for arriving at the sum to be paid.

The case, therefore, is reduced to this, that assuming without deciding that the contract has an implied condition, their Lordships must hold that that condition was only to execute the protection as shown on the plans; and here there is a direct finding by the trial Judge who saw the witnesses that the defendants had done what they contracted to do, a finding which is undisturbed by any finding or even remark of the Court of Appeal. In such a case their Lordships think it impossible to disturb the finding of the trial Judge. The result is that the plaintiffs fail on the first item of the claim. The judgment appealed against must be recalled, and in accordance with the arrangement recited judgment entered for Rs. 1,350. As the defendants have been completely successful on the only substantial question in the case, they must have their costs in the Courts below and before this Board.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty in accordance with this opinion.

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV,
r. 6—Mortgage decree—Mortgaged properties not exhausted—Mortgagee, whether entitled to personal decree.*

Order XXXIV, rule 6, of the Civil Procedure Code does not mean that a personal decree against the mortgagor cannot be obtained in any case where the whole of the mortgaged properties directed to be sold have not been sold for whatever cause it may be. [p. 327, col. 1; p. 328, col. 2.]

Where there is a deficiency after the sale of all the mortgaged properties which were available for sale at the date of sale under the mortgage decree, the mortgagee-decree-holder is entitled to enforce the liability of the mortgagor under Order XXXIV, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 327, cols. 1 & 2; p. 329, col. 1.]

If it can be shown that the properties which were included in the mortgage and which could be sold in pursuance of the mortgage decree were in fact not sold owing to some action or default of the mortgagee, then the mortgagee would be debarred from obtaining a decree for personal liability under Order XXXIV, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 325, col. 2; p. 326, col. 1.]

But the fact that some of the properties included in the mortgage decree have, since the date of the decree and by reason of the prosecution of his rights by a prior mortgagee and through no act or default of the decree-holder-mortgagee, ceased to be available for sale, is not sufficient to debar the claim of the mortgagee-decree-holder for a personal decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 326, col. 1.]

[After the plaintiff, a second mortgagee, had obtained a mortgage decree, the mortgagor was adjudicated an insolvent. On an application made by a prior mortgagee to the Insolvency Court most of the mortgaged properties were sold by the Official

Assignee free from all incumbrances. This sale, which was not objected to by the plaintiff, was not sufficient to pay off even the claim of the prior mortgagee. The remaining items of the mortgaged properties were then sold by the plaintiff under his mortgage decree but the price realised by the sale was very small. The plaintiff thereupon applied for a personal decree against the mortgagor and his sureties:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a personal decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code, although all the properties included in the mortgage decree obtained by him had not been sold under that decree. [p. 327, col. 2; p. 329, col. 1.]

Appeal from Original Civil No. 65 of 1917 in Suit No. 1158 of 1914 against the judgment of Chaudhuri, J., dated the 12th July 1917, giving a personal decree to the plaintiff against defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

Mr. B. C. Mitter, Officiating Advocate-General (with him Mr. C. C. Ghose), for the Appellant.

Mr. P. L. Buckland, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by the defendant, Mr. S. R. Das, against the judgment of Chaudhuri, J., whereby he held that the plaintiff Bank was entitled to a personal decree against the 1st and 2nd defendants.

It was contended that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a personal decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure, inasmuch as the conditions precedent entitling them to ask for such a decree had not been fulfilled: and the terms of the decrees, dated 8th February 1915 and 28th February 1916, had not been carried out.

The facts were as follows :—

A. H. Guznavi was indebted to the Allahabad Bank and his indebtedness was secured by mortgage of certain properties.

He was also indebted to the plaintiff Bank. On the 1st August 1913, A. H. Guznavi executed a mortgage to the plaintiff Bank to secure the floating balance. This mortgage was with respect to the same properties as were covered by the mortgage held by the Allahabad Bank and was subject thereto.

On the 13th September 1913, the defendants, A. K. Guznavi (a brother of the mortgagor) and Mr. S. R. Das, executed a promissory note payable on demand in favour of the plaintiff Bank for Rs. 2,55,000 with interest thereon as security for A. H. Guznavi's indebtedness. On the 23rd September 1913, the plaintiff Bank, by a deed executed on that day wherein it was recited that the transferees had, at the request of the mortgagor, agreed to give to the Bank their joint and several promissory note for the amount secured by the within written Indenture, transferred the debt due to the plaintiffs from A. H. Guznavi and the mortgaged properties to the defendants A. K. Guznavi and S. R. Das.

On the 24th September 1913, the defendants, A. K. Guznavi and S. R. Das, deposited with the plaintiff Bank the title deeds, viz., the mortgage of the 1st August 1913 and the transfer deed of 23rd September 1913, with the plaintiff Bank, and executed a declaration of mortgage to the effect that the said Indentures had been deposited to secure the payment by the said defendants of the sum of Rs. 2,55,000 secured by the said promissory note and interest, and undertook to execute a legal or formal sub-mortgage of the premises comprised in the Indentures.

On the 12th November 1914, the plaintiffs sued A. K. Guznavi, S. R. Das and A. H. Guznavi. By paragraph 5 of the plaint, the plaintiffs submitted that they were entitled to a decree against the 1st and 2nd defendants for the sums secured under promissory note of 13th September 1913, and they claimed further to be entitled to a mortgage decree in respect of the properties mentioned and contained in the Indentures of 1st of August 1913 and the 23rd September 1913.

In this suit a preliminary mortgage decree was made on the 8th of February 1915, and no personal decree in respect of the promissory note was made.

It was stated, during the course of the argument, that no personal decree in respect of the promissory note was asked for at the hearing.

On the 21st July 1915, A. H. Guznavi was adjudicated an insolvent.

In pursuance of the mortgage decree of 8th February 1915, the Registrar took an account of what was due to the plaintiff Bank for principal and interest on the promissory note and, on the 23rd July 1915, he reported that on the 11th February 1916 there would be due to the plaintiff Bank, upon and by virtue of the promissory note in the said decree mentioned, the sum of Rs. 2,73,026-10-10 for principal and interest to the said 11th February 1916, and appointed the 12th February 1916 as the time for the defendants to pay the said sum of Rs. 2,73,026-10-10 and costs and interest.

Nothing was paid in respect of that decree on the date above mentioned or at any time.

In October 1915 an application was made by the Allahabad Bank to the Judge exercising Insolvency Jurisdiction, on notice to the plaintiffs, A. H. Guznavi, A. K. Guznavi and S. R. Das, and Greaves, J., made an order under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, that the properties included in the mortgage of the Allahabad Bank should be sold by the Official Assignee free from all incumbrances, and that the balance of the sale-proceeds, after payment of the costs of the sale and the claim of the Allahabad Bank, should be retained by the Official Assignee and be paid by him in discharge of other incumbrances in accordance with their respective priorities. On the hearing of this application, the defendant S. R. Das appeared and opposed the application, but the plaintiffs, though they had been requested by the attorneys of the defendant S. R. Das to oppose the application, did not do so.

In spite of the opposition of the defendant S. R. Das the Court made the order aforesaid. This order was not drawn up until 4th January 1916.

Nothing having been paid on the appointed day, viz., the 12th February 1916, by the defendants, on the 28th February 1916 a final decree in this suit was made, whereby it was ordered that the premises charged under the mortgage in the decree of the 8th February 1915 mentioned, or a sufficient part thereof, should be sold subject to a prior mortgage in favour of the Allahabad Bank in the said decree mentioned. The drawing up of this order was directed to be postponed for three months, and we were informed during the argument that the plaintiffs protested against the postponement. On the 9th January 1917, the sale, directed by the order of the 4th January 1916 of the Insolvency Court, was carried out by the Official Assignee: the property realised about Rs. 60,000 only, which was not enough to meet the amount due to the Allahabad Bank upon the first mortgage: such amount, we were informed, was over five lakhs of rupees.

SATISH RANJAN DAS v. MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

An application was, thereupon, made by the plaintiffs to Chitty, J., for a personal decree against the defendants, A. K. Guznavi and S. R. Das, for Rs. 2,88,862-3-3 and costs due under the decrees of the 8th February 1915 and 28th February 1916 and under an order in the suit dated 11th February 1915 and interest. On the 30th January 1917, Chitty, J., dismissed this application on the ground that the conditions precedent contained in the decree of the 8th February 1915 had not been fulfilled, i.e., that the mortgaged property had not been sold in pursuance of the mortgage decree.

On the 26th June 1917, this Court, on appeal, upheld Chitty, J.'s judgment.

On the 21st April 1917, pursuant to the decrees of the 8th February 1915 and the 28th February 1916, the Registrar put up for sale the equity of redemption in the following properties:—

"Lot A.—All that unexpired term of a verbal tenancy for six years from November 1911 of No. 7, Bowbazar Street, Calcutta (possession of which has already been surrendered), together with any rights still subsisting in the stock-in-trade (already sold by a prior mortgagee) and outstandings due to the defendant, A. H. Guznavi, in his business of the United Bengal Company.

Lot B.—All the claims of the defendant, A. H. Guznavi, against Messrs. Berg Sons & Co., Ltd., and Messrs. Donald Campbell & Co., respectively (which the said A. H. Guznavi says are non-existent).

Lot C.—All that the interest (if any) of the defendant A. H. Guznavi in the Zemindaris in the Districts of Mymensingh and Pabna (which interest was on the 9th January 1917 sold free from incumbrances by the Official Assignee of Calcutta as Assignee of A. H. Guznavi, an insolvent under an order of this Court, dated the 4th January 1916)."

At the sale one G. N. Kapur purchased the above-mentioned lots at the total of Rs. 20—Rs. 10 for lot A, Rs. 5 for lot B and Rs. 5 for lot C.

It appears that Chaudhuri, J., issued a Rule on the 5th March 1917 for a review of the decree of the 8th February 1915, but on the hearing he dismissed the application for review.

On the 14th May 1917, an application was made by the plaintiff Bank to Chaudhuri, J., for a personal decree against the defendants, A. K. Guznavi and S. R. Das, for Rs. 2,93,893-0-11 and costs due to the plaintiffs under the decrees of 8th February 1915 and the 28th February 1916 and the order of 11th February 1915 and interest, and on the 12th July 1917, Chaudhuri, J., held that plaintiffs had fulfilled the requirements of the Civil Procedure Code and were entitled to a personal decree against the 1st and 2nd defendants for the said sum less the sum realised by the sale, if that sum had not already been taken into account, and a decree was made accordingly.

From this judgment the defendants, A. K. Guznavi and S. R. Das, have appealed.

The appeal which was argued was that of the defendant, S. R. Das, and it was agreed by learned Counsel that the appeal of the defendant, A. K. Guznavi, would, as a matter of course, follow the event of this appeal.

The decrees of the 8th February 1915 and of the 28th February 1916 were made in pursuance of the provisions of Order XXXIV, rules 4 (1) and 5 (2), and the application for a personal decree against the two defendants was in pursuance of Order XXXIV, rule 6.

It was contended by the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the defendant, S. R. Das, that in view of the provisions of the above-mentioned rules and in view of the terms of the said decrees, the Court had no jurisdiction to make a decree for personal liability of this defendant until all the properties included in the decree had been sold in pursuance thereof; that the words "or a sufficient part thereof" in Order XXXIV, rule 5 (2), which are also to be found in both the said decrees, showed that not less than the whole of the properties mentioned in the decrees must be sold in order to comply with the provisions of the rules and with the terms of the decrees, that the question of sufficiency could not arise unless it was intended the whole should be sold if necessary to liquidate the amount secured by the mortgage, that as regards the lots mentioned in the Notification of Sale of the 21st April 1917, lot C comprised the interest (if any) of A. H. Guznavi in the Zemindaris, that these Zemindaris had been sold by the Official Assignee of A. H. Guznavi, an insolvent, pursuant to the order of Greaves, J., of the 4th January 1916, free from all incumbrances: that although it might be that such order was a wrong order, it was made by a Court of competent jurisdiction and that no appeal had been made against it, though the plaintiffs could have appealed, if they had so desired: that, consequently, the order for sale by the Official Assignee must be considered as a valid order, and the sale must be held a valid sale: that the properties having been sold free from incumbrances, the result of the sale was that the whole interest in the Zemindaris went to the purchaser and that thereafter the right of the plaintiffs was confined to the balance of the sale-proceeds, if there were any, after the first mortgagee's claim had been satisfied: that, consequently, as regards lot C, there was nothing which could be sold on the 21st April 1917, and therefore that, as the whole of the properties mentioned in the decrees had not been sold in pursuance of such decrees, the defendant could not be made liable personally.

It cannot be said that the sale of the 21st April 1917 was altogether nugatory: for there were included in the lots, two items which had not been sold by the Official Assignee, viz., (i) "outstandings due to the defendant, A. H. Guznavi, in his business of the United Bengal Company" mentioned in lot A, and (ii) lot B, "all the claims of the defendant, A. H. Guznavi, against Berg Sons & Co., Ltd., and Messrs. Donald Campbell & Co., respectively, which the said A. H. Guznavi says are non-existent."

These two items were specifically mentioned in the mortgage of the 1st August 1913, which was one of the deeds referred to in the memorandum of deposit, dated the 24th September 1913, made by defendants, A. K. Guznavi and S. R. Das.

In this mortgage it was recited that the mortgagor was entitled to a sum of about £ 6,438-1-7 then owing by Messrs. Berg Sons & Co., Ltd., and also to a sum amounting to £ 4,870-7-8 then owing by Messrs. Donald Campbell & Co.

Although these two items at the time of the sale were apparently of very little value, they were included in the mortgage, they were included by the Registrar in the Notification of Sale, they had not been sold prior to the 21st April 1917, and they were sold at the sale of that date by the Registrar in pursuance of the decrees of the 8th February 1915 and the 28th February 1916.

Further, the interest, if any, of A. H. Guznavi in the Zemindaris was sold at the same sale.

As regards this last item and also as regards the unexpired term, which had been surrendered, and the stock-in-trade at 7, Bowbazar Street, which had already been sold by a prior mortgagee, I think it must be taken that there was nothing in fact to sell.

Mr. Buckland, however, for the Bank, contended that this would not affect the Bank's right to a personal decree for the sale purported to be a sale of all the mortgaged property, and for the purposes of this case it made no matter whether the Bank had any title to the property purported to be sold and that consequently the decrees of the 8th February 1915 and the 28th February 1916 had been carried out.

This argument I do not adopt. I do not think it would be right to hold that the decrees had been carried out by means of what purported to be a sale by the Registrar, if the properties offered did not in fact exist at the time of the sale although they had been included in the mortgage. But this does not dispose of the case, for the plaintiffs urged that the decrees had been complied with, inasmuch as the Registrar sold in pursuance of the decrees all the properties covered by the mortgage which were in existence and available for sale at the time of the sale of the 21st of April 1917, and that more than this could not be done.

If it could be shown that the properties which were included in the mortgage, and which could be sold in pursuance of the decrees, were in fact not sold owing to some action or default of the plaintiffs so as to impose on the mortgagors a personal liability to which otherwise they would not have been liable, then I think the plaintiffs would be debarred from obtaining the decree for personal liability which they claim: see Ram Ranjan Chakravarti v. Indra Narain Dass (1). There are two grounds relied upon by the defendant in this respect.

First, it was argued that the plaintiffs should have appeared at the hearing of the application before Greaves, J., and that the plaintiffs should have joined the defendant, S. R. Das, in opposing the making of the order for sale by the Official Assignee free from incumbrances.

Reliance was placed on the fact that the plaintiffs received not only a notice of the application but also a request from the Attorneys of this defendant to oppose the application and, consequently, it was urged that the plaintiffs were to some extent responsible for the fact that the equity of redemption in the Zemindaris could not be sold in pursuance of the decrees.

I do not think this is sufficient to debar the plaintiffs' claim. The defendant, S. R. Das, was one of the second mortgagees who had made a sub-mortgage by the deposit of the deeds with the Bank. This defendant appeared by Counsel and opposed the application, and no doubt all that could be urged against the application was urged, and I do not think we ought to assume that if the Bank, who would have been claiming under the defendant, S. R. Das, had opposed the application, such opposition would have made any difference.

It is true that if the plaintiffs' advisers had been aware of the point which has now been taken (a point which, as far as this case is concerned, is purely a technical one), they might have urged it before the Judge and argued that a sale by the Official Assignee might prevent the decrees of the 8th February 1915 and 28th February 1916 being carried out so that the plaintiffs' remedy against these defendants personally might be endangered, but I think it is fairly obvious that such a possibility never entered into the consideration either of the plaintiffs or these two defendants at the time, and that they were relying upon the sale of the Zemindari properties producing a sum sufficient to meet the claims of both the Banks.

Secondly, it was urged that although the order of the 28th February 1916 was postponed for 3 months, the sale by the Official Assignee did not take place until the 9th January 1917, and the plaintiffs might have applied to have the decree of the 28th February 1916 carried out before that time.

We have no information as to what was the cause of this delay and we are not at liberty to speculate.

The fact is patent, however, that considerable delay took place in carrying out both the mortgage decree of 28th February 1916 and the decree of the Insolvency Court of 4th January 1916. The sale by the Official Assignee did not take place until 9th January 1917.

The properties are apparently of considerable size, the preparation for the sale thereof would take some considerable time and they were thought to be of much greater value than the amount eventually realised; indeed, I think it was admitted during the argument that both the plaintiffs and these two defendants were hoping that the sale would realise enough to meet the claims of the two Banks and thus relieve these two defendants of all personal liability. Unfortunately this expected contingency did not happen, but I do not think that the plaintiffs, by reason of the delay, under the circumstances can be said to have been responsible for the fact that the equity of redemption was not available for sale by the Registrar under the mortgage decrees on the 21st April 1917. There remains, therefore, the point urged by the learned Advocate-General, viz., that inasmuch as all the properties included in the decrees were not sold in pursuance thereof, the plaintiffs are debarred from obtaining a personal decree against these defendants. The decrees do not mention the properties specifically, but the properties are described therein by reference to the mortgage of 1st August 1913 and the Indenture of 23rd September 1913.

The plaintiffs' security was a memorandum of deposit by the second mortgagees; and their security was, therefore, subject to the Allahabad Bank's first mortgage and subject to the rights of that Bank incidental to the first mortgage.

(1) 33 C. 890; 10 C. W. N. 862.

SATISH RANJAN DAS V. MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

It was in pursuance of such rights that the Allahabad Bank obtained the order for the sale of the Zemindari properties free from incumbrances, and that, consequently, these properties were not available for sale on the 21st April 1917 in pursuance of mortgage decrees obtained by the plaintiffs.

The question, therefore, is whether the fact, that some of the properties included in the 'above-mentioned Indentures, and therefore included in the mortgage decrees, have since the date of the decrees and by reason of the prosecution of their rights by the first mortgagees and through no act or default of the plaintiffs become not available for sale, is sufficient to debar the plaintiffs' claim for a personal decree.

In my judgment, we should be putting too narrow and rigid a construction upon the provisions contained in the rules and upon the terms of the decrees if we were so to hold. The object of the rules obviously is that the remedy of the mortgagee should in the first instance be against the property mortgaged, and that such property should be exhausted before a personal liability is imposed upon the mortgagor. But the rules surely cannot mean that if a portion of the property, however small, which was included in the mortgage and therefore included in the mortgage decree as a portion of that which was to be sold, is destroyed or ceases to be available for sale after the date of the decree and through no fault of the mortgagee, then there can be no decree for personal liability against the mortgagor.

Yet this is what is involved in the argument of the learned Advocate-General.

It was not denied that if the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 5, and the directions of the decrees as regards the sale of the properties have been complied with, the plaintiffs would be entitled to a personal decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6.

Having regard, therefore, to the fact that all the properties covered by the mortgage, which were in existence and which were available for sale at the date of the sale, were sold on the 21st April 1917, and assuming, as I have held, that the plaintiffs were not responsible for the fact that some of the properties included in the mortgage were not in reality available for sale, though the sale purported to include them, I think it should be taken that the provisions contained in the rules and the directions contained in the mortgage decrees as to the sale have been complied with and that the plaintiffs are entitled to the personal decree which the learned Judge has directed. It was argued that this case was covered by our previous decision upon the appeal from Chitty, J. I do not think that is so: at that time no sale had taken place in pursuance of the mortgage decrees, whereas a material fact on this appeal is that a bona fide sale has been held whereby all the properties covered by the mortgage, which were available for sale, have been sold in pursuance of the decrees.

Some cases were cited before us, and much reliance was placed by the learned Advocate-General upon Badri Das v. Inayat Khan (2) and the case already referred to [Ram Ranjan Chakravarti v. Indra Narain Dass (1)].

The learned Judges in the Allahabad case apparently held on the facts of the case that either the previous sale of the Zemindari properties which had taken place was due to the fault of the appellant, or, if it was not, the appellant had still a right of redemption which had not been sold, and consequently that the whole of the mortgaged property had not been brought to sale.

As regards the case of Ram Ranjan Chakravarti v. Indra Narain Dass (1), the ratio decidendi was that as the mortgagees had released substantial portions of the property originally mortgaged and the purchasers of these portions from the mortgage debt, and without the consent of the mortgagors, it was held that the mortgagees could not release a portion of the mortgaged property to the detriment of the mortgagor, so as to impose on him a personal liability, to which otherwise he would not be subject. I do not think that either of these cases covers the present case, and it is not necessary, therefore, for me to say whether I agree with the decision in the Allahabad case. In any event it is not binding on this Court.

(2) 22 A. 474; A. W. N. (1900) 132; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1305.

SATISH RANJAN DAS v. MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA LTD.

It is to be noted that on the facts of this case the point which has been relied upon by the appellant is merely a technical one; for, if the course, which the learned Advocate-General argued should have been taken, had in fact been followed, and if all the properties included in the plaintiffs' mortgage had been sold in accordance with the decrees, such properties must have been sold subject to the first mortgage of the Allahabad Bank: the debt due to that Bank was over five lakhs of rupees: the properties when sold by the Official Assignee produced Rs. 60,000: it was said that if the property had been sold by the Court instead of by the Official Assignee, it might have fetched more, having regard to the high reputation obtaining for sales by the Court. But making all due allowance in that respect, the difference between the price fetched by the property and the debt due to the Allahabad Bank is so large that it is obvious that even if the property had been sold by the Court, the first mortgage would not have been satisfied and there would have been nothing left for the plaintiffs.

Consequently, if that course had been followed, the two appellant defendants would have been in no better position. In fact they would have been worse off: they would not have obtained credit for even the Rs. 20, the result of the sale of the 21st April 1917, which has been directed to be deducted from the plaintiffs' claim.

For the above-mentioned reasons, in my judgment, this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

WOODROFFE, J.—It may be that if the whole of the mortgaged properties had been sold by the Official Assignee, there could not have been another sale under the mortgage decree. But that is not the case here. What was sold by the Official Assignee were Zemindaris in Mymensingh and Pabna. The Official Assignee did not sell two other properties, viz., (a) outstandings due to A. H. Guznavi in his business of the United Bengal Company. The paper-book on this point has been mis-printed, (b) the claims of the said defendant against Messrs. Berg Sons, Ltd., and Messrs. Donald Campbell & Co. It is said that nothing is due on any of these accounts. This may be the statement of A. H. Guznavi, but it does not prevent this apparent interest of his being sold. If it be the fact that a mortgagor represented that there was money due to him and mortgaged it, the mortgagee cannot be prejudiced in his personal remedies if such statement were in fact untrue. If it were so, a man might fraudulently represent that he was the owner of property and mortgage it and thus prevent the carrying out of a mortgage decree on the ground that there was no property to sell.

But it is next argued that even if properties (a) and (b) were not sold and could be sold under the mortgage decree, that would not entitle the mortgagee to a decree for the balance. It is argued that the property which must be sold before such balance is ascertained must be the whole property but that though properties (a) and (b) had not been sold, yet the Zemindaris had been sold and, therefore, the whole of the mortgaged property could not be sold so as to found an application for a personal decree for the balance. The Zemindari property was in fact put up for sale. Even if it be assumed that these properties could not be re-sold, then all the property which could be sold was in fact sold and fetched Rs. 20, which indicates that it is worth something. The argument of the appellant is of a highly technical character. I am not prepared to hold that the present case is without the scope of the order. No doubt the argument may be with strictness maintained that a personal decree cannot be obtained in any case where the whole of the property directed to be sold has not been sold for whatsoever cause may be. But such a rigid interpretation of the section would lead to manifest absurdity and injustice. Thus, as was put in the argument, if, after a decree directing the sale of land and a house, the latter should be burnt so that it could not be sold, in such a case on the argument of the appellant no personal decree could be got because, as a foundation for it, the whole mortgaged property, namely, land and house directed to be sold, could not be sold. We must look at this matter rationally and with reference to the reason of the rule, namely, that the personal liability will only be enforced where there is a deficiency after the sale of all the mortgaged property available for sale at the date of sale. In other words, the personal liability must not be improperly increased. I cannot say that the conclusion at which the learned Judge has arrived is erroneous, and I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, rr. 4, 5, 10—Mortgage suit—Costs in appeal, whether part of decretal amount—Practice.

Costs awarded in mortgage suits, including costs of appeal, form part of the decretal amount and are realisable in the first instance by sale of the mortgaged property and not otherwise. [p. 329, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Sub-Judge, Lucknow, dated the 14th March 1918.

The Hon'ble Mr. Wazir Hasan, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Zakur Ahmad and Bisheshar Nath Srivastava, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings under a mortgage decree. There were two suits between the parties, a suit for sale on a mortgage brought by the appellant Sadiq Husain against the respondents Hashim Ali and Qasim Ali, and a declaratory suit brought by the latter against the former for a declaration that the property was not liable to sale under the mortgage. The first Court decided both suits in Sadiq Husain's favour. The respondents were to a large extent successful in this Court but, on a further appeal being preferred to the Privy Council, their Lordships restored the decree of the Subordinate Judge. Both appeals were heard together and the successful appellant Sadiq Husain was awarded his costs of both suits by a single order. The costs were afterwards apportioned by this Court between the two suits. The question in this appeal is whether the costs incurred in the appeal to the Privy Council in the mortgage suit can be recovered in the first instance otherwise than from the mortgaged property.

The proceedings in mortgage suits and the form of the decree in such suits are regulated by the provisions of Order XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure, and in particular by rules 4, 5 and 10 of that Order. In accordance with that Order it is the settled practice in this country to treat costs in such suits, including costs in appeal, as part of the decretal amount realisable in the first instance by sale of the mortgaged property and not otherwise. If any authority is necessary for so well-settled a rule, we may refer to Raj Kumar Singh v. Sheo Narayan Sahu (1). The appellant's contention is that the Privy Council is not bound by the Code of Civil Procedure and that they have not expressly said that the costs in the mortgage suit are to be recovered as part of the mortgage decree. No doubt the Privy Council can override the Code of Civil Procedure if they wish, but the presumption is that unless they give special directions to the contrary, they intend the costs to be realised in the way in which they would be realised under the ordinary law. It is not to be expected that the Privy Council should enter into details as to the manner in which costs awarded by them are to be realised. That is left to the operation of the ordinary law. Even Courts of Appeal in India frequently omit to specify details of this kind. A case occurred quite recently in which the Allahabad High Court was required to interpret one of its own decrees passed in a suit for sale on a mortgage, Damber Singh v. Kalyan Singh (2). The judgment was in much the same form as the Privy Council's order in the present case. It simply directed that the decree of the Court of first instance should be restored with costs in all Courts. The question arose whether the costs in appeal were recoverable as part of the mortgage decree from the mortgaged property or as an ordinary money decree. Their Lordships held that in construing the decree it was open to them to consider the nature of the suit and the general practice of the Court in regard to mortgage decrees and that having regard to these matters, the intention was that there should be the ordinary mortgage decree awarding the costs incurred in the suit and up to the time of the final decree of the High Court to be realised by sale of the mortgaged property. This is the conclusion at which the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived in this case and, in our opinion, it is a correct conclusion. The appellant has attempted to base a further argument on the fact that the costs in the two suits are dealt with together in the Privy Council's order. This certainly cannot be construed to mean that the costs in each suit were not to be realised in the manner appropriate to that suit. In fact this argument is two edged since the Privy Council deal in one sentence with costs before themselves and costs in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner and the appellant himself has treated the latter costs as recoverable under the mortgage decree. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is, in our opinion, correct and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

(1) 35 C. 431; 12 Q. W. N. 364; 8 C. L. J. 152,

Appeal dismissed.

Landlord and tenant—Lease, permanent and heritable, grant of—Re-entry, right of, reservation of—Assignment of tenure.

When a landlord grants a permanent and heritable tenure in land, he has no estate left in him, unless he reserves to himself a right of re-entry or reversion. [p. 331, col. 2.]

Where one of the clauses of a lease was as follows:—
"If the said land and bari be not used for dwelling purposes the right under the pattah shall be void."
Held, that the clause did not amount to a reservation of a right of re-entry. [p. 331, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Mullick, dated the 8th April 1914, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1590 of 1911, against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Barisal, dated the 29th March 1911, reversing that of the Munsif, Additional Court, Barisal, dated the 24th January 1910.

FACTS of the case will appear from the following judgment of MULLICK, J.—The vendors of the defendants executed a Kabuliyat in favour of the plaintiff on the 7th Chaitra 1283, B. S. i. e., before the Transfer of Property Act came into operation. The plaintiff now sues the defendants in ejectment, on the ground that the vendors had no power to alienate. The Munsif has decreed the suit but the Subordinate Judge has dismissed it. Hence this second appeal. The Kabuliyat runs as follows:

"That on our prayer to get a lease of karsa raiyati of all the lands and the bari, you have granted us a raiya karsa lease of the lands of the miras karsa described in the schedule below at a kaini mokurrari jama of Rs. 14 payable annually. God forbid that if the land be not used as homestead lands the lease will become void and we will not be able to cut down old trees and raise and excavate earth; but if we are in need of doing such acts we shall do so after taking your permission. If we do these acts without your permission we shall pay compensation, etc., ...

MOHAMMAD REAJUDDIN AHMAD v. BASUDA SUNDARI DAS.

... keeping the former boundaries intact and improving the lands, we, our sons and grandsons (putra pautradi krame) shall enjoy the lands."

It is admitted before me that the Bengal Tenancy Act does not govern the case, the lands being only leased for the purpose of a homestead. It is also admitted that the tenancy is heritable and subject to a fixed rate of rent. But the plaintiff's contentions are that it is not alienable, that therefore it is only permanent in a restricted sense, that in the absence of express power to alienate the defendants must be held to be trespassers. Having regard to the words kaimi mokurrari and putra pautradi krame and the general nature of the lease, I agree with the Subordinate Judge that the tenancy is permanent in the fullest sense. Now all such tenures were before the enactment of the Transfer of Property Act by custom transferable and in this respect the Act has effected no difference in the law. The defendants, therefore, are not trespassers and the plaintiff's suit must fail. In any event the transfer to the defendants would be operative on the principle laid down in Basarat Ali Khan v. Manirulla (1) and the suit must be dismissed. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In my judgment this appeal should be dismissed. The question really depends upon the construction which is to be put upon the lease of the 19th of March 1879. The learned Vakil who has argued this case for the appellant admits that the tenure which was thereby created is a permanent and heritable tenure, and, therefore, it would come within the passage to which I drew his attention just now, in the case of Nil Madhab Sikdar v. Naraitam Sikdar (2). The passage is at page 828 and is as follows: "Moreover, it seems doubtful whether, when a landlord grants a permanent and heritable tenure in land, he has any estate left in him, unless he reserves to himself a right of re-entry or reversion; for it has been held in the case of Sonet Kooer v. Himmat Bahadoor (3) that in the case of the grant of an absolute hereditary mokurrari tenure it will, on failure of heirs of the lessee, escheat to the Crown, and will not revert to the original grantor or his heirs." It is said by the learned Vakil that in the present case the landlord reserved to himself a right of re-entry, because he says the passage is: "God forbid, if the said land and bari be not used for dwelling purposes the right under the pattah shall be void." I doubt very much whether that should be construed to be a reservation of the right of re-entry by the landlord. It does not say so in so many words, and the form in which the right of re-entry is usually inserted is well-known, and it might have been inserted if it was intended. But even assuming that it does amount to a right of re-entry, upon what does that right depend? The passage which, it is now clear, has been correctly and accurately translated is this: "if the said land and bari be not used for dwelling purposes the right under the pattah shall be void." The learned Vakil wants us to put a construction upon that sentence in this way: "if the said land and bari be not used for dwelling purposes by us," or I suppose "by our sons, grandsons and so on," "then the right, etc." I do not think that that is the correct interpretation to be put upon that part of the lease, and I do not think that it should be limited in the way, which is contended. Therefore, even if it does amount to a reservation of the right of re-entry on the part of the landlord, the condition upon which it was based has not arisen. The tenure being a permanent one and also a heritable one was capable of assignment, unless there were words clearly and distinctly limiting that right of assignment, and clearly giving the landlord a right of re-entry on the alienation. I do not find that in the document.

For these reasons, I think that the judgment of Mr. Justice Mullick, based as it Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated the 11th January 1917.

Messrs. Mohammad Beg and M. A. Khan, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Rudra Dutt Sinha and Laddie Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for decision in this case is one of limitation. The suit was brought on a bond which was executed on the 26th of May 1909. The bond was registered. The executant of the bond was one Saiyed Haider Mehdi who is impleaded as the second defendant, and the bond was executed in favour of the first defendant Bishunath Singh alias Sheo Nath Singh. The present plaintiff claims to be an assignee of the debt from Bishunath Singh.

The suit was instituted on the 29th of June 1916. The Subordinate Judge has held that it was put in seven days beyond limitation. In our opinion the decision of the Subordinate Judge is wrong. The question has to be determined with reference to the language of the bond. In his judgment on the first issue the Subordinate Judge has reproduced verbatim the language of the deed which is relevant to the matter under consideration:—

"Iqrar karte hain ki mublighan mazkur mai sud akhira mah Jeth 1317 Fasli mutabiq akhira mah June san 1910 ada wa bebaq kar denge."

It is admitted that the last day of Jeth 1317 Fasli fell upon the 22nd of June 1910, and it was in view of this fact that the learned Subordinate Judge arrived at the conclusion that this suit had been filed a week beyond time. On the other hand, the contention is that for the purpose of this agreement the parties settled between themselves that the last day of Jeth 1317 Fasli was to be taken to be the same as the last day of June 1910. We think this contention must prevail. There were cases cited before the Subordinate Judge which support the contention. The Subordinate Judge, for reasons which we are not able to appreciate, held that these rulings were not applicable and he applied to the case the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council which is reported as Jagatpal Singh v. Jageshwar Bakhsh Singh (1). That was a case in which report had been made by a patwari regarding the death of a certain person. The patwari gave the date according to the Hindi calendar and by way of explanation added that the Hindi date corresponded to a certain date in the English calendar. Their Lordships held that for the purpose of deciding the question of the date of the death which was reported, the Hindi date was the proper date to be taken into consideration. Obviously there is a great difference between that case and the case now before us. Here for the purpose of payment the parties agreed between themselves that one date should correspond to another, and, in our opinion, the suit was within time if brought within six years from the 30th of June 1910. The case has been disposed of on this preliminary issue.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 3, proviso, 43 (2), 46—Subordinate Judge declining to take action under s. 43—Appeal, whether lies—"Court" in s. 43, meaning of.

Per Teunon, J.—Against the order of a Subordinate Judge invested with insolvency jurisdiction in certain classes of cases under the proviso to section 3 of the Provincial Insolvency Act declining to take action against an insolvent under section 43 (2) of the Act, no appeal lies to the District Court. [p. 334, col. 1.]

Iyappa Nainar v. Manikka Asari, 27 Ind. Cas. 241; 40 M. 630, followed.

Per Newbould, J.—The word "Court" in section 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act does not mean the Court of original jurisdiction only. [p. 335, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Dacca, dated the 23rd November 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Bepin Chandra Bose), for the Appellant.—No appeal lay to the District Judge against the order of the Subordinate Judge and the order passed by the District Judge in appeal, which was incompetent, is without jurisdiction. No appeal lay against an order of the Subordinate Judge rejecting an application under section 43, clause 2 (b), of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Hence the order passed by the District Judge is without jurisdiction. Referred to Iyappa Nainar v. Manikka Asari (1).

The proceeding under section 43, clause 2 (b), of the Provincial Insolvency Act is in the nature of a criminal proceeding.

(1) 27 Ind. Cas. 241; 40 M. 630,

The District Judge ought to have adopted a procedure laid down for criminal cases and ought to have framed charges; the notice was to show cause why the petitioner should not be committed to the Criminal Court; and the petitioner cannot be convicted without any charge having been framed.

Babu Prokash Chandra Pakrashi, for the Respondent.—The Court of the District Judge is a Court as defined in the Provincial Insolvency Act and the jurisdiction of the District Judge is concurrent with that of the Subordinate Judge. An appeal lay to the Court of the District Judge against an order refusing to annul an order of adjudication. Even if no appeal lay, he had concurrent jurisdiction with that of the Subordinate Judge and the order passed by the District Judge was perfectly valid having been passed in the exercise of his jurisdiction.

JUDGMENT.

TEUNON, J.—This is an appeal against an order made or purporting to be made by the District Judge of Dacca in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction. By this order under section 43 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, he sentences the appellant to three months' simple imprisonment on the ground that he had fraudulently concealed certain articles of property. It appears that on the 11th November 1914 the appellant applied to the Court of the 1st Subordinate Judge of Dacca, invested with jurisdiction in certain classes of cases under the proviso to section 3 of the Act, to be adjudged an insolvent. On the 1st May 1915, notwithstanding the opposition of 5 of the 7 creditors mentioned in the schedule to the application, an order of adjudication was made and a Receiver appointed for the properties of the insolvent.

Thereafter the Receiver enquired into certain allegations made by the creditors to the effect that the insolvent had concealed his yautuk properties, that is, the gifts made to him on the occasion of his marriage, and reported against the insolvent on the 1st July 1916. The Subordinate Judge, after hearing the creditors and the insolvent, came to the conclusion that the articles had been disposed of before the insolvency, declined to annul the order of adjudication and rejected the petitions of the opposing creditors in which, inter alia, they had prayed that the insolvent should be punished under section 43 (2).

Three of the creditors thereupon appealed to the District Judge, who directed the insolvent to show cause why he should not be committed to the Criminal Court under section 43 (2), and after taking evidence on both sides on the 23rd March 1917 made the order against which the present appeal has been preferred.

The contentions advanced before us are (1) that against the order of the Subordinate Judge declining to deal with the insolvent under section 43 (2) (b) no appeal lay to the District Judge, (2) that the proceedings before the District Judge were vitiated by certain irregularities and (3) that on the merits no sentence of imprisonment should have been imposed.

The first contention is based on the decision reported as Lyappa Nainar v. Manikka Asari (1), wherein it has been held that a creditor is not a person aggrieved by the refusal of the Court to sentence the insolvent under section 43 (2).

But the learned District Judge proceeds on the ground that inasmuch as under the proviso to section 3 his Court and the Subordinate Judge's Court have concurrent jurisdiction, the proceedings having been removed to his Court, his order under section 43 (2) was to be regarded as an original order. Here, in my opinion, he has fallen into error. No doubt the two Courts have concurrent jurisdiction, with the result that either Court has jurisdiction to entertain such applications, and the proceedings might be withdrawn or transferred by the District Court under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure from the one to the other. But orders made by the Subordinate Judge, while he had seisin of the case, could be interfered with by the District Court only under the provisions of section 46, which in the matters therein dealt with subordinates all other Courts to the District Court, or under the powers conferred by the Code of Civil Procedure in regard to civil suits as provided in section 47.

Though with some hesitation, I agree with the Madras High Court in holding that against the order of the Subordinate Judge declining to take action against the insolvent under section 43 (2) no appeal lay to the District Court.

The irregularities alleged are that the notice served upon the insolvent contemplated his punishment, if at all, not in the proceedings then taken by the District Court but in subsequent proceedings, that the District Court framed no formal charge, and that in the proceedings the insolvent was examined and cross-examined. With regard to the first of these contentions it is sufficient to say that any misapprehension on the part of the insolvent was removed in the course of the proceedings before the District Court. With regard to the remaining two I may point out that in the Provincial Insolvency Act there is no provision corresponding with section 104 (3) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and that decisions under that Act, therefore, are of little assistance. On the contrary section 47 applies to all proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act the procedure in civil suits. In view, however, of the decision on the first question I need not come to any definite decision on these two questions.

On the merits we need not point out that when the insolvent made his application he had but recently attained his majority. It would seem, therefore, that the debts were incurred before or soon after he became of age. The father is no doubt well-to-do, but no obligation rests upon a father to re-imburse those who recklessly give credit to profligate young men, the more especially when in this case, some months before, the father had circulated notices warning his townsmen that he would not be responsible for debts contracted by his son.

On the merits, therefore, we think the sentence should be set aside.

This appeal is accordingly decreed.

NEWBOULD, J.—I am unable to agree with my learned brother that the order passed by the District Judge, under section 43 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, was an appellate and not an original order. In the petition of appeal to this Court the first ground is that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to start proceedings. It also appears from the order-sheet of the proceedings in the Court of the Subordinate Judge that that officer did not contemplate exercising penal jurisdiction but directed an enquiry by the Receiver as to property alleged to have been concealed, under the erroneous idea that such concealment would be a ground for annulling the order of adjudication. This is evident from the orders of the 15th September 1915 and 22nd July 1916. In this view of the case the decision of the Madras High Court in Iyappa Nainar v. Manikka Asari (1) has no application.

I can see no grounds for accepting the second contention of the appellants that the word "Court" in section 43 of the Act means the Court of original jurisdiction.

I am in entire agreement with my learned brother that on the merits the sentence should be set aside and would decree the appeal on this ground.

Defendant No. 1 had executed a kabuliyat for these lands in favour of the Maharaja of Burdwan on 5th September 1896. The kabuliyat recited that at the time of its execution, negotiations were proceeding between the Government, the zemindar and the ghatwal for the resumption of these lands, which had not been at that time resumed and transferred to the zemindar. It was also clear from a lease, which was the counterpart of the kabuliyat and was executed on 29th January 1899 that up to that time the resumption had not taken place.

Held, that on the date of the execution purchase by the plaintiff, the judgment-debtor had not ceased to be a ghatwal and, therefore, had no transferable right in the lands, so that the plaintiff got nothing by his purchase at the execution sale. [p. 336, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 in an action for recovery of possession of certain lands which were originally ghatwali chakran lands and situated in the zemindari of the Maharaja of Burdwan.

It appears that the defendant No. 1 was the ghatwal of these lands and on the 24th January 1899 in execution of a decree for money against him, his right, title and interest in these lands were sold and purchased by the plaintiff. The plaintiff alleges that at that time defendant No. 1 had obtained a transferable right in these lands by virtue of a kabuliyat executed by him in favour of the Maharaja on the 5th September 1896.

The whole question in dispute is as to the nature of the right created by this kabuliyat. If on the day of the auction-sale the defendant No. 1 had acquired a valid transferable right under this document, the plaintiff, as purchaser of that right, is entitled to succeed. If on the other hand it is found that defendant No. 1 had not at that time acquired any right which was capable of being transferred, the plaintiff has taken nothing and his suit is bound to fail. That document recites that at the time of its execution, negotiations were proceeding between the Government, the zemindar and the ghatwal for the resumption of these lands. It is quite clear, however, that the lands at that time had not been resumed and transferred to the zemindar. It is also quite clear from the lease, which is the counterpart of this document, and was executed on the 29th January 1899, that even up to that time the resumption had not taken place.

We must, therefore, proceed on the assumption that on the 5th September 1896, and up to the 24th January 1899, the defendant No. 1 was the ghatwal in possession and he was bound to perform the services as ghatwal to the Government. The lease expressly recites that if the Government for any reason does not release the executant from the performance of the ghatwali service in the manner aforesaid, he would not be bound by the kabuliyat executed by him and that it would be inoperative. There cannot be any possible doubt that up to 24th January 1899, the defendant No. 1 had not been released by the Government from the performance of the ghatwali service. It is manifest, therefore, that on the 24th January 1899 the defendant No. 1 had not ceased to be ghatwal and no valid rights had been created in his favour up to that date under the document of the 5th September 1896. If after the 24th January 1899, when the plaintiff purchased, there has been any transaction between the Government and the zemindār and the ghatwal, it is impossible to say that the plaintiff could derive any benefit from such transaction. Her title dates at the earliest from the 24th January 1899; she is purchaser of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor as they stood on that particular date. We have found that on that date the judgment-debtor had no transferable right; the plaintiff, therefore, has taken nothing by her purchase and cannot succeed.

The result is that this appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

It was agreed between the parties to an appeal that the cost of printing and preparing the record should be shared equally between them. In consequence of this arrangement the plaintiffs made a deposit in Court of a certain sum, out of which the Court subsequently appropriated the actual cost of printing and preparing the record. Thereafter the plaintiffs sued the defendants for contribution:

Appeal from the order of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 24th January 1917, upholding that of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 18th October 1916.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellants.

Babu Lachman Prasad Varma, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this appeal were concerned in a certain litigation which went ultimately to the Privy Council. It was agreed between them that the costs of printing and preparing the record for the Privy Council should be shared between them in equal shares. In consequence of this arrangement the plaintiffs, Iqbal Narain and others, made a deposit in Court on the 25th of January 1912 of a sum of over Rs. 23,000. On the 29th of January 1913 the Court intimated that the actual costs of printing and preparing the record was Rs. 6,472-2-5. The present suit has been brought by the plaintiffs to recover the defendants' share of this sum. Both the Courts have dismissed the claim on the ground that it was barred by limitation. Article 61 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act was applied and it was held by both the Courts that limitation began to run from the 25th of January 1912. In my opinion this decision was wrong. The date of payment for the purpose of Article 61 could not have been earlier than the 29th of January 1913. What was done on the 25th January 1912 was that the money was merely deposited in Court. It cannot be said that on that date there was any payment to any person on behalf of the defendants and until the money was appropriated in accordance with the actual estimate of which the parties were given notice on the 29th of January 1913, it cannot be said that there was any definite payment on the defendants' behalf. The suit was brought within three years from the 29th of January 1913 and is, in my opinion, within limitation. This is the only question which is raised in the case. The result is that the decision of the Court below is reversed and the plaintiffs' claim is decreed with costs in all three Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 207, 254, 346, 347—Committal to Sessions, by Magistrate having power to sentence adequately, legality of—Grounds of commitment—Warrant cases, powers of Magistrates in trial of.

Section 254 of the Criminal Procedure Code makes it imperative on a Magistrate only to frame a charge, and not to complete the trial to conviction or acquittal. That section simply lays down the procedure for the trial of warrant cases where the Magistrate considers it right and proper for himself to go on with the trial and is in no way a limitation of the right of a Magistrate given to him under section 347 to commit a case for trial if he thinks that he should do so. [p. 338, col. 2.]

Section 347 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not restrict the grounds on which a Magistrate should arrive at his opinion to commit a case to want of jurisdiction in himself or to his inability, in his own opinion, to sentence the accused adequately. Even where he can inflict the maximum sentence for the offence, he may still commit the accused for trial to the Court of Session or the High Court on such grounds as complicated questions of law arising or the case being a fit one to be tried by a Jury or with the aid of Assessors. [p. 338, col. 1.]

Queen-Empress v. Kayemullah Mandal, 24 C 429; 1 C. W. N. 414; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 954, King-Empress v. Dharam Singh, 1 M. L. T. 61; A. W. N. 1906) 28; 3 A. L. J. 14; 3 Cr. L. J. 94 and Empercr v. Jagmohan, 4 Ind. Cas. 812; 11 Cr. L. J. 54; 6 A. L. J. 989, disapproved.

Per Napier, J.—The powers of a Magistrate, who has taken a warrant case on his file for trial, are as follows:—He may try it through himself if he has jurisdiction; he may, if he thinks he cannot inflict a proper sentence, act under section 364 or 349 and send it to a higher Magistrate, or he may, if he thinks that it is a proper case for Sessions, commit the accused under section 347 or if he has not power to commit, send it to another Magistrate to commit under section 346. [p. 340, col. 1.]

Petition praying that, in the circumstances stated therein, the High Court will be pleased to quash the committal order of the Court of the 3rd Presidency Magistrate, George Town, Madras, dated the 26th July 1918, in Calendar Case No. 13163 of 1918.

Mr. Sydney Smith, acting for the Crown Prosecutor, for the Petitioner.

Mr. V. Visvanatha Sastri, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—This is an application

by the Crown Prosecutor for quashing the commitment made by the 3rd Presidency Magistrate, George Town, Madras, to the High Court Sessions of a case falling under section 304 (a) of the Indian Penal Code punishable with 2 years' imprisonment of either description or fine (of unlimited amount) or both and triable by a Court of Session or a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the First Class. The ground on which we are asked to quash the commitment is, that under section 254 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate ought to try a case himself till it ends either in a conviction or acquittal before him (see section 258), unless he thinks that the offence could not be adequately punished by him, and that in this case it was impossible for the Magistrate to entertain such an opinion because he had powers under the Code to inflict imprisonment of either description up to 2 years, which is the maximum punishment provided for the offence. This argument, in the first place, ignores the fact that the offence is also punishable with fine of unlimited extent, whereas the Presidency Magistrate's powers of fining are limited to the amount of Rs. 1,000 [see section 32, Criminal Procedure Code, clause (a)] and cases are conceivable where a rich man guilty under section 304 (a) could more appropriately be sentenced to a fine of Rs. 5,000 by a Sessions Court than by a Presidency Magistrate with imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000. However, this is a minor point.

The important question is, whether section 254 does make it imperative on the Magistrate, if the offence could be adequately punished by him, to try the case till the end and whether it imperatively forbids him from committing the case to the Sessions. So far as the words of section 254 go, that section only directs the Magistrate to frame a charge against the accused. What the Magistrate has to do after framing the charge must depend upon the provisions contained in the succeeding sections of the Code dealing with the further proceedings in the trials of warrant cases. In Chapter XXIV containing general provisions as to enquiries and trials, we have got 3 sections—sections 346, 347 and 349—which we were invited in the arguments to consider in this connection. Section 346 relates to the procedure of a Magistrate other than a Presidency Magistrate in certain contingencies. That section may, therefore, be ruled out. As regards section 349 it relates to the procedure of a Magistrate of a 2nd or a 3rd Class under certain circumstances. That also has, therefore, no material bearing in the consideration of the question before us. Then we have got section 347, which gives very wide powers to a Magistrate. In any trial or proceeding before him and at any stage he can, even just before signing judgment, commit a case before him to a Court of Session or the High Court, (provided, of course, he is empowered to commit cases to that Court) if it appears to him that the case is one which ought to be tried by a Court of Session or the High Court. It does not restrict the grounds on which he should arrive at his opinion to want of jurisdiction in himself or to his inability, in his own opinion, to sentence the accused adequately. If he considers, for instance, that a complicated question of law arises or that some connected matter is already before the Court of Session or that the facts are such that trial with the aid of a Jury or with the aid of Assessors (who may be chosen from experts in the particular matters involved in the case) would be a more satisfactory procedure. I see nothing in section 347 to prevent a Magistrate from committing the case to a Court of Session. Section 347 does not say that the Magistrate is bound to put his reasons on record for entertaining the opinion that the case is one which ought to be tried by the Court of Session or the High Court. No doubt, the decision of the Bench in Queen-Empress v. Kayemullah Mandal (1) and the decisions of Single Judges of the Allahabad High Court reported as King-Emperor v. Dharam Singh (2) and Emperor v. Jagmohan (3) do support the contention of the Crown Prosecutor that unless the Magistrate thinks that he is unable to punish the accused adequately he ought not to commit the accused to the Court of Session. There are, however, two decisions, one in Empress v. Kudrutoollah (4) and the other (of a Full Bench of this Court) Ohinnimarigadu, In the matter of (5), where there are observations which, in my opinion, indicate that the commitment by a competent Magistrate on the ground that in the Magistrate's opinion the case is a fit one to be tried by a Court of Session, cannot be interfered with by the High Court. And I think that the 24 Calcutta case [Queen-Empress v. Kayemullah Mandal (1)] and the two Allahabad cases [King-Emperor v. Dharam Singh (2) and Emperor v. Jagmohan (3)] have given much wider effect to the language of section 254 than that language could properly support. That section makes it imperative on the Magistrate only to frame a charge and not to complete the trial to conviction or acquittal. I would, therefore, dismiss this petition.

NAPIER, J.—I entirely agree. We are asked to exercise our powers under section 215 of the Criminal Procedure Code and quash a commitment to the High Court made by the Presidency Magistrate. We can, of course, only do so on a point of law and we are, therefore, not concerned with the reasons given by the Magistrate for making the commitment.

But it has been argued before us by the Crown Prosecutor that the commitment is bad in law in that the Magistrate has not certified that he cannot adequately punish the accused who is put up before him for trial and that even if he had done so, his reason would have been bad, because he has in fact power to inflict the maximum punishment. The offence for which the accused has been committed is section 304 (a), Indian Penal Code. Now, offences under this section are specifically stated in the 2nd Schedule of the Code to be triable by a Court of Session, a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the First Class. Therefore, at the outset this suggestion of the Crown Prosecutor leads to a somewhat extraordinary position, that a Court of Session which is specifically empowered under the section cannot try the case because it cannot be committed to it by a First Class Magistrate.

It is suggested, however, by the Crown Prosecutor that Schedule II, where it speaks of a Court of Session, had in mind that, although the commitment for offences is not one of the ordinary powers of the Magistrate of a 2nd and 3rd Class, still those Courts can be empowered under section 206, and, therefore, that the trial by a Court of Session provided for, in the 8th paragraph of the 2nd Schedule would arise in cases where the accused had been committed by a 2nd or 3rd Class Magistrate empowered in that behalf. It is a somewhat strained application of the provision. A more reasonable hypothesis seems to me to be that this allocation of this offence to the Court of Session as well as a Magistrate of the First Class is an indication that in some circumstances a Court of Session would be the proper tribunal to try the case.

Passing from that, we have to consider what are the powers possessed by Magistrates with regard to warrant cases. The Crown Prosecutor has suggested to us and, indeed this is the basis of the whole of his argument, that section 254 of the Criminal Procedure Code is exhaustive and that there is no power in a Magistrate to commit a case for trial where he is competent to try it and it can be adequately punished by him. This is a somewhat startling proposition because, as my learned brother has pointed out, it is a frequent practice of Magistrates in this country to commit cases for trial to the Court of Session for other reasons, namely, convenience, complexity of facts or other matters. The Crown Prosecutor would have us hold that the whole of this procedure is wrong. Now, the whole of this argument hinges on the word 'shall' which is to be found in section 254. The Crown Prosecutor argues that the section requires that he shall frame in writing a charge against the accused and carries with it a further requirement that, having done so, he shall proceed under the remaining sections of that Chapter. I should have some difficulty in appreciating this argument were it not that it has found favour with a Bench of the High Court of Calcutta in a case reported as Queen-Empress v. Kayem-ullah Mandal (1). But with deference to the learned Judges, it seems to me that, in that decision, they ignore the very wide powers given by the Code to a Magistrate under sections 207 and 347. Section 207 provides the procedure on enquiry in cases which are exclusively triable by a Court of Session or the High Court, or, in the opinion of the Magistrate, ought to be tried by such Court. There are, therefore, a class of cases which are not triable exclusively by a Court of Session but which ought to be so tried. If we turn to section 347, which is in the Chapter containing general provisions as to enquiries and trials, we find a wide and general power given to Magistrates with regard to cases coming before them for trial. The words are: "If in any inquiry before a Magistrate, or in any trial before a Magistrate before signing judgment, it appears to him at any stage of the proceedings that the case is one which ought to be tried by the Court of Session or High Court, and if he is empowered to commit for trial, he shall stop further proceedings and commit the accused under the provisions hereinafter contained." If he is not empowered to commit for trial, he should proceed under section 346. That section says that if it appears to the Magistrate that the case is one which should be tried or committed for trial by some other Magistrate, he shall stay proceedings and submit the case with a brief report to any Magistrate, to whom he is subordinate or to such other Magistrate having jurisdiction as the District Magistrate directs. That is to say, whether the Magistrate has power to commit or not, if he thinks that the case is one which ought, in his opinion, to be tried by a Court of Session, he has absolute power to stop any further proceedings in the trial by himself. If he can commit, he may, If he cannot himself commit he may send to a Magistrate who will commit. It seems to me to be impossible to argue successfully that a specific provision like this in section 347, read together with section 207 which lays down the procedure in enquiries in such cases, can be limited because section 254 says that the Magistrate trying a warrant case shall frame a charge. Even if those words which are to be found in section 254 had been repeated in sections 255 and 256, I should still be of opinion that they were no bar to the exercise by a Magistrate of his power to commit a case. That section simply lays down the procedure for the trial of warrant cases where the Magistrate considers it proper and right for himself to go on with the trial, and is in no way a limitation of the right of a Magistrate given to him under section 347 to commit a case for trial if he thinks that he should do so.

MOUSI LAL v. EMPEROR.

The Crown Prosecutor has been unable to refer us to any section authorising a Magistrate to commit for trial where he cannot inflict a proper sentence which, according to him is the proper course, whereas there is a distinct provision for submission to a higher class Magistrate in such cases to be found in section 349. I am at a loss, therefore, to comprehend why the wide words of section 347 should be curtailed by reference to section 254 when there is a specific section, namely, section 349, which deals with circumstances referred to in section 254. My learned brother has referred to one case of this Court, Chinnimarigadu, In the matter of (5), and it seems to me to be conclusive on the point, for it lays down as axiomatic that it is competent to a Magistrate to say whether from the gravity of the matter or for any other sufficient reason the Sessions Court is the proper tribunal for the disposal of the case.

To sum up, the powers of the Magistrate, who has taken a warrant case on his file for trial, are as follows:—He may try it through himself if he has jurisdiction; he may, if he thinks he cannot inflict a proper sentence, act under section 346 or section 349 and send it to a higher Magistrate, or he may, if he thinks that it is a proper case for Sessions, commit the accused under section 347 or if he has not power to commit, send it to another Magistrate to commit under section 346. This being my view of the law, I am of opinion that we have no jurisdiction to quash the committal in this case and that the trial before the Judge sitting in Session must go on.

One L. was arrested by a constable under a warrant, which was not signed by the Magistrate issuing it and which was made over to the Thana Officer on an order purporting to have been made by the District Superintendent of Police but not signed by anybody. L. was rescued by the other accused, who caused unnecessary hurt to the constable in effecting the rescue:

Held, (1) that the warrant was defective and that the constable having purported throughout to act under the warrant, the arrest of L. was illegal and that the latter was not, therefore, guilty of any offence in effecting his escape; [p. 340, col. 2.]

(2) that the persons who effected L.'s rescue were guilty of an offence under section 323 of the Penal Code. [p. 341, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The accused in Criminal Revision No. 483, Lal Bahadur, has been convicted of an escape from lawful custody and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment. The lawful custody is alleged to have been effected by one Mathura Lal, constable, on a warrant which, it is admitted, was not signed by the Magistrate issuing it and made over to the Thana Officer on an order purporting to be made by the District Superintendent of Police, but not signed by anybody. It was admitted for the purpose of the argument in the Courts below that this warrant is defective. We need not go into this question. It is alleged, however, that the warrant itself was sufficient authority for the arrest, inasmuch as by it the constable had reason to believe that the person to be arrested had committed a cognizable offence. Had the constable said so himself, we might conceivably have accepted this view, but nowhere in his evidence does he suggest that he had reason for such belief. He purports to have acted under cover of the warrant, and we must take the case as stated by the complainant in it. Lal Bahadur must be acquitted and discharged from his bail if he is not required for any other offence.

In Criminal Revision No. 464, the same remarks apply. It is clear on the evidence that the three men convicted of effecting the accused's rescue caused unnecessary hurt to the constable. One of the injuries inflicted was a blow over the eye with 'Dhanta'. We are not able to hold that this assault was justified even if the arrest of Mathura Lal was technically wrong. It was Basdeo Singh who is responsible for the principal injury, Mauji Lal was responsible really for the whole occurrence by giving the orders to beat the constable in order to rescue the accused.

The three accused were sentenced to nine months' rigorous imprisonment each, under section 353. In the exercise of our powers in revision we alter these convictions to convictions under section 323 and direct that Basdeo Singh be sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment, Mauji Lal to three months' rigorous imprisonment, and Kari Singh to three months' rigorous imprisonment. We see no reason to continue the bonds into which the accused have been directed to enter for the keeping of the peace. Clearly this was an offence committed on a sudden impulse. Lal Bahadur has now been convicted on the principal charge. There is no cause for anticipating a further breach of the peace by the accused.

Convictions altered.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the District Judge of Ganjam has reported to the High Court that the respondent has been convicted of keeping a common gaming house, in Berhampore town, an offence under section 6 of the Towns Nuisances Act, III of 1889, and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 100. The District Judge has followed the procedure prescribed with regard to charges under sections 13 and 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act by issuing a notice, framing a charge and hearing the respondent although, strictly speaking, that procedure is not required in cases such as this, which come under section 12 of the Act. Section 12 empowers the High Court to "suspend or dismiss any Pleader or Mukhtar holding a certificate issued under section 7 who is convicted of any criminal offence implying a defect of character which unfits him to be a Pleader or Mukhtar, as the case may be." The decision of the Privy Council in Rajendro Nath Mukerji, In the matter of (1) shows that we are not now to retry the case but that the question before us is whether the offence of which the respondent has been convicted implies a defect of character unfitting him to be a Pleader. Now, the offence is that the respondent, who is a Pleader of more than 20 years' standing and, according to his own showing, a man of considerable property, used the office which he rented for his business as a common gaming house and was discovered there at night with a number of people of all ranks of society with cards, coveys and other gambling instruments. incorporated Law Society, Ex parte (2), which was a case of a Solicitor who had been convicted of allowing houses belonging to him to be used as brothels, indicated the considerations which ought to guide the Court in these cases. He referred to the observation of Lord Mansfield in the earlier case of Brounsall, Ex parte (3) that it is necessary that members of all branches of the legal profession should stand free from all suspicion, and pointed out that the Court had not only to consider the Solicitor's duties to his clients, but also whether his conduct was of such a personally disgraceful character that he ought not to remain a member of a strictly honourable profession, and that other members of that profession ought not to be called upon to enter into that intimate intercourse with him that is necessary between two Solicitors even though they are acting for opposite parties. We think that the offence of which the respondent has been convicted is one which affects his character and the learned Advocate-General has shown that this is certainly so according to Hindu ideas.

We think that, in the circumstances, we are bound to deal with him under the Legal Practitioners Act and we have carefully considered what the sentence should be. This is the first time that any such case has come before the Court and it is possible that the Pleader was not fully alive, as he ought to have been, to the gravity of his conduct. We think it is sufficient to direct in this case that he be suspended from practice for six months. But this is not to be regarded as a precedent in future cases which may come before the Court. The respondent must also pay the costs of the day.

A person who falsely charges several persons with having committed an offence is guilty of as many separate offences and there is no impropriety in his being called to account under section 211 of the Penal Code in respect of each of such false charges. [p. 343, cols. 1 & 2.]

DIPCHAND V. EMPEROR.

Mr. Gaunt, for the Applicant.

Messrs. Wiltshire and Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On 31st March 1916 respondent laid information at the Police station that on Poonuswamy Nadar had caused hurt to him with a dah, and that applicant and others were present and abetted the causing of hurt. On 3rd April he filed a complaint to the same effect. Applicant and others appeared in Court and subsequently on 1st July applicant was discharged. On 10th July he applied for sanction to prosecute the respondent for falsely charging him with an offence under section 211, Indian Penal Code. On 21st July the applicant and respondent and their Pleaders appeared and arguments were heard, and the case was adjourned for orders on 24th July. Orders were not ready then, and the case stood over till the 26th, when sanction to prosecute was granted. On the same day the Magistrate gave judgment acquitting the other persons accused in the hurt case and ordering respondent's prosecution for falsely charging them.

On 2nd August applicant instituted a prosecution on his sanction and the trial proceeded till 16th August. On the 22nd August the respondent applied to the Sessions Court to revoke the sanction and on 6th October this was done. The applicant now seeks to have it restored.

The Sessions Judge's reasons for revoking the sanction were that the interests of justice will be sufficiently served by the prosecution of the respondent ordered by the Magistrate on 26th July and that to allow the sanction to stand would be unduly harassing the respondent in that he would be twice prosecuted for practically one offence, and that it was never intended by the Legislature that Courts should be used for the purpose of gratifying people's own feelings against other persons.....I cannot agree with the Sessions Judge. It is not the case that respondent's allegation that he was cut with a dah is entirely false. Having been so cut he falsely accused Poonuswamy Nadar of cutting him and applicant and others of being present and abetting the cutting. It seems to me that to falsely charge one person with being implicated in a crime is not the same offence as to falsely charge another person with being implicated in the same offence. The circumstances under which and the motives from which such false charges are made may be totally different, and it appears to me that there is no impropriety in the offender being called to account for making each of such false charges. In the present instance it does appear that the alleged false charge as against the petitioner may have been in some respects on a different footing from those against the other five persons, and I do not consider that the prosecution in respect of the five constituted sufficient reason for disallowing a prosecution by the petitioner, though in the event of both prosecutions ending in conviction it might be proper to take the sentence in one into account in passing sentence in the other. I think there were not sufficient reasons for revoking the sanction and I restore it. The trial in Criminal Regular No. 177 of 1916 of the First Additional Magistrate of Insein will proceed.

Order accordingly.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1905), s. 260 (1), cls. (d), (i)—House-breaking by night and theft—Value of property stolen over Rs. 50—Summary trial, legality of.

A Magistrate is not authorized to split up an offence so as to give himself jurisdiction over the parts which he would not have over the whole, thereby depriving the accused of his right to appeal. [p. 344, col. 1.]

Empress v. Abdool Karim, 4 O. 16; 3 C. L. R. 44; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 12, followed.

Clause (i) of section 260 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code must be read with clause (d), which only permits a summary trial for theft under section 390 of the Penal Code where the value of the property stolen does not exceed Rs. 50. [p. 344, col. 1.]

MATHURA v. EMPEROR.

The offence of house-breaking by night under section 457 of the Penal Code, accompanied by a theft of property worth more than fifty rupees, cannot legally be tried summarily under section 260 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Summary procedure in cases of serious offences even though legal is inappropriate.

Empress v. Bhikia, 13 C. P. L. R. 17, followed.

Criminal revision of the judgment and finding given by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, First Class, Damoh, on the 28th May 1918; in Summary Trial Case No. 53 of 1918.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—The applicant for revision has been summarily tried and convicted by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate of the 1st Class for an offence of house-breaking by night punishable under section 457, Indian Penal Code. An unappealable sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment has been passed. The first information was laid on the 7th March last, the informant giving at the same time a list of stolen property which he valued at Rs. 127-7-0. On the 16th April he gave a supplementary list, including articles valued at Rs. 50-9-0. The total value of the stolen property was, therefore, Rs. 178.

The case was clearly one which could not legally be tried summarily. It is true that under clause (i), section 260 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, offences under section 457, Indian Penal Code, may be so tried, but that clause must be read along with clause (d), which only permits a summary trial for theft under section 380 where the value of the property stolen does not exceed Rs. 50. The principle applicable is akin to the general one that a Magistrate is not authorized to split up an offence so as to give himself jurisdiction over the parts which he would not have had over the whole, thereby depriving the offender of his appeal. See Empress v. Abdool Karim (1).

The District Magistrate, who was called upon to show cause why the conviction and sentence should not be set aside, has admitted that the procedure adopted was illegal and no other point is now pressed before me. The proceedings of the Magistrate are set aside and the applicant will be re-tried in the manner laid down in Chapter XXI of the Criminal Procedure Code for the trial of warrant cases. He has already been transferred to the under-trial ward and will remain there till the re-trial is concluded. As stated in my order of the 28th ultimo, I am not prepared to allow him bail. The attention of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate should be directed to this Court's Criminal Circular No. 1—20 and also to the decision in Empress v. Bhikia (2). Summary procedure in this case, even if legal, would have been inappropriate, inasmuch as the offence committed was a very serious one, a house having been broken into while the owner along with most of his fellow-townsmen had evacuated the place owing to plague. The record contains no basis for a finding that the house-breaking was committed by night and that being so, a conviction under section 457 could not have been sustained.

Conviction set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 15, 16, 350—Rules framed by U. P. Government under s. 16, validity of—Trial before Bench of Magistrates—Judgment by Bench other than Bench which heard evidence, legality of.

The rules framed by the United Provinces Government under section 16 of the Criminal Procedure Code provided that in the case of Benches consisting of not more than three members, any two of the members shall form a quorum. It was also provided that if a Bench held an adjourned sitting for the disposal of a part-heard case, and the members at the adjourned sessions were not the same as sat at the first hearing of the case, the provisions of section 350 of the Code of Criminal Procedure would be held to apply to the case:

Held, (1) that the rules were intra vires the Government; [p. 346, col. 1.]

(2) that the effect of the rules was that any trial commenced before any two members of a Bench could lawfully be continued before any other two members, provided that if exception was taken by the accused to the proceeding before a differently constituted Bench, the trial must either be recommenced de novo or adjourned to a subsequent date on which the same Magistrates who commenced the trial might find it convenient to sit together. [p. 347, col. 2.]

At the first hearing of a case before a Bench of Magistrates the evidence for the prosecution was recorded. At the second hearing one of the Magistrates was replaced by another, who was not present at the first hearing, but the accused having stated that they had no objection to the trial being proceeded with, the trial was concluded and on a subsequent date judgment was pronounced by the Bench before which the trial had commenced.

Held, that one of the Magistrates who delivered the judgment being absent on the date of the second hearing it could not be said that the accused were not prejudiced, and that, therefore, the proceedings at the last hearing, when judgment was pronounced, were illegal and must be set aside. Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Farrukhabad.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Applicants.

Mr. R. Malcolmson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the three applicants, Mathura, Gangadin and Jagannath, have been convicted of an offence under section 13 of the Gambling Act, III of 1867. The one and only question raised by this application is, whether the trial of the applicants was or was not vitiated by any illegality or material irregularity in connection with the constitution of the Court which tried them for this offence. The Court in question was a Bench of Honorary Magistrates sitting at the town of Kaimganj. I find that the Local Government, in the exercise of the powers conferred upon it by section 15 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, had appointed three gentlemen, Mr. Jan Alam Khan, Mr. Nazir Ali Khan and Pandit Chaube Peary Lal, to be a Bench of Magistrates exercising jurisdiction in this particular place. It is not denied that the offence of which the applicants were tried was one within the jurisdiction of the aforesaid Bench, or that the sentence passed was one within the competence of the said Court. The point taken is as follows.

There were three hearings of this case in the trial Court. On December the 5th, 1917, the case was taken up by Mr. Nazir Ali Khan and Mr. Jan Alam Khan and the evidence for the prosecution was recorded. On the 16th of December 1917 when the Court resumed its sitting for the trial of this case, there were present on the Bench Mr. Jan Alam Khan and Pandit Chaube

Peary Lal. The accused were asked to state whether they desired this Bench to re-commence the trial de novo, or rather, I should say, that they were asked whether they would like to have the trial adjourned until the same two Magistrates who had commenced the trial should find it convenient to sit together again. The precaution was taken of obtaining from the accused a written petition, in which they stated that they had no objection to the hearing of the case proceeding before the Bench as then constituted and added that they particularly desired that there should be no delay in the disposal of the case. I understand that at the end of the hearing of December the 16th, 1917, the evidence had been completely taken, the accused had been examined and arguments had been heard. Nothing was left to be done except for the Court to pronounce judgment. The record does not make it quite clear why, under these circumstances, an adjournment of five days was ordered, but I am inclined to suspect that this was done under a bona fide belief that the proceedings would be more regular if judgment in the case were pronounced by the same two members of the Bench of Magistrates who had commenced the trial. It is admitted that on the 21st of December no objection was taken on behalf of the accused persons to the action of Mr. Nazir Ali Khan and Mr. Jan Alam Khan in proceeding to pass judgment. As bearing on the legality of these proceedings it requires to be noted further that, under section 16 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Local Government, or subject to the control of the Local Government the District Magistrate, is empowered to make rules for the guidance of the Magistrates' Benches in respect of various subjects, including amongst others the constitution of the Bench for conducting trials. The Local Government of these Provinces has issued for general information a set of draft rules and these have been generally adopted under the authority of the Magistrates of various districts. It is not suggested that these rules are not in force in the district of Farrukhabad. Indeed I understand from the orders of the District Magistrate and of the learned Sessions Judge on this record that the said rules are undoubtedly in force. Now under the second of these rules, it is laid down in respect of a Bench consisting of not more than three members, that any two of these shall form a quorum. In the next rule it is provided that, if the Bench holds an adjourned sitting for the disposal of a part-heard case, and the members at the adjourned sessions are not the same as sat at the first hearing of the case, the provisions of section 350 of the Code of Criminal Procedure will be held to apply to the case. The present applicants have brought the question of the legality of their trial to the notice of the District Magistrate in appeal and have also laid it before the Sessions Judge in revision. Both these Courts have expressed the opinion that the proceedings of the Bench of Honorary Magistrates were justified under the rules above referred to and that the trial was, under the circumstances, a perfectly legal one. I have been referred to various decisions of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts, of which the most important is that of Hardwar Singh v. Khaga Ojha (1). In that case the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court laid it down very broadly, that an Honorary Magistrate may not give judgment and pass sentence in a case unless he has been a member of the Bench during the whole of the hearing of the case. The attention of the Hon'ble Judges had been drawn to a rule framed by the Local Government of Bengal, purporting to make the provisions of section 350 of the Code of Criminal Procedure applicable to a case like the one now in question, but they held that this rule was ultra vires not being justified by anything in the provisions of section 16 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Madras High Court has in two reported cases adopted the same principle. I have seen the rules framed by the Local Governments of Bengal and of Madras under section 16 aforesaid, and I may say at once that these rules differ in one material particular from those framed by the Local Government of these Provinces. They contain nothing similar to the direction given by rule 2 of the rules framed under the orders of our Local Government, by which any two members of a Bench of Honorary

Magistrates consisting of three members shall form a quorum. As to the meaning of that expression there can, I conceive, be no room for doubt. In the case of any Board of Directors or other Committee, if there is a rule providing that so many members of the said Board or Committee shall form a quorum, the meaning of the rule is that, as soon as the requisite number of members is gathered together, the entire authority of the said Board or Committee vests in the quorum so assembled, and obviously this authority extends to the transaction of business adjourned from a previous meeting as well as to the taking up of fresh business. The first question then about which there must be a definite decision is whether a rule directing that any two members of a Bench of Honorary Magistrates consisting of not more than three members shall form a quorum, is one which the Local Government was entitled to make, or to cause to be made, under section 16 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. As a mere matter of judicial interpretation it seems to me that such a rule clearly falls under section 16, clause (c), of the Code of Criminal Procedure, being covered by the words:—"the constitution of the Bench for conducting trials." When the Local Government appointed the three gentlemen already mentioned to be a Bench of Honorary Magistrates exercising certain powers within the limits of the town of Kaimganj, the inference would be, in the absence of any rule or order to the contrary, that the Bench would not be properly constituted unless all three of the gentlemen named were present at each and all of its sittings. The Local Government regarded this as inconvenient and was of opinion that, for the convenience of the public, the work which it desired the Bench of Magistrates at Kaimganj to carry out could best be performed by appointing three Magistrates and then empowering any two of them to sit together as a complete Court for the trial of cases or the transaction of other business. I repeat that, in my opinion, it was within the competence of the Local Government to pass orders to this effect under the provisions of sections 15 and 16 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

I have now to consider what would be

(1) 20 C. 870; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 585.

MATHURA v. EMPEROR.

the result if the Local Government had issued no further directions for the guidance of this Bench of Magistrates. In my opinion the consequence would be that any trial commenced before any two members of this Bench could lawfully be continued before any other two members. The learned Judges of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts had no such rule before them as that which I have quoted regarding the number of Magistrates necessary to form a quorum, and the decisions pronounced by them, are, therefore, of no direct application to the present case. In saying this I do not wish to ignore the fact that on the principles laid down in the case of Hardwar Singh v. Khaga Ojha (1), it would be difficult to accept the proposition that the Legislature intended to empower the Local Government to pass any orders the effect of which would be as above stated. I think that the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court assumed, as a sort of major premise underlying the whole of their decision, that there was something repugnant to natural justice in the suggestion that the presiding officer of any Court should pass any final decision in a criminal trial, except upon evidence the whole of which had been tendered in his presence and heard by himself personally. I can only say that this proposition seems to me a very arguable one, and that under the Indian system of criminal procedure the exceptions to this rule seem to me to outnumber the instances. I must admit, therefore, that I do not find myself able to approach the consideration of the question quite from the same point of view as that taken by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court. At the same time I have endeavoured to discuss, as a pure question of law, the question whether sections 15 and 16 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, read together, do or do not authorise the Local Government to make rules, the effect of which would be that any two Magistrates out of a Bench of three or more should constitute a quorum for the transaction of all business and the hearing of all cases lawfully coming before such Bench for disposal, including the further hearing of a criminal trial adjourned from a previous sitting. For the reasons stated I have come to the conclusion that the Local Government is so empowered and that the rules under which this Bench of Honorary Magistrates was constituted were perfectly legal. If I am right so far, then the question of the competence of the Local Government to make the further rule directing Magistrates' Benches, under specific circumstances, to be guided by the provisions of section 350 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, requires to be discussed on a wholly different basis from that adopted in the decisions of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts. It becomes an exception in favour of accused persons, engrafted by the Government rules upon the general direction that any two members of a Bench of three Magistrates shall, for all purposes, form a quorum. In practice it amounts to nothing more than this, that the Local Government directs the Bench of Magistrates in question, if it should find it is sitting to take up an adjourned trial with a Bench differently constituted from that which commenced the trial of the case, and exception is taken on behalf of the accused to the trial proceeding under such circumstances, then either to recommence the trial de novo, or to adjourn it to a subsequent date on which it may be found convenient for the same two Magistrates to sit who had commenced the trial of the case. It is in fact a direction to Benches of Honorary Magistrates that, under certain circumstances, they are to refrain, at the request of the accused, from exercising a power which would otherwise be theirs. Looked at in this way I think that the rule was one within the competence of the Local Government. If I were to hold the contrary it certainly would not help the applicants in the present case. It is merely an exception engrafted by the Local Government upon the rule which it had previously made regarding the constitution of the Bench for conducting trials.

Having said this, I now come to the consideration of what took place in this particular case. I have not the slightest hesitation in holding that the proceedings of the 16th of December 1917 were regular and proper and within the competence of the Bench of Honorary Magistrates. Strictly speaking, this proposition is not challenged by the petition in revision which lies before me for disposal. What the petitioners object to is the procedure followed on the

BABUJAN MISIR V. SHEO SAHAY CHAUDHURY.

21st of December 1917 when two Magistrates, one of whom had not heard the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses or the defence evidence, proceeded to dispose of the case. To the contention of the applicants on this point the Courts below have in substance replied that it was for the accused persons to object on the 21st of December 1917, when Mr. Nazir Ali Khan and Mr. Jan Alam Khan took their seats upon the Bench to pass judgment in this case. Technically the opinion expressed by the District Magistrate and by the learned Sessions Judge on this point is in accordance with the wording of the first proviso to section 350, clause (1), of the Code of Criminal Procedure; but it is important that District Magistrates and this Court also should not overlook the second proviso to the same sub-section. It does not matter whether the accused did or did not object to the constitution of the Bench on the 21st of December 1917; nor is it necessary for the Court to consider whether they had a reasonable opportunity of doing so, whether they may not have been taken by surprise, whether judgment may not have been pronounced under such circumstances as left them no convenient opportunity of entering a protest. The real question is whether the accused persons were prejudiced by the procedure adopted on the 21st of December 1917. A question such as this is one which the Court can only examine with reference to the general circumstances of each particular case. Ordinarily speaking, one would be inclined to hold that it is prejudicial to an accused person that judgment should be passed against him by a Magistrate who has only heard the prosecution witnesses examined in chief, and was not present at their cross-examination or at the hearing of the defence evidence. So far as the record before me goes, I cannot feel certain that Mr. Nazir Ali Khan had himself perused the entire record of the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and the depositions of the witnesses for the defence. He most probably did so; but he may have accepted his learned colleague's account of what had taken place at the sitting of December the 16th. Moreover, although I am reluctant to refer to a matter of this sort, I cannot altogether shut my eyes to the fact that the accused persons are all Hindus, and that the case was one of such a nature that these accused persons may well feel that it was an advantage to them to have a Hindu gentleman present on the Bench when the matter was finally disposed of, specially when the question of sentence was being considered. I think, therefore, that the Honorary Magistrates in this case committed an error of judgment when they did not proceed to dispose of the case on the 16th of December, and I am not prepared to say that the accused may not have been prejudiced by the procedure followed at the final hearing of the case.

Under these circumstances the order which I pass is that the proceedings of the 21st of December 1917 be set aside, the conviction and sentence be quashed, and that the case be returned to the same Bench of Honorary Magistrates to be disposed of from that stage at which, in my opinion, an error was committed. In effect my order is that the two Magistrates who presided at the hearing of December 16th, 1917, namely, Mr. Jan Alam Khan and Pandit Chaube Peary Lal, do proceed to consider their decision in this case and to prepare a judgment and deliver the same in due course of law. The record is returned with the above directions.

Letters Patent (Patna), cl 10—Order staying proceedings, whether judgment—Order of single Judge staying proceedings in criminal case—Appeal, whether lies:

BABUJAN MISIR v. SHEO SAHAI CHAUDHRY.

An order staying proceedings is not a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 10 of the Letters Patent of the Patna High Court, inasmuch as such order contains no final adjudication of the rights of the parties. [p 350, col 2.]

An order of a single Judge staying proceedings in a criminal case is an order made in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction, and, therefore, no appeal lies against it under clause 10 of the Letters Patent. [p. 350, cols. 1 & 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal from an order of Justice Sir Ali Imam, Kt., dated the 22nd April 1918, in Criminal Revisions Nos. 118 and 119 of 1918.

Messrs. P. R. Das and Shiva Narain Bose, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Asghur and D. N. Sircar, for the Opposite Party.

ORDER.

MELLICK, J.—The question before us is whether two petitions of appeal presented respectively by Babujan Misser and Kanto Chaudhury against an order, dated the 22nd April 1918, made by Mr. Justice Imam, a learned Judge of this Court, can be maintained under the law.

It is contended on behalf of the petitioners that the order of the learned Judge is appealable under clause 10 of the Letters Patent of this Court. Notice was issued by a Division Bench of this Court upon the respondents named in the petition to show cause why the appeals should not proceed. Cause is now shown before us by Mr. Sircar while Mr. Das appears on behalf of the petitioners.

The order of Mr. Justice Imam was made under the following circumstances.

Two cases are now pending in the Court of a Magistrate in the District of Bhagalpur, in which Babujan and Kantoo are respectively the complainants and Shew Sahay and others are the accused and in which charges have been framed under sections 379 and 143, Indian Penal Code, for theft of paddy in respect of certain disputed land.

In January 1917 proceedings were instituted under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, in respect of these lands between Deo Nandan as the first party and the above-mentioned Shew Sahay Choudhary as the second party, the former claiming under a mortgage and the latter resisting the possession delivered to the former by the Civil Court in enforcement of that mortgage. In February 1917 the possession of Deo Nandan was confirmed, but upon an application to this Court that order was set aside and the case was re-opened with a direction to add certain persons as parties. The further inquiry thus directed is still pending. The complainant in each of the two above-mentioned theft cases claims as tenant under Deo Nandan.

An application was made by the accused before the Magistrate trying the theft cases for the stay of the proceedings till the disposal of the case under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, but was refused. An application in revision was then made to the District Magistrate with a similar result. Then an application for revision was made to this Court and was heard by Mr. Justice Imam sitting alone as a Judge of this Court, and on the 22nd April last he made an order directing that the proceedings in the trial under sections 379 and 143, Indian Penal Code, should be stayed pending the decision in the case under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code.

The point which we have now to determine is whether an appeal under the Letters Patent lies to this Court against Mr. Justice Imam's order.

The matter clearly depends upon clause 10 of the Letters Patent of the Patna High Court, the material portion of which is as follows:—"And We do further ordain that an appeal shall lie to the High Court of Judicature at Patna from the judgment (not being an order made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction in a case, which has been called for by the said Court, and not being a sentence or order passed or made in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction) of one Judge of the said Court, or of one Judge of any Divisional Court constituted in pursuance of section 108 of the Government of India Act of 1915."

Mr. Das contends that the order was not made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction, but in the exercise of the Court's powers of general superintendence under section 107 of the Government of India Act of 1915. He also urges that in order to bar the right of appeal the order must be made not only in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction but also in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction.

In my opinion his contention cannot be accepted. The words within brackets should, in my opinion, be paraphrased as follows:—"Except an order made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction in a case which has been called for by the said Court and except a sentence or order passed or made in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction." If the contention put forward by Mr. Das were correct, then the words "not being an order made in the exercise of criminal revisional jurisdiction in a case, which has been called for by the said Court" would have been quite sufficient for the purposes of the draftsman.

Again comparing this clause with the corresponding clause in the Letters Patent granted to the High Court of Calcutta in 1865, it is clear that the intention of the draftsman was to restrict the right of appeal by prohibiting appeals (1) in respect of sentences or orders passed or made in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction as before, and (2) in respect of orders made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction in other cases, namely, civil cases.

The result is that whereas in the Calcutta High Court a Letters Patent appeal lies against the judgments of a Judge sitting alone in the exercise of civil revisional jurisdiction, in the High Court of Patna no such appeal lies.

On the other hand, the effect of the interpretation suggested by Mr. Das would be that the right of appeal has been not restricted but extended by the Letters Patent of this Court and that not only is there an appeal against civil judgments in revision as before but that a new right of appeal has been conferred against judgments passed in the exercise of original and appellate criminal jurisdiction. In my opinion the language of the clause does not favour such an interpretation.

Furthermore clause 10 appears under the heading of civil jurisdiction. It could not appropriately confer under that heading a right of appeal in a matter connected with the exercise of criminal jurisdiction. Obviously it intends to define the limits of the right of appeal against certain judgments on the civil side only.

Therefore, in the present cases the order of Mr. Justice Imam having been clearly made in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction the petitioners have no right of appeal.

In this view it is unnecessary to decide whether or not the order of Mr. Justice Imam was one made in the exercise of revisional criminal jurisdiction, but if it were necessary to decide that point, I would say that his order was in revision of the order of the District Magistrate. The revisional powers conferred by the Criminal Procedure Code are sufficiently wide to justify his interference in a matter of this kind.

But there is another ground which is, in my opinion, completely fatal to Mr. Das. In my opinion the order staying proceedings is not a judgment within the meaning of clause 10 of the Letters Patent. The order contains no final adjudication of the rights of the parties. To use the language of Sir Richard Couch, it is not a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability [The Justices of the Peace for the Town of Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Company (1)]. It merely directs whether one case shall have priority in point of time over another. Therefore, there being no judgment, no appeal lies.

The result is that both the petitions of appeal must be dismissed with costs. Hearing fee one gold mohur in each case.

THORNHILL, J.—I agree.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 363, 365, 366—Kidnapping girl over 16 years of age—Offence—First information report, delay in making, effect of.

Accused were charged under section 363, Indian Penal Code, with having kidnapped a minor girl from the guardianship of her parents. It appeared that although according to the prosecution the accused were seen taking the girl away at about midnight and the girl's father at once proceeded to the thana where he reached before sunrise, no report was recorded till 12 noon. It appeared further that the girl was over 16 at the time when she disappeared:

Held, (1) that as the girl was not a minor under 16 years of age the accused were not guilty of an offence under section 363, Indian Penal Code; [p. 352, col. 1.]

(2) that the extraordinary delay in making the first information report was very suspicious and the fact that the girl was over 16 strengthened the belief that she went off of her own accord and that consequently the accused could not be convicted under section 365 or 366, Indian Penal Code. [p. 352, col. 2.]

Appeal from the order of the Magistrate, 1st Class, exercising enhanced powers under section 30, Criminal Procedure Code, Gujranwala, dated the 18th March 1918, convicting the appellants.

Dr. Khalifa Shuja-ud Din for the Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, for the Appellants.

Lala Mul Chand, R. S., Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants in this case, 10 in number, have been convicted of offences under section 363 and section 452, Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. They have appealed through Mr. Muhammad Shafi for whom Mr. Shuja-ud-Din has appeared before me, while I have heard Rai Sahib Mul Chand for the Crown.

The story for the prosecution is briefly this. On the night of the 26th-27th September 1916, Mahla and his nephews Sadda and Sammun were sleeping at their cattle-pen some 7 killas from their village, while at their house were sleeping Musammat Rahmon wife of Mahla, Musammat Rani daughter of Mahla and two guests Musammat

Ahmo or Rahmo and Musammat Bego. About midnight these women were awakened by hearing Musammat Rani cry cut and Musammat Rahmo saw her daughter being taken away by a large number of men including these appellants. Nota, Mughli, Mirza and Tahri were actually carrying off Musammat Rani and they were pursued by her mother who was, however, pushed aside by the other miscreants.

Mahla and others arrived on hearing the uproar but by the time Mahla reached the spot the girl had been taken away by Mirza, Tahri and Mughli, but the other raiders were collected at the house of Tahri and Mirza armed with dangs. This house is said to be some 2 karams from Mahla's (vide page 7).

The people collected but Mahla, with remarkable self-control, begged them not to attack the raiders as he intended to make a report. He accordingly left for the Police Station, Pindi Bhattian, which is said to be 6 kos distant. When he had gone about one kos, he met Mughli son of Amira, Lambardar of Lundan, and from him learnt that his daughter had been taken away on a mare by Tahri, Mirza and Mughli towards the south. He then went on to the Police Station where he arrived before sunrise, but was unable to wake any one till 12 noon when his report was duly recorded.

The Police then went to the village and commenced an enquiry, with the result that they sent up the appellants and others, who have not been convicted, for trial. One Muhammeda son of Hasta was said to have absconded and proceedings against him were taken under section 512, Criminal Procedure Code.

The girl too had not been recovered. She was said to have been about 13 or 14 years of age, and the Magistrate, accepting the statement of her parents, held she was a minor.

When the case came before me on appeal on the 31st May 1918 Mr. Shafi put in certain birth certificates and contended that according to these the girl was over 16. Counsel for the Crown agreeing I remanded the case under section 528, MIRZA V. EMPEROR.

Criminal Procedure Code, for an enquiry as to the girl's age and the Magistrate has reported that in his opinion the girl was born on 30th July 1899, which would make her over 16 at the time when she disappeared.

Mr. Mul Chand then urged that the appellants should be held guilty under section 365 or section 366, Indian Penal Code.

According to Mahla, and there are other witnesses to the same effect, the motive for this kidnapping of Musammât Rani was revenge. He says that Musammât Rani, sister of Tabri, Mirza and Khanun was enticed away by Mehra, a cousin of complainants, some 2 years before and that one year before his cousin Bagga had taken away his daughter (Mehro) who was wife of Tabri.

Now there are certain features in the prosecution story which to my mind render it very doubtful.

The evidence of Mahla and his wife is far from convincing. It is difficult to believe that a number of men should collect in the way alleged, forcibly remove a woman and then all but three of them stay standing a few karms off while the villagers collected. Further it is also remarkable that instead of starting a hue and cry and going in pursuit Mahla should have not only remained calm himself but have insisted on the villagers not doing anything as he intended to report the matter. Then we find that Mahla has no idea as to the age of his daughter, he arrives at it by a process of calculating the age of his younger daughter, who he says was 10 or 11 years old, and goes on to say that Musammât Rani was "probably" born some two or three years before, "perhaps" in the house of her grandmother. This is significant, having regard to the fact that Musammât Rani was over 16 when she disappeared. Again there is the extraordinary delay in making the report. The affair took place at midnight. No one was injured and Mahla went at once to the Police Station, yet the report was not made till 12 noon. Mahla realised the difficulty and in order to get over it stated that though he reached before sunrise he could wake no one in the Police Station till noon. This story is clearly incredible, yet it is clear that the report was not made till 12 in the day.

It was urged that really what had happened was that Musammât Rani, who is grown up, had gone off with Muhammeda son of Hasta of her own free will and accord and that the fact was not discovered till early next morning, whereupon Mahla and his friends set to work and made up this case and went to the Thana, reaching there at noon when the report was duly written.

According to Mahla the appellants are all related to one another. Muhammeda absconder is the son of Hasta, whose daughter is the mother of Tabri, Mirza and Khanun. Tabri's house is only a few karms away from Mahla's and there seems every likelihood that Muhammeda and Musammât Rani became enamoured of each other and eloped.

I am inclined to believe that this is what happened and that the delay in the report is due to the fact that the elopement was not discovered till the early morning, when a council was held and Muhammeda's relatives dragged in.

I have carefully considered the evidence and am extremely suspicious of its correctness. The delay in the report is especially suspicious. The girl Musammât Rani was over 16 and I believe she went off with Muhammeda of her own accord. I do not believe the story of the attack, and I accept this appeal and setting aside the conviction and sentences direct that the appellants be released forthwith.

Appeal accepted.

RESPONDENT.Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 4—General Clauses Act (X of 1897), s. 10, applicability of—Pre-emption decree—Money not paid within time prescribed—Court, power of, to extend time.

Section 4 of the Limitation Act and section 10 of the General Clauses Act only apply to the cases in which a period of limitation has been prescribed as mentioned in those sections, and do not apply to a condition prescribed in the decree itself.

A pre-emption decree in its very terms becomes a decree in favour of the defendant vendee when the conditions imposed upon the plaintiff have not been complied with, so that where the decree has become final no Court has power to alter its terms so as to extend the time allowed for payment.

Execution second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Saharanpur, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Dehra Dun.

Mr. Nehal Ohand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises under the following circumstances. The plaintiff in a pre-emption suit obtained a decree for pre-emption on the 11th of October 1915. By this decree he was directed to lodge in Court the pre-emption money within six months, and it further decreed that in the event of his failing to do so the suit would stand dismissed with costs. It will thus be seen that the decree was a decree in favour of the plaintiff on certain conditions. If those conditions were not fulfilled, the decree became a decree in favour of the defendant vendee. The plaintiff did not deposit the money within six months. The last day which would have enabled the plaintiff to comply with the decree was the 11th of April 1916. This was a holiday. It was alleged (and it has been found by the Court below) that the money was brought to the Nazir on the 12th of April, a day on which the Court was sitting. On that day he obtained a chalan which would have enabled him to have deposited the money in the Treasury provided the Treasury was sitting. It appears that the Treasury was not open on the 12th and was only open for an hour on the 13th and the result was that the deposit was not completed until the 14th. The Court of first instance on an application to execute the decree held that the money had not been deposited in Court within the time, specified in the decree. On appeal the lower Appellate Court held that the money must be deemed to have been deposited within time, applying (apparently by analogy) section 4 of the Limitation Act and section 10 of the General Clauses Act. This Court has held that in the case of a pre-emption decree, which has become final, no Court has any power to alter the terms of the decree so as to extend the time allowed for payment. It must be remembered that the decree in its very terms becomes a decree in favour of the defendant vendee when the conditions imposed upon the plaintiff have not been complied with. In the present case the plaintiff pre-emptor appears not to have had his money ready until the period of six months had almost expired. In the end it was a money-lender who came with the money accompanied by the plaintiff's agent on the 12th of April 1916. In our opinion, section 4 of the Limitation Act and section 10 of the General Clauses Act only apply to the cases in which a period of limitation has been prescribed as mentioned in those sections, and do not apply to a condition prescribed in the decree itself. The respondent's learned Vakil has referred to the cases of Sambasiva Chari v. Ramasami Reddi (1), Shooshee Bhusan Rudro v. Gobind Chunder Roy (2) and Munna Lal v. Radha Kishan (3). In our opinion none of these authorities apply to the circumstances of the case we have before us. We allow the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and restore the order of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts.

A lease of a village or of a share in a village for the purpose of bringing it under cultivation is a lease for agricultural purposes and the provisions of Chapter V of the Transfer of Property Act do not apply to it as laid down in section 117 of the Act. [p. 355, col. 2.]

In the case of an agricultural lease the tenant is entitled to a reasonable notice before ejectment. What is a reasonable notice is a question of fact. [p. 355, col. 2; p. 356, col. 1.]

To raise an equitable estoppel against a lessor precluding him from suing for possession on the determination of the tenancy, the tenant must show facts sufficient to justify a legal inference that the lessor has by plain implication contracted that the right of tenancy should be changed into a right of permanent occupancy. Appeal against the decree of the Divisional Judge, Raipur, in Civil Appeal No. 99 of 1914, dated the 18th November 1914.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment brought by the Zemindar of the Gundardehi Zemindari, in the Drug Tehsil, of the Drug District against the appellant, the *theke*dar of the village of Limora. It appears from the District Gazetteer that there are 55 villages in the Zemindari, of which 41 are leased to *theke*dars, of whom 28 have received the status of a protected *theke*dar under section 65-A of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1881. The village was held by Mukti, the father of the appellant, on an annual theke Jama of Rs. 300, which was subsequently enhanced to Rs. 351. The Jama was again enhanced to Rs. 396 at the time of the execution of Exhibit P-1, dated 8th December 1904, which the plaintiff describes as a kabuliyat, that is to say, counter part of a lease for six years. The deed recites as follows:—

"Upto this date I used to pay a Jama of Rs. 351 including cesses, but now the cesses have been enhanced by Rs. 45 so I will now pay a total Jama of Rs. 396, including cesses, annually in two equal instalments up to the time of the new Settlement, that is to say, for six years."

This document was not registered.

The Zemindari estate was under the management of the Court of Wards from 1st January 1906 to 10th September 1913. On 23rd June 1911 the Deputy Commissioner, as agent of the Court of Wards, issued a notice to Mukti stating that the theke expires, according to the kabuliyat, on 30th June 1911, and calling upon him, to vacate possession on 30th June 1911. Mukti was dead and the notice was received by his son the appellant Banmali. On the 30th August 1911 a 2nd notice was issued to Mukti, saying that the theke Jama for 1911-12 would not be received and warning him that he would be liable to a suit for possession and damages. On the 28th November 1911 a 3rd notice was issued to Banmali himself, giving time till the end of May 1912 to vacate the village. Banmali refused to accept service of this notice.

Banmali then applied to the Revenue Authorities for protected status. Sometime in the beginning of 1913 the Financial Commissioner passed a final order, allowing Banmali to select 100 acres out of the home farm to be his occupancy holding, but refusing him protected status. Banmali applied to the Financial Commissioner for review of this order, and the Financial Commissioner on 19th May 1913 passed an order (Exhibit P-7) refusing the application and informing Banmali that he would lose the benefit of the former order unless he selects his 100 acres in three months. Banmali refused to comply with the order and on 21st November 1913 the Financial Commissioner cancelled the grant of occupancy rights (Exhibit P-6). Meanwhile on 8th April 1913 the plaintiff himself sent a notice, which Banmali refused to accept, to the effect that Banmali would be liable to legal proceedings if he retained possession of anything more than the 100 acres.

The learned Divisional Judge has found that Mukti first became thekeedar about 1870, and that the defendant has failed to prove the terms of the lease. Some document appears to have been executed but it is not forthcoming, and clearly it was not registered. He has also decided that the document of 8th December 1904 is not a lease but a mere agreement to pay enhanced Jama till the next Settlement, which it was assumed would take place in 1910. He has found that the appellant has failed to prove by evidence that the original lease to Mukti was a lease in perpetuity, and that the collateral facts do not establish that the lease is a perpetual one.

On the question of notice the learned Divisional Judge has held that the third notice, dated 28th November 1911, giving Banmali notice to quit before the 1st June 1911 was sufficient notice. The defendant pleaded that the lease year coincided with the agricultural year, which in Drug expires on 31st March. The Judge expresses the opinion that the lease year expires at the beginning of June, but I doubt if this can be characterized as a definite finding.

The Divisional Judge has also held that by reason of clause (h) of section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act the appellant is not entitled to compensation for improvements, and on the evidence adduced by the appellant has held that he has failed to prove the exact nature or value of the improvements, or that he has made any improvements other than such as he would naturally make for the beneficial enjoyment of even a temporary lease, or that the Zemindar allowed Mukti and Banmali to spend more money than he otherwise would, under the impression that the Zemindar acquiesced in the expenditure and tacitly guaranteed its benefit to the lessee.

The first ground of appeal is to the effect that as the plaintiff set up a lease for a term and not a lease from year to year, it lay on him to prove that the lease had come to an end. On this point I agree with the Divisional Judge's observations in paragraph 9 of his judgment. The pleadings are not scientific, as is usual in the Mofussil. The appellant has in no way been prejudiced, and if the evidence shows that the lease was merely a lease from year to year, the plaintiff is entitled to any remedy he is entitled to on that finding.

The second ground of appeal is that the notices were not legally sufficient to terminate even a year to year lease. It is contended that it is not proved that the lease year ended at the beginning of June. The 3rd notice gave more than 6 months' notice ending with the end of May. The learned Counsel for the respondent argues that even if section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act applies, the notice is sufficient. He contends that it is evident that neither party knows when the tenancy began, and the defendant's witnesses who say that the original lease was in writing do not say in what quarter the lease began. The main contention for the respondent, however, is that the lease being a lease for agricultural purposes, the provisions of Chapter V of the Transfer of Property Act do not apply to it, as laid down in section 117 of the Act. This contention must in my opinion prevail. It was observed by Ismay, J. C., in Anup Singh v. Khuman Singh (1) that a lease of a village or of a share in a village is clearly a lease for agricultural purposes and the provisions of Chapter V of the Transfer of Property Act do not, therefore, apply. The observation is particularly opposite to this case, where the lease was for the purpose of bringing the land under cultivation. In such cases the tenant is entitled to reasonable notice, and what is reasonable notice is a question of fact, vide Jagut Chunder Roy v. Rup Ohand Ohango (2), Radha Gobind Koer v. Rakhal Das Mukherji (3) and Digambar Mahto v. Jhari Mahto (4). I have no doubt whatever that the 3rd notice was a reasonable notice as it gave more than six months for vacation, and there would be no crops left on the land on the date mentioned in the notice. It is not alleged that there is any local custom or local law bearing on the question. This ground of appeal, therefore, fails, if the lease was one from year to year.

The 3rd and 4th grounds of appeal are to the effect that the conduct of the plaintiff in standing by and allowing the defendant to erect costly structures of a permanent character, to raise embankments and to build tanks raises a presumption that the lease was a perpetual one, and estops the defendant from pleading that the lease was a temporary one. In this connection the appellant's Counsel complains that no attention was paid to an application made to the first Court by the appellant asking that an Engineer be appointed as Commissioner to make an estimate of the cost incurred in making improvements. This application was presented on the 25th September 1914 at a very early stage of the case, before the defendant was represented by a Pleader, and it does not appear to have been brought to the notice of the Court at the time. Subsequently the defendant's Pleader made no allusion to the application and did not renew it, and he closed his case without asking for the appointment of a Commissioner. In these circumstances the application must be held to have been dropped, and the appellant has no legitimate grievance.

I have no doubt whatever that the learned Divisional Judge is right in holding that the length of the period for which the appellant and his father have been holding the village as tenants does not raise a presumption that the tenancy is a permanent one. The tenure commenced in about 1870, and the suit was filed in April 1914, so that the lessees have been in possession for about 44 years.

(3) 12 C. 82; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 56.

(4) 26 C. 761; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1087.

The learned Divisional Judge has cited Nabu Mondul v. Oholim Mullik (5), where long possession for upwards of 60 years was held not to justify the presumption of a permanent grant; a similar view was taken in Narayanbhat v. Davlata (6); it is not contended that the rent has not from time to time been enhanced.

The pleadings on which these grounds of appeal are based are that in 1868 a permanent lease was given to Mukti, that on the faith of the clear declaration by the Zemindar that the lease was perpetual, Mukti made considerable improvements by excavating a tank at a cost of about Rs. 8,000; by laying out gardens on an area of 8 acres at a cost of Rs. 2,000, by building pucca houses at a cost of about Rs. 10,000 and by erecting embankments of fields at a cost of about Rs. 2,000; that the Zemindar stood by and allowed Mukti to make these improvements and cannot eject the defendant without making compensation; and that the plaintiff is estopped by this conduct from ejecting the defendant.

The learned Divisional Judge has held that the defendant has failed to prove any express declaration on the part of the Zemindar that the lease was a permanent one, and in this Court the contention is that the conduct of the Zemindar in standing by creates a presumption of permanency and estops him from ejecting the defendant. Among the cases relied on for the appellant are Dattatraya Rayaji Pai v. Shridhar Narayan Pai (7) and Yeshwadabai v. Ramchandra (8), but, as pointed out in Ismail Khan Mahomed v. Jaigun Bibi (9), in the former case there were very special circumstances, while in the latter case the land was fazendari land from which the tenant could not be ejected. The law on the subject has been clearly expounded by the Judicial Committee in Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (10), where it was laid down that to raise an equitable estoppel against the lessor precluding him from suing, on the determination of his tenancy for possession, the tenant should show facts sufficient to justify the legal inference that the lessor has by plain implication contracted that the right of tenancy should be changed into a right of permanent occupancy. Here the learned Divisional Judge has held as follows:—

"In the present case the lease was of an agricultural village, and even on a definite tenure for a fixed period, or an indefinite tenure from year to year with (sic) any assurance at all of extended tenure, the lessee was bound by his own interest to build residential houses and carry out certain routine improvements. Otherwise he would not have obtained the full benefit of his lease. In the absence of clear proof or strong presumption that the Zemindar allowed Mukti and Banmali to spend more money than he otherwise would, under the impression that the Zemindar acquiesced in the expenditure and tacitly guaranteed its benefit to the lessees, I am unable to hold that Banmali has proved that he is entitled to retain possession."

In the Privy Council case last quoted it was laid down that acquiescence is not a question of fact, but of legal inference, from the facts found, and upon it the judgments of the first and the Appellate Court are not final. But I can see no reason whatever for dissenting from the conclusions of the learned Divisional Judge. It is a common occurrence for Zemindars to give leases of villages for the purpose of bringing them under cultivation, and of necessity the lessees undertake such works and erect such dwelling houses as are necessary, but it does not follow that leases must, therefore, be deemed to be permanent, in the absence of an express contract to that effect.

The last ground of appeal is that the appellant is entitled to compensation for the improvements. Section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act certainly does not apply to tenants, vide Ismail Khan Mahomed v. Jaigun Bibi (9) and Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Mukku Narsaya (11), nor apart from the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act is a tenant entitled to this relief. The case of Collier v. Baron (12) was not one of tenancy.

(11) 7 Ind. Cas. 202; 37 M. L. J. 8 M. L. T. 258; (1910) M. W. N. 369.

Since the appeal was argued my attention has been drawn to an unpublished ruling of Skinner, A. J. C., in First Appeal No. 17 of 1910, in which he allowed compensation to a tenant for improvements by "virtue of the provisions of section 70 of the Contract Act, and of our Court's general power to impose equitable conditions on the relief they grant." This ruling is unsupported by authorities, and speaking with due respect, I am unable to follow it.

There is a series of connected appeals of the same nature from another District, and I had hoped before the delivery of this judgment to have the benefit of the arguments therein, but those appeals have been postponed in the hope of a compromise and have not yet been fully argued.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Babu Ram Chandra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Lone Singh died leaving a widow, Musammat Chandra Kuar, who inherited his estate. She sold the share inherited by her from her husband in one of the villages to certain persons, from whom the defendant-respondent obtained it by pre-emption. Musammat Chandra Kuar died on the 5th November 1914. The plaintiff is the next reversionary heir of her husband and claims possession of the property, comprised in the said sale, with mesne profits, alleging that the sale was effected without any legal necessity. The defence was that the sale was made for valid necessity and that according to a custom of the family Musammat Chandra Kuar had an absolute right to transfer the property in dispute in any way she liked. No evidence was produced on behalf of the defendant-respondent to prove that any legal necessity existed for the sale. The existence of the alleged custom was negatived by the Court of first instance, but affirmed by the lower Appellate Court.

The question for determination in this appeal is whether the finding of the lower Appellate Court is justified by the terms of the wajib-ul-arz, on which it has relied. Lone Singh was a resident of the village Pachera and had a share, now in dispute, in the village Saraiyan and in other villages. The wajib-ul-arzes of the village Pachera and Saraiyan are similar in terms. Both of them declare that a sonless widow is entitled to the property of her husband for her life and has every kind of power over the same in case of personal necessity or to meet the revenue demand (ba zarurat zati wa malguzari sarkar). The lower Appellate Court interprets these terms as implying that she has an unlimited power of disposal; but the very terms of the wajib-ul-arz impose limitations on that power, for outside the existence of some personal necessity or a necessity for the payment of the Government revenue, no power of transfer is recognized. It is unnecessary to refer to the unreported decisions to which reference has been made in the course of the arguments. The principle governing the interpretation of such wajib-ul-arzes was laid down in Dhondhe Singh v. Sant Bahsh Singh (1), where it was stated that if a construction could be put on a wajib-ul-arz which was compatible with the rules of the Hindu Law, that was the construction to which the Court should adhere. That principle was enforced in Ram Dat v. Sukhia (2). In the present instance the wajib-ul-arz limits the power of disposition to cases of personal necessity or necessity to pay the Government revenue. But personal necessity may be necessity in the nature of maintenance which would be perfectly valid to justify an alienation even under the Hindu Law. The existence of arrears of Government revenue may equally be a good necessity to justify an alienation of a part of the estate to save the remainder. It is not possible, therefore, to treat the wajib-ul-arz as necessarily inconsistent with the provisions of the Hindu Law. As observed in Ohandika Singh v. Ram Dulari (3), where it is sought to prove a custom inconsistent with the ordinary law, nothing short of the most cogent evidence can be accepted as proof of a custom repugnant to the ordinary rule of succession or power of disposal prescribed by it. If the custom had been that a widow could transfer the estate inherited by her from her husband without necessity of any kind, there would have been no occasion for the limitation placed in the wajib-ul-arz to regulate its disposal. No legal necessity having been proved in this case the sale made by the widow cannot be upheld.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance, restored with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

GANANATH SATPATHY, v. HARIHAR PANDHI.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 101 OF 1917.

July 21, 1918.

Present:—Sir Dawson Miller, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Mullick.

GANANATH SATPATHY AND OTHERS—

APPELLANTS

versus

HARIHAR PANDHI AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Occupancy holding, transfer of part of—Transferee, position of—Recognition of transfer by co-sharer landlord, effect of—Suit by landlord against recorded tenant—Declaration, suit for, by transferee, maintainability of—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42, applicability of.

A landlord cannot interfere with the possession of a transferee of a part of a non-transferable occupancy holding and if he does so, the transferee is entitled to recover possession from him by suit. Until, however, he is actually dispossessed, he is not entitled to a declaration that a tenant alleged by the landlord to be his tenant is not his tenant and that a decree obtained by the landlord against his alleged tenant is fraudulent. Having no legal title or interest which the landlord is concerned to deny, the transferee cannot invoke the operation of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act in his favour. [p. 360, col. 2; p. 361, col. 1.]

If some out of a number of co-sharers recognise the transfer either of a part or the whole of a non-transferable occupancy holding, the remaining co-sharers are not entitled to eject the transferee. By obtaining recognition from a co-sharer landlord, however, the transferee does not acquire any right or valid title in the holding itself as against the entire body of landlords. Notwithstanding such recognition the remaining co-sharers can sue the original tenant for the entire rent without impleading the transferee. [p. 361, col. 2; p. 362, col. 2.]

If the consenting landlords choose to repudiate their consent and to join the non-consenting landlords in suing the original tenant for the entire rent on the footing that the consent given by them does not operate to create a division of the tenancy, it is open to them to do so. [p. 362, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Roe, dated the 28th March 1917, in Second Appeal No. 2395 of 1915, modifying the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Outtack, dated the 9th August 1915.

Mr. Sushil Madhav Mullick, for the Appellants.

Mr. Achalendra Nath Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit which was instituted by the four plaintiffs against defendants Nos. 1 to 8, the landlords, defendant No. 9, Kusun Behara the recorded tenant of the holding in dispute, and against defendant No. 11,

Jasoda Dei the daughter-in-law of the aforesaid Kusun Behara. The dispute relates to a holding of about $4\frac{1}{2}$ acres, out of which in or about the year 1898 Kusun Behara mortgaged an area of 1 man to the plaintiffs. On the 27th January 1899 Kusun Behara conveyed with the consent of the landlords an area of 1 man out of the holding to the plaintiffs. On the 28th January 1899, Kusun Behara transferred the remainder of the holding to his daughter-in-law Jasoda Dei. In 1910 the plaintiffs sued Kusun Behara upon the mortgage of 1898 and obtained a sale certificate on the 31st August 1910 and delivery of possession on the 11th April 1911. The case of the plaintiffs is that they thereby became possessors not only of the 1 man which was transferred in 1899 and in respect of which their title was recognised by the joint landlords, but also of the additional area of 1 man which was conveyed to them by the mortgage of 1898. In 1911, however, the joint landlords sued Jasoda Dei the transferee for the rent of the holding as constituted after deduction of the 1 man in respect of which they had recognised the transfer to the plaintiffs. A decree was obtained but the plaintiffs having deposited the decretal amount the decree was not enforced by sale. The defendants again sued Jasoda in 1912 for the rent of the holding and a decree having been obtained, the 15th July 1912 was fixed for the sale of the holding. The plaintiffs, apprehending that their title to the area purchased in execution of their mortgage decree would be jeopardised, brought the present suit on the 6th June 1913 claiming the following declarations:—

"(1) That it may be decided that we the plaintiffs have got the right of purchase in auction in the land in claim and that it may be decided that the defendants Nos. 9 and 10 have no right or concern therein.

"(2) That it may be proved that the suit, the decree, the execution of the decree in respect of the said land of the defendants Nos. 1 to 8, are illegal, invalid and inoperative.

"(3) That our right of purchase in auction in the said land may be declared and our possession therein may be confirmed, or if it be decided that we ought to get possession, we may be given possession."

GANANATH SATPATHY v. HARIHAR PANDHI.

"(4) That till the final decision of the suit the injunction may be given to the defendants Nos. 1 to 8 for staying the auction sale of the land in claim."

It will be convenient to notice here that Kusun Behera died during the pendency of the suit and his sons Hari Behera and Bera Behera have been substituted in his place.

The Munsif dismissed the whole suit. There was an appeal to the Subordinate Judge, who decreed it. There was next a second appeal to this Court, which was heard by Mr. Justice Roe sitting alone, with the result that the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge was set aside and in substitution therefor the following declarations were given to the plaintiffs:—

"(1) That it be declared that the transfer of Kusun Behera to Jasoda Dei was fraudulent, without consideration and invalid as against the plaintiffs.

"(2) That by his purchase of the rights of Kusun Behera the plaintiff has good title as against the defendants Nos. 9 and 10 to the lands purchased in execution of his decree.

"(3) That it be declared that the landlords' suit against Jasoda Dei was fraudulently instituted with the intention of ousting the plaintiff from the land.

"(4) That no execution of any decree obtained against Jasoda Dei will affect the rights of the plaintiff and Kusun Behera's representatives."

Against this decree the landlords, defendants Nos. 1 to 8, prefer the present Letters Patent Appeal.

With regard to the declarations made by the learned Judge of this Court affecting the rights of the plaintiffs as against their transferor Kusun Behera and his representatives, it is conceded by the learned Vakil for the appellants that there can be no objection. No relief is claimed in this appeal as regards the first two declarations given by the learned Judge. We will not, therefore, consider that part of the decree of the learned Judge.

The contest really centres round the third and fourth declarations which affect the landlords, and it is contended that as against them the plaintiffs acquired no title by their auction-purchase in execution of their mortgage decree and they are not entitled to any declaration which in any way recognises their title as transferees in respect of a part of the holding. The effect of the declarations made by the learned Judge of this Court is indirectly to compel the landlords to recognise the transfer, and it is contended that section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, cannot be invoked for this purpose. It is clear that the Orissa Tenancy Act, which came into operation in 1913, does not determine the rights of the parties but there is some doubt whether the Bengal Tenancy Act or Act X of 1859 is applicable. But there can be no doubt that whichever Act applies, no transfer of a part of a non-transferable occupancy holding is valid against the landlords without their consent in writing. The position, therefore, is that unless it can be shown that the entire body of landlords recognised the mortgage sale in favour of the plaintiffs, they cannot be said to have any title against the landlords in respect of this land. The first question, therefore, is, whether, although they have no title against the landlords, they are entitled to an injunction prohibiting the landlords from executing a decree obtained by them against a tenant alleged by them to be the lawful tenant of the land.

The second question also follows from this, viz., whether the plaintiffs are entitled to attack a decree obtained by the landlords against the alleged tenant on the ground that that tenant is not the legal tenant and on the ground that the decree is fraudulent. In my opinion the answer to both questions must be in the negative. It is true that the landlords cannot interfere with the possession of the transferee of a part of a non-transferable occupancy holding and that if they do so, the transferee is entitled to recover possession from them by suit. That right to recover possession arises, not by reason of any title in the holding as against the landlords, but from the tenant's undisputed right to transfer a part of his holding. Here the landlords have not yet dispossessed the plaintiffs and it is not known whether they will do so. When that time comes it will be open to the plaintiffs to adopt such remedies as the law gives them, but before that time comes the plaintiffs are not entitled to a declaration that a tenant alleged by the landlords to be their tenant is not in fact their tenant and that a decree obtained by the landlords against their alleged tenant is fraudulent. Having no legal title or interest which the landlords are concerned to deny, the plaintiffs cannot invoke the operation of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act in this suit.

It is urged, however, that the suit is justified by the decision of their Lordships in the case of Dayamayi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhuri (1). Having carefully considered the decision of their Lordships in that case, it does not seem to us that there is any justification for the contention that because a landlord cannot eject the transferee and because if he does eject him he is liable to restore possession, the transferee has a right to obtain a declaration prohibiting the landlord from proceeding with an action against his recorded tenant. The transferees here cannot be permitted to attack on the ground of want of consideration or fraud the conveyance made by Kusun Bahera in favour of Jasoda Dei. If the holding should be sold they may possibly be competent to attack the sale but at this stage they have no right of suit.

Reliance is next placed upon a decision by a learned Judge of this Court sitting alone in Second Appeal No. 796 of 1915, where certain observations were made which may support the view that a transferee in the position of the plaintiffs is competent to obtain the declarations which they are seeking here. But on referring to the record of that case it would seem that the contest was between a transferee who had purchased a part of a non-transferable holding in execution of a mortgage sale and a co sharer landlord who had obtained a decree for rent against the recorded tenant. If the decree in that case had the effect of an ordinary money decree, possibly the mortgagee purchaser might be entitled to the declaration which he sought. But if the learned Judge intended to lay down the general proposition that a transferee of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding is entitled to attack the validity of decrees obtained by the landlord against his recognised tenant, then it seems to me that that view of the law is not supported by the Full Bench ruling in Dayamayi's case (1) on which the learned Judge relied. So far, therefore, as the above two decisions are concerned, they do not seem to support the contention of the respondents before us.

The learned Vakil for the respondents then urges that they are not trespassers, that they have certain rights as to possession against the transferrer, the recorded tenant, and that they have also a right of re-entry in the event of dispossession against the landlords. These rights do not, however, in my opinion, render it competent for them to attack transactions and proceedings between the landlords and the recognised tenant to which they are not parties.

Finally it is contended by the learned Vakil for the respondents that in this case the transfer to the plaintiffs had been recognised by defendants Nos. 3, 5 and 6, who represent the greater part of the interest of the joint landlords. Now though it has been found that on the back of the sale certificate issued to the plaintiffs on the 31st August 1910, defendants Nos. 3, 5 and 6 recorded their consent on the 28th January 1912, it is certainly a somewhat suspicious circumstance that this consent was given only two days before the first decree for rent was obtained by the joint landlords against Jasoda. However that may be, the learned Subordinate Judge having come to the definite finding that defendants Nos. 3, 5 and 6 have recognised the transfer in respect of the mortgaged lands, his finding in this respect cannot be challenged. The question is, whether that recognition confers a right upon the plaintiffs to attack the rent-decree which those defendants together with their co-sharers have obtained from their alleged tenant. In my opinion it does not. It is true that if some out of a number of co-sharers recognise the transfer either of a part or the whole of a non-transferable occupancy holding, the remaining co-sharers are not entitled to eject the transferee; and the case of Hossein Mahomed v. Fakir Mahomed (2) merely affirms the proposition that they can sue for joint possession with the transferee. That case certainly does not support the contention that by obtaining recognition from a co-sharer landlord the transferee acquires any rights or valid title in the holding itself as against the entire body of landlords. I think that notwithstanding such recognition the remaining co-sharers could sue the original tenant for the entire rent without impleading the transferee. In the present case, therefore, the recognition of the transfer by defendants Nos. 3, 5 and 6 does not in any way operate to defeat the rent-decree which has been obtained by the entire body of landlords. If, as appears to be the case, defendants Nos. 3, 5 and 6 chose to repudiate their consent and to join the non-consenting landlords in suing the original tenant for the entire rent on the footing that the consent given by them does not operate to create a division of the tenancy, it was open to them to do so. Therefore, whether the Bengal Tenancy Act or Act X of 1859 applies, the division of the holding in this case was not operative for want of the necessary consent and the suit for rent brought by the joint landlords was a properly constituted action. It may be that the transferees in this case will be entitled to sue the defendants Nos. 3, 5 and 6 for damages for fraud, but that is a different matter and does not affect the present suit. The result, therefore, is that the appeal is decreed and the suit is dismissed against defendants Nos. 1 to 8 with costs in all Courts. The remaining defendants are not appealing and the decree as against them will stand. The effect of our decree, therefore, is that as against defendants Nos. 1 to 8 the declarations made by the learned Judge of this Court will be inoperative. It is to be noted that in the memorandum of appeal filed against the judgment of Mr. Justice Roe the name of Chandi Debia the widow of Sham Sunder, defendant No. 6, does not appear on the record either as appellant or respondent but that of her husband appears in the category of respondents. Her failure to join her co-sharers in the Letters Patent Appeal cannot, however, debar the appellants from obtaining the relief which they seek.

Each and every case that comes before the Courts in which there may be definite and conclusive evidence to satisfy the Court as to what was the nature of the services required from the service tenure-holder cannot be held to be governed by section 1 of the Bengal Village Chowkidari Act. JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This case comes up again on appeal to this Court from the final decision of the learned District Judge of Bankura, dated the 2nd September 1916, reversing the decision of the Munsif of Bishnupur. The plaintiff brought the suit for a declaration of his dakbardari simandari chakran right to the lands mentioned in the schedule to the plaint and also for recovery of possession thereof. The case was fought in this Court on more than one occasion. The plaint was filed in March 1909 and we are now in 1918, and it is unfortunate that litigation of this nature has dragged on for so many years and has not been finally decided yet. The case is this: The Government was persuaded in the year 1894 to appoint a Commissioner under the Chowkidari Chakran Act for the purpose of resuming the land in question on the statement that they were chowkidari chakran lands. These lands were resumed and transferred to the Maharaja of Bardwan, who transferred them to the putniars, who settled them with the defendants Nos. 4 and 5. The plaintiff brought the suit on the ground that the lands were not chowkidari chakran lands at all but that they were held by him and his ancestors on the footing that they should perform other duties in lieu of enjoying these lands. The case has been dealt with in this way: The learned District Judge has found that the duties which the plaintiff and his predecessors were bound to perform with reference to these lands were not the duties mentioned in Schedule I of the Chowkidari Chakran Act and that, therefore, the Government had no right to resume these lands under the provisions of the said Act. Apparently, that seems to be the view of the Government also. The learned Judge has also found that grave fraud was practised both on the Government officials and on the plaintiff with reference to the resumption of these lands and that, therefore, the lands cannot be taken to be resumed at all.

The second question raised by the appellants before us is this: It is said, that the plaintiff according to his own case was not a service tenure-holder at all but was a mere occupant of the lands, being permitted to occupy them in lieu of wages for performing the duties that were assigned to him. It may be that the first paragraph of the plaint as translated is not a very accurate translation. But from the prayer in the plaint it is quite clear that the plaintiff was not asking for a declaration of any such right but was asking for a declaration of his dakbardari simandari chakran right which was the right of a service tenure-holder, and the purpose for which he brought the suit was not to have his temporary right from which he might be dismissed any day declared. The real case is that the plaintiff wants to have a declaration of his chakran right to these lands.

Then it is said, on the decision of the case of Lalu Deme v. Bejoy Chand (1), that the provisions of the Chowkidari Chakran Act apply to simandars of the Thana in which the property is situated. But that case did not and could not decide that, each and every case that came before the Court in which there might be definite and conclusive evidence to satisfy the Court as to what was the nature of the services required from the service tenure-holder was to be governed by section 1 of the Chowkidari Chakran Act. It stated the general rule as to the simandari. It did not say that the duties of the simandars who had been performing these duties from generation to generation fall within the terms of section 1 of that Act.

The judgment of the learned District Judge, I think, ought to be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

PANTON, J.—I agree.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 77 (3) (d)—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Occupancy tenant, death of—Reversioner of deceased, claiming to succeed to occupancy—Suit by landlord to eject reversioner, nature of.

Where on the death of an occupancy tenant an alleged reversioner of his claims to succeed to his rights on the ground that the common ancestor of himself and the deceased tenant had occupied the land, his claim does not fall within clause (d) of sub-section 3) of section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, and is, therefore, not one which can under the said sub-section be heard and determined only by a Revenue Court. [p. 364, col. 2.]

A suit by the landlord to eject the reversioner on the ground that he is not entitled to succeed to the land as occupancy tenant thereof, is cognisable by a Civil Court and not by a Revenue Court. [p. 364, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the order of the Additional District Judge, Hoshiarpur, at Jullundur, dated the 20th March 1917.

Mr. Dalip Singh, for the Appellants.

Mr. Jagan Nath, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal and Second Appeals Nos. 1625, 1626 and 1627 of 1917 are connected and they can all be disposed of in one judgment. The suits out of which these four appeals have arisen, were brought by the proprietors of four different plots of agricultural land which were comprised in the occupancy holding of one Attar Singh, deceased, who was succeeded by his widow, Musammât Santi. On her death mutations of the plots in question were effected in favour of one Jowala Singh, who had entered into possession of the said plots and who claimed that he had a right to succeed to them on the grounds that he was a collateral of Attar Singh, deceased, and that the lands had been held at one time by the common ancestor of himself and Attar Singh.

The present suits were instituted by the proprietors against Jowala Singh for possession of the four plots on the usual allegations that the occupancy holdings had been acquired by the father of Attar Singh, deceased, and not by the alleged common ancestor of the deceased and Jowala Singh. The Subordinate Judge decreed all the suits, holding that Jowala Singh had failed to prove that the lands in question had been held by the common ancestor of himself and Attar Singh. On appeal the District Judge has held, on the authority of Mihan Singh v. Bhagwan Kaur (1), that the suits are governed by the "proviso" to sub-section (3) of section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, inasmuch as "the proper course for the plaintiffs was either to sue under clause (d) of the said sub-section to prove that the defendant had no right of occupancy or to sue under clause (e) to eject him." The learned Judge has accordingly set aside the decrees of the Subordinate Judge and sent back the cases to him with a direction that he should comply with the procedure laid down in the "proviso" to sub-section (3) of section 77 aforesaid.

In my opinion the view taken by the District Judge is clearly erroneous, and the suits as laid are cognizable by a Civil Court and are not governed by the "proviso" above referred to. It will be observed that in Mihan Singh v. Bhagwan Kaur (1) the defendants were admittedly "tenants" holding under the plaintiffs as their landlords, and the sole dispute between the parties was as to whether or not the defendants were "occupancy" tenants of the land on which stood the trees which they claimed to have a right to cut in case of need. The matter in dispute was, therefore, one which under clause (d) of sub-section (3) of section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act could be heard and determined only by a Revenue Court, and upon that ground the "proviso" to that sub-section was clearly applicable to the case. In the present cases, on the other hand, the defendant, according to the allegations in the plaint, is not a tenant of the plaintiffs but is a mere trespasser; and as he claims to succeed to the lands in dispute as an alleged collateral of the deceased occupancy tenant and on the ground that the common ancestor of himself and the deceased tenant had occupied the land, his claim clearly does not fall within clause (d) of sub-section (3) of section 77 of the Act and is, therefore, not one which can under the said sub-section be heard and determined only by a Revenue Court, cf. Mewa Singh v. Nathu (2):

For the reasons given, I hold that the suits as laid are cognizable by a Civil Court and the "proviso" to sub-section (3) of section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act does not apply to them. I accordingly accept all the four appeals, set aside the orders of the District Judge and remand the suits for a fresh decision on the merits. The plaintiffs will get their costs in this Court and other costs will be costs in the cause.

Appeal accepted.

(2) that the onus of showing that the drawer could not suffer damage from want of presentment lay on the plaintiff;

(3) that the drawer having supplied goods to the drawee as the value of the bill of exchange it must be presumed that he had suffered damage from want of presentment and that, therefore, he too was not liable on the bill.

Second appeal from a decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Farrukhabad.

Dr. Surendro Nath Sen, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted on foot of a hundi. It appears that the appellant Nanhey Mal sent certain potatoes to Hari Kishore, a firm in Calcutta. Nanhey Mal drew a bill payable at sight on Hari Kishore at Calcutta. The bill was in favour of Mathra Das Mohan Lal, who sold it the very same day to the plaintiffs, that is, on the 2nd of April 1913. The plaintiffs sent the hundi in an unregistered letter to their agent at Cawnpur. The letter and the bill appear to have miscarried in the post, but owing to the carelessness of the plaintiffs the loss was not discovered for nearly fourteen months afterwards. Some negotiations proceeded between the plaintiffs and Nanhey Mal with a view to getting a duplicate. Exactly what form those negotiations took is not clear, but it would seem that if the plaintiffs had given satisfactory evidence of the loss and had offered an indemnity to Nanhey Mal, the latter might have been compelled by proper proceedings to give a duplicate. No such proceedings were in fact ever taken—but the present suit was instituted on the 14th of April 1915. Hari Kishore was made a party as also was Nanhey Mal. Admittedly the bill of exchange was never presented either for acceptance or payment to Hari Kishore nor apparently was even a demand made from the latter. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit as against Hari Kishore but gave a decree as against Nanhey Mal. The lower Appellate Court confirmed the decree. Nanhey Mal appeals. The other persons who were parties to the appeal in the Court below are not parties to this appeal. The question is, whether Nanhey

Mal is liable under the circumstances Section 64 of the Negotiable Instruments Act provides that a bill of exchange must be presented for payment in the manner mentioned in that and subsequent sections. Section 76 provides that no presentment for payment is necessary in certain circumstances. The section says: "No presentment for payment is necessary, and the instrument is dishonoured at the due date for presentment, in any of the following circumstances." Clause (d) says, "as against a drawer if the drawer could not suffer damage from want of such presentment." This Court has held that the onus of showing that the drawer could not suffer damage from want of presentment lies on the holder suing on the bill. Admittedly in the present case no such proof was given. As a matter of fact in the present case Hari Kishore received potatoes from Nanhey Mal for the value of the hundi, in other words, it was the way in which Hari Kishore was paying for the potatoes. It is quite impossible to say under these circumstances that Nanhey Mal could not have suffered damage by reason of the non-presentation for payment of the bill to Hari Kishore. The person in whose favour this bill was drawn has gone bankrupt and a similar fate conceivably might have happened to Hari Kishore. We allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and dismiss the suit as against the appellant with costs in all Courts.

FAIZ BAKHSI v. NIAMAT KHAN.

The question whether the shamilat of a village should be partitioned in accordance with ancestral shares or hasab rasad khewat is a question of title, within the meaning of section 117 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act and is triable by a Civil Court. [p. 366, col. 2.]

Where a Revenue Officer without observing the formalities of a trial by a Civil Court decided that the shamilat of a village should be partitioned in accordance with ancestral shares:

Held, that the proceedings of the Revenue Officer not being taken under section 117 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, his decision could not operate as res judicata in a subsequent civil suit. [p. 366, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 23rd April 1914.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazal-i-Hussain, for the Appellants.

Bakshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Khairu Khan, son of Aziz Khan, one of the respondents in this case, has died leaving a widow. She has not yet been brought upon the record, but inasmuch as her late husband did not appear in the Courts below and was merely a pro forma defendant, we see no necessity for further delaying the hearing of this case which has now been before the Courts for five years.

The main question for decision here is whether the shamilat of the parties' village is to be partitioned in accordance with ancestral shares or hasab rasad khewat; in other words, what is the measure of the parties' rights in the shamilat? The Courts below have decreed in favour of the plaintiffs and have held that possession of khewat land is the sole measure of the rights of the parties in the shamilat land, and the defendants, who contend that the correct measure in the shamilat is their ancestral shares, have come to this Court on second appeal.

The first point urged on behalf of the appellants was that inasmuch as the Revenue Officer, who carried out the partition, decided after consideration that ancestral shares were the proper measure, he must be taken to have decided the matter under section 117 of the Land Revenue Act and that the matter is res judicata. In this view we are unable to concur, for the Revenue Officer does not purport to have been acting under section 117. The question was one of title, and was, therefore, triable by a Civil Court. The Revenue Officer did not observe the formalities of a trial by a Civil Court; he did not call for a plaint, nor did he call for evidence, nor did he style himself a Civil Court, nor did he draw up a decree. On the contrary he styled himself Assistant Collector of the 1st grade and his order is headed 'Mode of partition.' It is quite clear to us that neither in essence nor in form were the proceedings of the Revenue Officer proceedings taken under section 117 of the Land Revenue Act, and this objection is, therefore, overruled.

The only remaining point is that dealing with the merits of the case. The village was originally a Zemindari village, and on equitable as well as on general grounds the case for partition according to ancestral shares appears to be by far the stronger. But the Courts below have decided in favour of the hasab rasad khewat theory on the ground that, though in the statement of the proprietors appended to the pedigree table it is laid down that shamilat on partition shall be divided according to ancestral shares, there is a statement in clause No. 10, sub-clause (4), of the wajib-ul-arz that partition shall be according to possession and they have held that this statement, which is in violent conflict with the first mentioned, must be preferred, inasmuch as it is reproduced in the proprietary column in the jamabandi. Where the lower Courts have gone wrong is in assigning a necessarily higher value to the jamabandi entry than to the entry in the wajib-ul-arz, for the jamabandi entry is a mere reproduction of the results obtained from enquiry from the proprietors of the village and the best evidence of the results of that enquiry is to be found in the pedigree table entries and in the wajib-ul-arz. The entries in the jamabandi and the entries in wajib ul-arz and pedigree-table are both of them portions of the revenue record, and the jamabandi entries are certainly not of greater weight than the entries in the other papers. Now, the statement in the pedigree-table, on which reliance is placed by the appellants, is a very detailed statement showing how the village was settled, what the original rights were and how the possession of the various members of the village community, after originally being based upon ancestral shares, became founded on actual possession. The document goes on to say that, although in respect of the khewat land possession is the sole measure of right, the partible shamilat land on partition shall be distributed according to ancestral shares. It is obvious from this that the attention of the declarants was directed to the very question which is now claiming a decision from us, and that they gave a categorical answer in favour of distribution according to ancestral shares. The statement, on the other hand, on which the respondents rely, is a statement which was not a necessary portion of the answer to the question to which it purports to be a part of the answer. That statement purports to have been made in reply to a question regarding forest, waste, culturable or unculturable, reclaimed waste, grazing land and impartible land. Sub-clause (4) is headed "Impartible land", and with regard to that the statement is that cattle stands, roads, etc., shall not be liable to partition. Then follows the statement relied upon by the respondents, which is totally unnecessary and superfluous "The remainder shall be partitioned according to possession." Now this statement upon which the respondents base their claim is unreliable for these two reasons, first, it was quite uncalled for by the question, because the question referred only to impartible property and not to partible, secondly, if it was necessary to mention partible property it was quite unnecessary to mention the measure of right in that partible property and when it is weighed against the clear statement appended to the shajra nasb in which the partition of the shamilat as a whole is adverted to and an answer with reasons is supplied, its value cannot be but very small, and the almost irresistible conclusion must be that hasab rasad khewat was introduced by mistake. In our opinion there can be no doubt as to the relative value of the two conflicting entries and we hold that the shamilat of this village is divisible among the parties in accordance with their ancestral shares.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Mortgage of entire interest in sixteen-annas mahal—Groves, whether included in mortgage.

The owner of a sixteen-annas mahal obtained decrees against certain persons who had certain rights in the mahal as grove-holders. In execution of these decrees he put up to sale the interest of the grove-holders and purchased it himself. Subsequently he mortgaged his entire interest in the mahal to the plaintiff without any sort of reservation.

Held, that the interest of the grove-holders acquired by the mortgagor merged in his estate as zemindar and was included in the mortgage. [p. 368, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Allahabad.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, (with him Messrs. B. E. O'Connor and S. A. Haidar), for the Appellant.

Mr. Nihal Chand for Mr. W. Wallach (with him Mr. Haribans Sahai), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts connected with this appeal may be shortly stated as follows:—One Ali Mazhar having become the owner of the sixteen-anna Mahal mortgaged the same to the plaintiff's predecessor. The mortgage is most comprehensive in its terms, the mortgagor purporting to mortgage his entire interest without any sort of reservation. A decree was obtained on foot of this mortgage. The property was sold and purchased by the plaintiff or his predecessor. The present suit is brought to recover certain fractional shares in three groves. It appears that prior to the mortgage which we have mentioned above, Ali Mazhar obtained decrees against certain persons who had certain rights as grove-holders. In execution of these decrees he put up to sale the interest (whatever it was) of the grove holders and purchased it himself. The argument put forward on behalf of the defendants is that this interest was an interest separate altogether from the Zemindari and it did not form portion of the mortgaged property, and consequently did not pass to the plaintiff when he purchased under the mortgage decree. It seems to us that this contention is not sound. We have already mentioned that the acquisition of the grove-holders' interest was prior to the mortgage and we have referred to the terms of the mortgage deed. There was no reason of any kind why the interest of the grove holders should not merge in the inheritance. Ali Mazhar was the sole owner of the sixteen anna Mahal. At that time there was no reason why it would in any way be for the benefit of Ali Mazhar to keep outstanding the interest of the grove-holders. It is absolutely clear under the circumstances of the present case that the interest of the grove-holders, purchased and acquired by Ali Mazhar, merged in his estate as Zemindar. Furthermore, the very terms of the mortgage-deed are quite wide enough to include and comprehend every interest that he possessed at the date of the mortgage in the sixteen-anna Mahal which he sold. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Mortgages, consolidation of, whether permitted—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 61.

The rule of consolidation of mortgages is a technical rule of English Law and is not founded on general principles of justice. Even prior to the enactment of the Transfer of Property Act the rule was not applicable to India [p. 369, col. 1.]

A mortgagor or a person claiming under him is, therefore, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to redeem a subsequent mortgage without redeeming an earlier mortgage. [p. 369, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Divisional Judge, Nerbudda Division, Hoshangabad, dated the 3rd December 1915, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Khandwa, dated the 31st July 1915.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 4th of April 1872, Sebastian and J. C. Desouza executed a simple mortgage of their house in Khandwa in favour of the defendants' predecessors. The principal sum of Rs. 600 was payable with interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per month after twelve months. On the 31st of July 1872 the same mortgagors executed a usufructuary mortgage of the same house (Exhibit P-1). On the 4th July 1914, the plaintiff purchased from J. C. Desouza and P. V. Desouza, son of Sebastian Desouza, their right, title and interest in the house. The plaintiff made a deposit under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, which was refused. Hence this suit for redemption of the mortgage, dated the 31st July 1872.

The defendants denied the title of the plaintiff to redeem, and claimed Rs. 1,048 for repairs and improvements said to have been made to the house. They further claimed that the plaintiff is bound to pay the money due under the prior mortgage of the 4th April 1872, and the amount claimed for mortgage money due on the two mortgages was Rs. 10,202-1-0.

The first Court held on oral evidence that the consideration for the second mortgage included the amount due under the prior mortgage, and allowed Rs. 45 as cost of reconstructing a wall. To this interest at 9 per cent. from the end of Sambat year 1959 was added. The rest of the claim for improvements was dismissed. The plaintiff was also directed to pay the principal amount secured by Exhibit P-1, that is, Rs. 1,236. The mortgagees' costs were disallowed on the ground that they had improperly refused the tender or deposit made under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. On appeal, the learned Divisional Judge has confirmed the decree, and this appeal has been filed by the mortgagees.

The first point for decision is, whether the plaintiff is bound to redeem the mortgage of the 4th of April 1872. There is no contract to that effect. Under the Transfer of Property Act, section 61, as interpreted in Tajjo Bibi v. Bhagwan Prasad (1), the mortgagees cannot claim that the earlier mortgage should also be redeemed, but the case is not governed by the Transfer of Property Act, but by the law which prevailed prior to its enactment. Apart from contract, the rule of consolidation was recognised by the Bombay High Court in Vithal Mahadev v. Daud (2). A different view was, however, taken in Odoy Churn Rana v. Bhujohury Janah (3). In a later case, Narayan Venkoba v. Pandurang Kamat (4), the rule was held to be a technical rule of English Law, and not founded on general principles of justice and was, therefore, held to be inapplicable to the Mofussil of Bombay. Even the Madras High Court, which takes a different view [Subramania Aiyar v. Balasubramania Aiyar (5)] of the interpretation of section 61, seems to concede this right to the mortgagee, if the law of limitation places no obstacle in his way [Balasubramania Nadar v. Sivaguru Asari (6)], but in the present case there is such an obstacle. The ruling in Shitalal v. Nanhelal (7) is more in accordance with the Allahabad view than the Madras view. I hold, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to redeem the mortgage in suit, without redeeming the earlier mortgage.

It is urged that, under the terms of Exhibit P-1, the mortgagors had only a right to redeem within two years, the stipulated period for the redemption of the mortgage. This is a view which cannot be accepted. The term was fixed for the convenience of the mortgagors, but the document provides that even if the money is offered within the two years, the mortgagees were bound to accept the same. The document also provided that the mortgagors were at liberty to sell the house within the said period, if they wished to do so. These provisions were laid down in the interests of the mortgagors, not of the mortgagees. They cannot be read so as to restrict the rights of the mortgagors to a redemption within the period of two years. The law allows them 60 years for redemption, and a contract curtailing that period of redemption would be void, if the document could be interpreted in the way suggested by the appellants, but I hold that such an interpretation cannot be accepted. The mortgage was only a security for a debt. It does not provide for the mortgagees being owners of the property after the two years, and if it did, it would, in effect, so far be a mortgage by conditional sale. In Laxman Devideen v. Bajji Bai (8) it was held that such mortgages did not execute themselves upon default of payment on the due date, and this is in accordance with the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gokuldoss v. Kripa-ram (9). Assuming, therefore, that there was an implied contract that the mortgagees were to be the owners of the property, if they failed to pay the principal sum after two years, their right of redemption was not lost, as the Punjab Code, which contained a chapter regarding redemption, and the spirit of the Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806 were regarded as in force here, previous to the Central Provinces Laws Act of 1875.

It is urged that the mortgagees' possession became adverse when they commenced to improve the house. It is difficult to see how it could be adverse merely because the mortgagees made improvements, in respect of which they can only claim a charge, so far as the improvements are authorised by law. It is not an unequivocal communication of an intention to hold as owner. It is quite consistent with the position of a mortgagee with a charge for the money so spent. However, the so-called improvements have not been proved except a petty item of Rs. 45 said to have been spent in Sambat year 1959, that is the year 1903, and as the present suit was instituted on the 12th of October 1914, no question of a title by prescription arises in the case.

ABDUL HASHIM v. KADER BATCHA.

The last point argued is that the mortgagees' costs have been improperly disallowed. The reason given by the first Court for disallowing their costs is that they have improperly refused to accept the deposit made under section 83. The Subordinate Judge adds that they might have been paid the additional amount, had they claimed it. The lower Appellate Court thinks that the additional item of Rs. 45 was not claimable by the mortgagees. The claim for Rs. 45 has been decreed upon the evidence of D. W. No. 3, who says that a wall had fallen down and it had to be re-built. I am not prepared to differ from the first Court's view on this point. No doubt the contract between the parties does not provide for any such claim, but I think the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act in this respect merely codify the rules of equity. It is, however, unnecessary to pursue this subject further. The mortgagees made a preposterous claim for over Rs. 11,000 and they have succeeded in obtaining a decree for Rs. 1,333. Under these circumstances the order for costs does not call for interference on my part. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Plaintiff sued for a declaration that a mortgage executed by him in favour of 1st defendant was not supported by consideration and for cancellation of the instrument. The 1st defendant had leased one of the items of the property in dispute to the 2nd defendant, whose title as lessee was upheld in a suit brought by him against the plaintiff.

Held, (1) that the mortgage-deed could not be cancelled, inasmuch as the matter had passed beyond the stage of contract to that of an executed conveyance and the deed was neither void nor voidable for non-payment of consideration; [p. 372, col. 1; p. 371, col. 2]

(3) that the prayer for declaration could not be granted inasmuch as there was no proof of any danger to the mortgagor's title to the properties. [p. 371, col. 2; p. 372, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

PHILLIPS, J.—In this case the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the suit mortgage deed is not supported by consideration and is void and for its cancellation. The plaintiff properties were mortgaged by the plaintiffs to the 1st defendant and it has been found that the consideration money was not paid. The 1st defendant, however, leased one of the items to the 2nd defendant who is now in possession, and it has been decided in another suit that the 2nd defendant is entitled to retain possession and that his lease is valid. The 2nd defendant's lease is based on the plaintiff mortgage deed inasmuch as he is a lessee of the mortgagee and to the extent of the possession of the 2nd defendant, the mortgage deed must be held to be valid.

The plaintiffs' suit has been dismissed on the ground that it will not lie under section 39 of the Specific Relief Act, because the document is neither void nor voidable and there is no apprehension of any injury to the plaintiff's right. It has been contended before us that the mortgage deed is a void document inasmuch as no consideration has passed. It has no doubt been held that a suit will not lie to compel a person either to lend or to borrow money, that is to say, the Court will not decree specific performance in a suit to enforce the execution of such a contract and it is contended that, if plaintiff cannot sue for specific performance, he must be entitled to have the contract cancelled. In this case, however, there is something more than a contract to mortgage, because the mortgage deed has been executed and registered and possession has been given under it. It is, therefore, a complete conveyance of a mortgage right to the 1st defendant.

This case is on all fours with the case reported as Basingappa v. Virupaxapa (1). There it was held that, in a case where the mortgagee had failed to pay consideration for the mortgage deed, plaintiff was not entitled to bring a suit under section 39 of the Specific Relief Act. The other side relied on Ramaswami Chettiar v. Sundara Reddier (2) and Kumarappan Chettiar v. Narayanan Chettiar (3). In the first case, the suit was brought by the mortgagee to enforce his mortgage when he had not paid any consideration for it and it was held that, inasmuch as there was no debt due, there was nothing to be charged on the land and the mortgagee could not enforce his charge on the land before he had paid the mortgage-money. In Kumarappan Chettiar v. Narayanan Chettiar (3) also the plaintiff was mortgagee without possession and sued to enforce the mortgage for which no consideration had been paid. In those two cases, Spencer, J., held that the mortgage was a nullity and was inoperative. I think the present case can be distinguished from those cases on the ground that possession has been given under the mortgage, even if it can be held that a mortgage is void when it has merely been executed without consideration and nothing further has taken place. In Tirumal Raju v. Pandla Muthial Naidu (4), where only part consideration was paid, the mortgage was held to be valid, as also in Rashik Lal v. Ram Narain (5), where reference is made to Tatia v. Babaji (6), where Farran, C. J., pointed out the distinction between a perfected conveyance and a mere contract. In Govindammal v. Gopalachariar (7) it was held that the execution of a sale-deed completed the contract and the fact that there was no consideration for it did not make it void. Under section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act: "A mortgage is the transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property for the purpose of securing the payment of money advanced or to be advanced," so that on execution of a registered deed in accordance with section 59, the mortgage would be complete although the mortgage money had not actually been paid to the mortgagor. It is difficult to draw a distinction between the transfer of immoveable property by way of sale and a transfer by way of mortgage. If a śāla is complete by the execution of the registered instrument, it appears to me that a mortgage is also complete and can be enforced. The mortgagor would not then be entitled to sue for cancellation of the instrument, but if the consideration was not paid to him, he would have his remedy in damages for breach of the contract. This view does not, I think, conflict with the principle that a suit will not lie to enforce a contract to lend or to borrow, for in this case, the contract has been completed by the conveyance and it is not a case of suing to enforce the contract. Under section 39 of the Specific Relief Act plaintiff cannot bring a suit because the document is not void nor is it voidable.

It is, however, contended that his prayer for a declaration should be granted. So far as the 2nd defendant is concerned, it has been decided by a Court of law that he is not entitled to such a declaration. As against the 1st defendant a decree declaring that no consideration passed might be justifiable, but a declaration to this effect is only asked for jointly with a declaration that the deed is void, and it seems to me that the declaration as to consideration should not be decreed as both the lower Courts have found that plaintiff has no reasonable apprehension of danger and plaintiff has not asked for this particular relief alone against 1st defendant.

The second appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

that the deed of mortgage executed by him was not supported by consideration, for cancellation of the deed, for a declaration that the lease executed by the 1st defendant in favour of the 2nd defendant was not binding on plaintiff. Though there is a prayer for "confirming the possession of item No. 1 by the plaintiff" only the two declarations prayed for were valued and stamp duty paid thereon. The defendant executed a lease of item No. 1 in favour of the 2nd defendant on the 7th September 1911 for a period of 3 years, and at the date of the suit (12th June 1914) the lease had about three months to run. The 2nd defendant filed Original Suit No. 248 of 1912 on his lease, alleging that plaintiff obstructed him and got a decree in his favour restraining the appellant from disturbing his possession which, it is now admitted, was confirmed on appeal.

Various defences were raised but for the purpose of this second appeal it is necessary to consider only two, namely, that plaintiff's remedy was only to sue for the consideration recited in the deed, assuming that it was not paid, and that plaintiffs are not entitled under the Specific Relief Act for the relief claimed.

Both the District Munsif and District Judge dismissed the suit on the preliminary ground that the plaintiff was not entitled to the declarations sought for, even assuming that the allegations in the plaint are true.

As regards the prayer for the cancellation of the mortgage deed, I think it must fail. A distinction has to be drawn between a case where the matter rests simply on contract and where it has passed to the stage of an executed conveyance and, in the latter case, mere non-payment of consideration will not render the transaction void or voidable. See Rashik Lal v. Ram Narain (5), Balingappa v. Virupaxapa (1). The question has also been fully discussed by Wallis, C. J., in Appeal No. 64 of 1916. In the present case no fraud, misrepresentation or mistake is alleged and no case has been made out for cancellation.

Another ground for refusing the prayer is that the parties cannot be put on status quo ante as the mortgagee has executed a lease of one of the items of property which has been upheld as against the plaintiff. It is unnecessary to decide whether a mortgagee who pays no consideration can, by the simple expedient of transferring his mortgage right or leasing a portion of the property, plead the transfer in bar to a suit for consideration or whether it is not competent to any Court as against such mortgagee to cancel the document in so far as it affects rights not transferred to any bona fide third party, as the lease in this case has been held to be binding on the plaintiff in the suit filed by the lessee and the matter is concluded between the parties. It is well settled that, when a contract is voidable, the right to determine it is subject to the condition that an innocent third party will not be affected by the cancellation or even a wrongdoer in case of delay on the part of the party entitled to rescind and that as a condition to a rescission there must be restitution in integrum, so that the parties may be put in status quo by the Court. See Olough v. L. & N. W. Railway Company (8), Western Bank of Scotland v. Addie (9), Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. (10).

As regards the prayer for a declaration that the mortgage is not supported by consideration, it is clear that a mortgage affects the property only to the extent to which money is advanced as security, Ramaswami Chettiar v. Sundara Reddiar (2), Kumarappan Chettiar v. Narayanan Chettiar (3). If there was no consideration, there would be nothing for the mortgagor to pay when a suit is filed. Though there may be cases where a Court will grant a declaration or injunction on proof of danger to the mortgagor's title to the properties, I do not think there is anything in the allegation in the plaint which would justify a Court in exercising its discretion in favour of the mortgagor who has come to Court 3 years after the execution of the deed of mortgage. Both the lower Courts are of opinion that plaintiffs have no reasonable apprehension of any serious injury in the future.

In the result the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—Attra Mal, from whom the property in suit has descended, had five daughters by his first wife, but no son. On the 14th December 1888 he executed a Will wherein he mentioned that Gopi Chand, the son of his daughter Musammal Viro, had been adopted by him and brought up by him as his own son. He did not, however, in this Will nominate his grandson Gopi Chand as his successor, but made a certain disposition of his property which benefited Gopi Chand after the death of Musammal Ganga Devi, the wife of Attra Mal. Subsequently, Attra Mal married again, cancelled his Will of 1888 and made another testament by which he divided all his property between his two wives. On the 16th May 1900, i.e., the date on which the second Will was executed, Gopi Chand executed a deed by which he relinquished all claims upon Attra Mal's property, for consideration and undertook not to bring any claim after the death of Attra Mal, against his widows and daughters. Subsequently, Attra Mal married a third time and a son Kidar Nath was born to him. On the 23rd of January 1909, Attra Mal died and his son Kidar Nath succeeded to him but Kidar Nath himself died on the 2nd of December 1909. A few days later on the 28th of December 1909, Musamma Malan, the mother of Kidar Nath, executed a deed by which she surrendered Kidar Nath's estate in favour of her husband's nephew Rakha Mal in return for an allowance, and the present plaintiff Gopi Chand now comes into Court and prays for a declaration that this agreement of the 28th of December 1909 shall not affect his reversionary rights.

The plaintiff does not claim the succession to Attra Mal; he admits that on the death of Attra Mal, Kidar Nath succeeded to his estate; he also admits that Musammal Malan has a life-interest in the estate, but he contends that as the brother by adoption of Kidar Nath, he is entitled to the reversion on the death of Musammal Malan. The defence was that Gopi Chand plaintiff was never adopted by Attra Mal and that even if a form of adoption was gone through, such an adoption would be invalid under the Hindu Law. It was further contended that even if Gopi Chand had been validly adopted by Attra Mal, by his deed of the 16th May 1900 he had renounced all claims upon Attra Mal's estate.

The Senior Subordinate Judge found, rightly, that though the plaintiff may have been treated by Attra Mal as a son, he was not formally adopted by him; further that if he was formally adopted by Attra Mal, such adoption by Attra Mal of his daughter's son was not countenanced by Hindu Law and had not been shown to be valid by a custom obtaining in the tribe of Aroras of the Lahore District, and he has dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court and on his behalf we have heard his Counsel at great length on these points, viz., whether, as a matter of fact, Attra Mal did adopt the plaintiff, and whether such adoption by a grandfather of his daughter's son is valid according to the alleged custom set up by the plaintiff, and we have come to the conclusion that the decision of the Court below must be upheld.

As regards the factum of adoption, there is not one single witness out of the 17 produced by the plaintiff who states that there was a formal giving and taking of the child. We are quite prepared to concede that an elaborate religious ceremony is quite unnecessary, at any rate, in the Punjab for a valid adoption, but we are equally satisfied that there must be a formal giving and taking of the child to be adopted. It is also alleged that Attra Mal on two occasions performed the marriage of the plaintiff, but there is not one iota of documentary evidence in support of this. Not one single tambol entry has been produced and yet on the occasions referred to marriage presents must have been given. Again, although in many documents the plaintiff has described himself as the son of his natural father, in not one document has he described himself as the son of his alleged adoptive father. Again, even among the plaintiff's own witnesses' statements there is much discrepancy as to whether he performed the kirya korm of Attra Mal. Attra Mal himself, except in his Will of 1888 wherein he says he has adopted the plaintiff and brought him up like a son, has not described him as his son, but in his Will of 1900 he described him as son of Arjan and of his daughter. Now, in 1900 if the plaintiff had been formally adopted by Attra Mal he was the next heir, for at that time Kidar Nath had not been born; in fact, Attra Mal had not yet married Kidar Nath's mother; so that it is difficult to understand why Gopi Chand should have been willing to renounce a portion of his inheritance unless he was conscious that there was some doubt as to either the factum or the validity of his adoption.

With regard to the validity of the adoption, we are unable to find on the record anything approaching proof of a special custom at variance both with agricultural custom and with the personal law of the parties. The custom set up by the plaintiff is admittedly in conflict with Hindu Law which prohibits the adoption of a daughter's son; but on behalf of the plaintiff Mr. Gobind Das has contended on the strength of Sohnun v. Ram Dial (1), in which it was held that in cases where the right of adoption is admitted or is found to prevail and the parties are not members of an agricultural tribe, the burden of proof ought to lie on those who deny that a particular kind of adoption, e.g., that of a daughter's or sister's son, cannot be made, that the onus lay on defendant in this case. From a perusal of the authority it is quite clear that the foregoing dictum does not represent the real meaning of the learned Judges, but that it contains a redundancy of negatives; for "cannot be made," "can be made" should be read. With all respect we are entirely unable to agree with that dictum, which appears to us to be opposed both to law and to common sense. The particular adoption propounded by the plaintiff is one which is prohibited by the personal law of the parties; it is one which is opposed to the general agricultural custom of the province, and for those reasons no presumption can be raised in its favour; in fact, the presumption must be entirely against its validity. It is a canon of law that all persons propounding a special custom or usage must prove that custom, and to hold the contrary appears to us to be impossible. Certain old decisions also have been relied upon to prove that among Aroras the adoption of a daughter's son is customary. Those rulings are cited in the margin (foot note*). In all these cases, however, the onus was laid upon the persons challenging the adoption and all that was held was that the adoption of a daughter's son, etc., had not been shown to be invalid. Those cases were considered in Ralla v. Budha (2), and in that judgment it was held that there was no presumption in favour of the validity of the adoption of daughter's or sister's son. That decision dealt with a case of a tribe of persons governed by agricultural custom; in the present case we are dealing with persons who are not governed by agricultural custom, but by their personal law, and in such a case the lack of a presumption as to the validity of an adoption which is contrary to their personal law is even greater than in the case of persons who follow agricultural custom. In short, we are not prepared to disagree with the finding of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge that it has not been proved that the plaintiff was formally adopted by Attra Mal, and we are entirely in concurrence with his conclusion that no special custom has been proved amongst the Aroras of Lahore which permits an individual to adopt his daughter's son, and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

HAZARILAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—

versus

HAR GOVIND—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Succession—Possession, suit for, by reversioners—Burden of proof—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 32, 64, 65—Book of genealogy, kept by Bhat, entries in, admissibility of—Copy of original which is in existence, whether admissible—Secondary evidence.

In a suit by the reversioners of a deceased proprietor for possession of the property left by the deceased, the onus lies on the plaintiffs not only to prove that they are the reversioners entitled to succeed but that they are the only nearest reversioners; at any rate they must satisfy the Court that to the best of their knowledge there are no nearer heirs. [p. 376, col. 2; p. 377, col. 1.]

In order to prove their relationship with a deceased proprietor the plaintiffs relied on a Bhat's book of genealogy. It was admitted by the Bhat who produced it that the book was largely a copy made by his father from an older book which was then in existence. It was not alleged that the old book was in such a state that it could not be produced or that the entries made therein were indecipherable owing to age or owing to other cause:

Held, that having regard to sections 64 and 65 of the Evidence Act the entries in the book could not be looked upon as independent and original ones, nor could they be admitted as secondary evidence inasmuch as the original entries which were in existence could have, but had not, been produced. [p. 378, col. 1.]

Obiter dictum.—If the book had not been held to be inadmissible under sections 64 and 65 of the Evidence Act, it would have been admissible under section 32, sub-sections (2) and (5) of the Act, inasmuch as it was a recognised duty and pursuit of a Bhat to keep a genealogy of the families he was interested in and he had as a rule special means of knowledge in the matter. [p. 378, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decision of the Sub-Judge, Betul, dated the 29th March 1917.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-appellants Hazarilal, Beharilal, Misrilal and Dhanrajsued the defendant-respondent Har Govind in the lower Court for possession of a 10 annas 8 pice share in three villages Khandara, Kutarlik and Bodi with proportionate sir and khudkasht and also for a similar share in two houses and compounds situated in Khandwa and Badnur respectively. Their case was that Hazarilal and Beharilal were, together with one Mehangilal, the nearest reversioners of one Balaram, deceased in 1879, to whom the whole of the above property belonged, but as Mehangilal declined to join in the suit only a two-thirds portion was sued for. It was further alleged that, after Balaram's death, his widow Musammatt Jadao remained in possession of the property until her death in 1914 and that thereafter the respondent Har Govind had entered into illegal possession thereof. The plaintiffs-appellants Misrilal and Dhanraj are the purchasers under a registered sale-deed, dated 23rd August 1915, of half the property in suit from the first two plaintiffs-appellants and hence they also joined in the suit. A detailed genealogical table showing the relationship between Hazarilal, Beharilal and Mehangilal was also included in the plaint.

The defendant-respondent Har Govind admitted in the lower Court that Balaram had been the owner of the property in suit; his death, however, was placed by him in 1889, not 1879: it was further admitted that his widow Musammatt Jadao held the property until her death in 1914, Balaram having left behind him no lineal heirs. The correctness of the genealogical tree included in the plaint was, however, denied in the defendant-respondent's written statement, dated 20th December 1915, except to the extent that Balaram's wife was Musammatt Jadao and his father Ghasiram. Apart from an alleged Will by Musammatt Jadao dated 1914 in his favour, Har Govind pleaded that he was, with her deceased husband's consent, adopted by Musammatt Jadao about 1900. The plaintiffs, on their part, denied the adoption. On these and connected pleadings, the lower Court framed issues and, finally held that the plaintiffs-appellants had failed to prove that Hazarilal and Beharilal were, with Mehangelal, the nearest reversioners of the deceased Balaram. In particular, on the large amount of oral and documentary evidence on record the Subordinate Judge found that Hazarilal's relationship with Balaram as shown in the plaint was established but that Beharilal's was not. The Subordinate Judge further held that the plaintiffs-appellants, apart from the failure to establish Beharilal's alleged relationship, had also failed to establish the fact that there were no other persons who, if alive, would have, as descendants of Balaram, excluded them from inheritance. He found it in these circumstances unnecessary to examine in detail into the defendant-respondent's title to hold the disputed property and accordingly dismissed the suit.

In this appeal the plaintiffs have challenged the lower Court's finding that they had failed to establish Beharilal's relationship with Balaram. In the second place, they contested the lower Court's finding that it was incumbent on them to establish any further than they have attempted to do the fact that there were alive no other nearer or as near reversioners than Hazarilal, Beharilal and Mehangelal, and it was urged in this connection that the onus of proving the existence of any nearer heirs rested on the defendant-respondent Har Govind. These are the two main positions of the appellants. The defendant-respondent, while supporting the lower Court's decree, challenged its finding that Hazarilal in particular had established his relationship with Balaram alleged in the plaint.

The Subordinate Judge has written a careful and well-considered judgment in the case and has examined the large mass of evidence on record in a clear, painstaking manner. We find it convenient to deal first with the second contention raised in appeal, viz.—that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that, even assuming that Hazarilal and Beharilal had established their alleged relationship with Balaram, it was incumbent on the plaintiff-appellant to definitely show further that there were no other possible nearer or as near heirs alive who were entitled to succeed to the inheritance. An attempt has been made by the learned Counsel for the appellants to urge that, in view of the allegation in paragraph 5 of the plaint that Hazarilal, Beharilal and Mehangelal were the nearest heirs of Balaram and of the defendant's reply in paragraph 4 (c) of his written statement, dated 20th December 1915, in which two steps in the descent of Hazarilal and Mehangelal from Radhakishan (vide the table in plaint) were challenged, the plaintiffs-appellants had sufficiently discharged the onus of proof which rested on them in this connection and that on the findings of the lower Court on the evidence, a presumption arose that there were no nearer heirs. The Sub-Judge has dealt with this matter in paragraph 53 of his judgment. It has been established, and is indeed admitted by the appellants, that the genealogical tree in the plaint is not complete or exhaustive. They themselves have proved that Radhakishan had, besides the four sons shown in the plaint, two other sons Baijnath and Dinanath, both of whom left issue and had in due course grandsons. There is absolutely no evidence on which we can assume that none of the descendants of Baijnath and Dinanath were alive on the death of Musammatt Jadao and it is, in our opinion, clear that the onus of proof rested in this connection on the appellants. They came to Court claiming that they were the nearest reversioners, and it is clear that the defendant-respondent denied their genealogical table except to a specified extent, vide paragraph 5 of defendant-respondent's written statement, dated 20th December 1911. In these circumstances the appellants had to establish not only that they were reversioners entitled to succeed on Musammatt Jadao's death but that they were the only and nearest reversioners. The case reported as Rama Row v. Kuttiya Gounden (1) in reality gives appellants no help: the circumstances there were entirely different and indeed the principle on which we think the question we are considering must be dealt with was there enunciated, vide the remarks of Trotter and

HAZARI LAL v. HAR GOVIND.

Seshagiri Aiyar, J.J., at page 515*, viz. that the appellants in this case were bound to satisfy the Court that to the best of their knowledge there were no nearer heirs. It must further go against the appellants that, in a case like the present, where the utmost exactitude and precision in detail was necessary, they came to Court with a genealogical tree which in the course of the litigation their own evidence has shown to be incorrect and incomplete. We are asked to assume or presume that where the appellants have failed to show any branches of the family, such branches must be extinct. Such an argument, however, begs the whole question at issue and it is impossible to consider it seriously. It does not seem to us possible or necessary to decide whether these omissions were made bona fide or otherwise by the plaintiffs when they filed this suit: however made, they seem to us fatal to their case. It is clear in any event that the information as to the existence of branches not shown in the plaint was available to them had they sought it with diligence, for they themselves have in this suit produced much of the evidence on the point and that evidence is largely unfavourable to their contentions in this connection. It is impossible, even on the plaintiffs-appellants' own evidence, to feel satisfied that there are not alive descendants of Chandrabhan, Baijnath or Dinanath who are not as much or more entitled to succeed than the appellants are and it seems unnecessary, therefore, to labour this point further. No grounds have been shown on which we could question the propriety of the finding of the Sub-Judge in paragraph 53 of his judgment and it is, in our opinion, correct.

The learned Counsel for appellants has in this connection raised an incidental point, viz., that if we were unable, as we are, to hold that the onus of showing there were nearer heirs rested on the defendant-respondent, the case was one for remand for a detailed finding on the point involved. We cannot, however, see our way to accept this contention. The plaintiffs came to Court alleging they were the nearest reversioners of Balaram; we have already remarked that their position was directly challenged by the defendant-respondent in almost every respect, and the first issue framed by the lower Court was broad and explicit enough to cover specifically the matter involved. This particular matter was indeed the pivot of the plaintiffs' case and we can in these circumstances see no reason for granting the prayer for a remand.

Our finding on the point of the appellants' failure to prove the non-existence of nearer or as near heirs necessarily governs this appeal, but it may be of interest to consider shortly the first ground urged in appeal. The contention herein involved is to the effect that Beharilal's connection with Balaram, the last male holder of the estate, as alleged in the plaint has been sufficiently established on the pleadings and evidence and that the Sub-Judge was wrong in taking the contrary view. After a long and exhaustive analysis of the evidence produced, the lower Court has summed up its finding as regards Beharilal in paragraph 50 of its judgment. Everything turns in this connection on the evidential value, if any, which may be attached to the Bhat's book of genealogy (P. W. No. 31) which has been produced by P. W. No. 1 Kesarilal. It is first of all necessary to consider whether this book was admissible in evidence at all, it having been pressed strongly in this Court on behalf of the respondent that this Exhibit was as a matter of fact totally inadmissible. The lower Court has dealt with the question of the admissibility or non-admissibility of this Exhibit in paragraph 8 of the judgment. The book contains the professed genealogical tree of many families including that of Radhakishan, the alleged common ancestor of the family. The first point urged on behalf of the defendant-respondent is that the book produced was not admissible as secondary evidence, in view of the admission by P. W. No. 1 Kesarilal that the present book is merely largely a copy made by his father from an older book of his which is still in existence. The critical portion of the evidence of the witness in this connection is as follows:—

"I have got another book, potha, also. It is old.....I do not recollect exactly what that book contains, but it contains all the genealogies which are contained in this present book....This book is new book. My father told me that he made entries in this new book from the old book he had." Now accepting these statements as correct, what is the exact concrete position? It is that there is in existence the original book containing not only the genealogical trees of this family but of many others also. It is not clear, nor does it seem to us material, whether the new book contains any entirely new matter or independent entries concerning other families. Concerning the family involved in this litigation, the position is that the entry we are concerned with is merely a copy—a copy, it is true, made by the original authority himself but still a copy—made long after the original entry made in the original book. This latter, although old, is still in existence and it has not been alleged that it is in such a state that it cannot be produced or that the entries made therein are indecipherable owing to age or other cause. We are of opinion, therefore, that, having regard to sections 64 and 65 of the Indian Evidence Act, the entry in the present book cannot be looked on as an independent and original one, nor can it in the circumstances be admitted as secondary evidence of an original which is in existence and could have, but has not, been produced. So far as the genealogical entry we are considering is concerned, the statement of Kesarilal, if it means anything at all, means that this entry is a copy of the one in the old book. It has not been suggested that the father in compiling this new book added amending or independent matter regarding the old entries. On the contrary the new entries we are concerned with are mere copies of the original ones. The witness P. W. No. 1 is perfectly clear on that point and distinctly says that the new book contains all the genealogies which appeared in the old one and that his father told him he had made the new entries from those in the old one. For these reasons we are constrained to hold that the present Exhibit P-31 was not admissible in evidence; it is clearly not, so far as the genealogy of the present family is concerned, an independent creation by the author but a mere copy of the original, and the fact that this copy was made by the author himself does not materially affect the legal position [Of: Surjan Singh v. Sardar Singh (2)]. In view of this finding we need not discuss the question, whether the book was admissible under section 32, sub-section (2), (5) or (6) of the Evidence Act, but we may say that, had we not been constrained to hold that it was inadmissible as being secondary evidence of an original which could have been and was not produced, the book would probably have been admissible in evidence under section 32, sub-sections (2) and (5), because it is a recognised duty and pursuit of a Bhat to keep the genealogy of the families he is interested in and he has as a rule special means of knowledge in the matter. Whether, however, even if technically admissible, it would have had much evidential value in view of the many difficulties which arise on the evidence in connection with details of the family given therein and more particularly of the fact that the original fountain-head and source, viz., the old book, has not been produced at all, is, of course, entirely another matter which we need not discuss. Ruling out, therefore, as we feel we must do, Exhibit 31 there is, of course, practically no evidence worthy of the name on which we can hold Beharilal's relationship with Balaram established. The oral evidence of the first six witnesses which has been so carefully weighed by the Sub-Judge is demonstrably insufficient to establish the plaintiffs' case on this point. There is, as compared with the question of Hazarilal's relationship with Balaram, a striking and almost total lack of other independent evidence, such as statements or admissions of parties since dead which would support plaintiffs' case, and it is clear that Beharilal's relationship is the weak if not entirely missing link in the chain. These findings necessarily govern the appeal and we find it unnecessary, therefore, to give a finding on the question which has been urged strongly on behalf of defendant-respondent that the Sub-Judge's decision that Hazarilal's relationship with Balaram has been proved on the evidence is unjustifiable. The appellants' failure not only to establish Hazarilal's connection but also to show that there are no other subsisting nearer or as near

HAZARILAL v. HAR GOVIND.

In an appeal from an order remanding a case under Order XLI, rule 23 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Chief Court can no more go into questions of fact than it can in the case of second appeals.

The question whether the pattis of a village are real sub-divisions of the village within the meaning of section 15 (c), secondly, of the Punjab Pre-emption Act is a question of fact. For the decision of that question the Court should have regard only to the fact whether the pattis are actual sub-divisions of the village, and not for what reason the sub-divisions were made.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 10th April 1917.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Appellant

Mr. Roshan Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff's suit to pre-empt based on the ground that he was a proprietor of the patti in which the land is situated, was dismissed by the first Court on a finding that it was not proved that there were any sub-divisions in the village. The first Court held that the pattis were sub-divisions for purposes of revenue only. The District Judge on appeal held that the pattis were real sub-divisions and remanded the case for decision on the merits. The vendees appeal.

The appeal is one from an order remanding the case under Order XLI, rule 23, and not a second appeal, but I can no more go into questions of fact than I could if this were a second appeal [see Sawan Singh v. Mothu (1)].

Now it seems to me that the question whether these pattis are real sub-divisions of the village is a question of fact. In Nanni Mal v. Sheo Nath (2) Plowden, J., held without any doubt that it was a matter of fact whether the town or city comprised sub-divisions, and if this is correct in the case of a town, why should it not be so in the case of a village?

I certainly cannot say that there is no evidence to support the finding of the learned District Judge, seeing that the Revenue Records speak of pattis. As to the argument that the pattis were only created for convenience of collection of revenue, I take it that the real question is simply whether there are actual sub-divisions of the village, not for what reason were the sub-divisions made.

As I can find no good reason for interfering with what seems to me a finding of fact, I dismiss this appeal. No order as to costs, as I have not gone fully into facts.

term, whether premature—'Payable' in s. 60, meaning of—Tender, failure to make, on due date, effect of.

A postponement of the right to redeem a usufructuary mortgage for a period of 37 years is not a clog on the equity of redemption. Section 62 of the Transfer of Property Act itself recognizes the validity of such covenants. [p. 381, col. 2.]

Sarbdawan Singh v. Bijai Singh, 24 Ind. Cas. 705; 36 A. 551; 12 A. L. J. 927, Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai, 22 Ind. Cas. 54; 38 M. 667; 26 M. L. J. 47; 14 M. L. T. 547; (1914) M. W. N. 81 and Chakkangal Govinda Menon v. Chakkangal Chathu Menon, 22 Ind. Cas. 907, distinguished.

Under the terms of a usufructuary mortgage executed in 1902 the property was put in possession of the mortgagees and it was stipulated that the mortgage amount should be worked off by applying the usufruct in discharge, firstly, of the principal, and secondly, of the interest. In that way the mortgage could be discharged after 37 years. There was another stipulation that if payment of what was then due was made on 12th January 1912 the property should be handed over to the mortgagor, but if such payment was not made the mortgagees' possession was to continue on the same terms as before. No payment was made on 12th January 1912 but a suit for redemption was brought in 1916:

Held, that the postponement of redemption for 37 years, which was the necessary result of the mortgage covenant, was not a clog on the equity of redemption. [p. 382, col. 2.]

Held, also, (Krishnan, J., dubitante), that the option to redeem on 12th January 1912 was not a personal covenant, but was a provision inserted for the mortgagor's benefit and the option not having been exercised on the due date, the suit for redemption brought before the expiry of the original term was premature. [p. 382, col. 1.]

Per Krishnan, J.—Even assuming that section 60 applies and not section 62 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, the suit must still fail as no tender was made on that day and as the right to make the tender or to redeem was not subsisting after that date or when the suit was brought. It is a necessary condition under section 60 that, when payment or tender is sought to be made, the mortgagor must have the right to make it, as the section speaks of the payment or tender of the mortgage money "at a proper time." For the time to be proper, the tender or payment must be one validly and properly made; and for that, the person making it must have at the time the legal right to make it. [p. 384, cols 1 & 2.]

The word 'payable' in section 60 seems to refer to the mortgagor's right rather than to his obligation and to imply no more than that the mortgagor should have a right to pay, the mortgagees being under a corresponding obligation to receive. [p. 384, col. 1.]

A covenant may be bad as a clog or it may be bad as an unconscionable bargain. The two are distinct and independent grounds. [p. 383, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Godavari at Rajahmundry, in Appeal Suit No. 232 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary District Munsif, Ramashandrapuram at Cocanada, in Original Suit No. 87 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. Narasimha Row, for the Appellant.—The privilege to the mortgagor to redeem in January 1912 is a covenant for payment. The money became payable then within the meaning of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act. Therefore the mortgagor had the right to redeem after that date. Chakkangal Govinda Menon v. Chakkangal Chathu Menon (1).

The provision in the mortgage-deed for discharge of the mortgage by the appropriation of the usufruct amounts to a postponement of the right to redeem for 37 years. That is virtually a clog on the equity of redemption. Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai (2) and Sarbdawan Singh v. Bijai Singh (3). The stipulation that the rent is to be taken at Rs. 20 a year shows that the arrangement was an unconscionable one and plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to be relieved against it.

Mr. M. Pataniali Sastri (with him Mr. C. Rama Row), for the Respondents.—The suit is premature: Section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act cannot apply as there was no obligation on the mortgagor to pay in January 1912. The option to pay on that date is not a personal covenant. The right to redeem accrued on that day and, when it was not exercised, it did not subsist afterwards. The mortgagor is bound by the original covenant which, it was expressly stated in the mortgage deed, was to continue in force on default by the mortgagor of the exercise of the option to pay in 1912.

Covenants for redemption after long periods are commonly inserted in mortgage-deeds. They do not amount to a clog. In fact, there is a statutory recognition of the right in section 62 of the Transfer of Property Act.

There was nothing unconscionable in the stipulation for payment after 37 years. The covenant was express and the mortgagor was given the option to evade the restriction and to terminate the mortgage in 10 years. This he has failed to exercise and he has himself to blame for the consequences.

JUDGMENT.

PHILLIPS, J.—Plaintiff-appellant sued to redeem an usufructuary mortgage executed in 1902 (Exhibit B). Under that document the property was put in possession of the mortgagees, and it was stipulated that the mortgage amount should be worked off by applying the usufruct, Rs. 20 a year, in discharge, firstly, of the principal, and, secondly, of the interest. A calculation shows that the mortgage amount would be discharged in about 37 years. There is another stipulation that if payment of what is then due be made on 12th January 1912 the property should be handed over to the mortgagor, but if such payment were not made the mortgagees' possession was to continue on the same terms as before. The payment was not made on 12th January 1912 and this suit for redemption was brought in 1916 and has been dismissed as premature.

It is contended for appellant that the stipulation for payment in January, 1912 is a covenant for payment and that consequently the mortgagors are entitled to redeem as the time fixed for payment has expired. A perusal of the document shows that there is no personal covenant to pay and that the stipulation as to payment in 1912 is a provision inserted for the benefit of the mortgagors. They failed to avail themselves of the concession allowed and it is expressly stipulated that, in default, the original covenant is to continue in force. On this ground the appellant's contention cannot be supported.

It is next urged that the provision in the deed that the mortgagees are to remain in possession until the mortgage money is worked off is a clog on the equity of redemption, and that effect cannot be given to such a provision. In support of this proposition appellant's Counsel relies on three cases, Sarbdawan Singh v. Bijai Singh (3), Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai (2) and Chakkangal Govinda Menon v. Chakkangal Chathu Menon (1). The first of these cases laid down that the conditions fettering the equity of redemption in that particular case could not be enforced, but the learned Judges observed that it is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule as to what should and what should not be regarded as an improper restraint on the right of redemption. In Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai (2) a stipulation that the mortgage was to work itself out as a sale for the principal amount, if the mortgage amount was not paid on the stipulated date, was held to be unenforceable and that the right of redemption remained. The same two Judges in Chakkangal Govinda Menon v. Chakkangal Chathu Menon (1) held that a stipulation that the property should only be redeemed during certain months of each year was unenforceable but in that case also there was a personal covenant to pay and the provisions of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882) applied. On the other hand, postponement of redemption for long periods has been allowed by the Courts e.g., 23 years in Rambaran Singh v. Ramker Singh (4), 58 years in Ram Prasad v. Jagrup (5) and 59 years in Dulari v. Lal Bahadur Singh (6). Apart from the question of whether the onerous nature of the restriction is such as to justify a Court in refusing to enforce it, there is in this case a further point in respondents' favour, i.e., that a covenant for the mortgage money to be worked out by the usufruct is one that is not uncommon in this country and the validity of such a covenant has been recognised in Tirugnana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi v. Nallatambi (7) and Gunnam Dorayya v. Vadapalli Ayyamacharyulu (8). In the latter case, to which one of the Judges in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai (2) was a party, it was expressly laid down that such a covenant is not illegal according to the Indian Law. In fact such a covenant is expressly recognized in section 62, Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). The contention that the provisions of section 60 of that Act must be read apart from section 62 and that the right to redeem accrues when the money has become payable does not help the appellant, for it was held in Tirugnana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi v. Nallatambi (7) that in a mortgage like the present redemption could not be sought before the mortgage was worked out, applying the general principle that the right to redeem and the right to foreclosure are usually co-extensive. It was held in Husaini Begam v. Collector of Cawnpore (9) that the principal money only becomes payable when the payment becomes obligatory on the mortgagor. That this construction is right, in so far as the obligation refers to a debt being payable, would appear from the fact that in a mortgage there may be no personal liability on the part of the borrower, although prima facie a loan involves a personal liability [vide Ran Narayan Singh v. Adhindra Nath Mukerji (10)] and if there is no personal covenant, there is no liability to pay and the money has not become payable. The conditions of the suit contract are such that no personal liability arises, and, therefore, it cannot be said, as contended before us, that the money had become payable as soon as the contract was signed. In this particular case the money cannot become payable as there is no personal covenant to pay; section 62 of the Transfer of Property Act must be applied and the mortgagors are only entitled to recover possession when the money is paid according to the terms of the contract. I may refer also to the decision of the Privy Council in Bakhtawar Begam v. Husaini Khanam (11), where it was held that the right to recover possession accrued when the mortgage debt was actually satisfied. I do not think this view of mine is opposed to Rose Ammal v. Raja- rathnam (12), as in that case there was a personal covenant to pay. I would, therefore, hold that the plaintiff's suit is premature.

If it were necessary to decide whether the restriction on redemption is so onerous that effect should not be given to it, I would express my opinion that it is not. The parties entered into the contract with open eyes and the mortgagors were given an opportunity of evading the restriction, but failed to take advantage of it. I can see no reason why they should be given a further equitable relief. I would, therefore, dismiss this second appeal with costs of 1st respondent.

KRISHNAN, J.—I agree with my learned brother that this second appeal fails. The language of the mortgage-deed is too plain to admit of any reasonable doubt that the dominant intention of the parties was that the mortgage amount and interest were to be worked off by the usufruct of the property which was agreed to be taken at Rs. 20 a year, the property being retained in the mortgagees' possession for the requisite number of years to enable that to be done. An option is no doubt given to the mortgagors to pay the amount due on the 12th January 1912, but the document provides that if the money is not so paid, the "discharge is to take place only as aforesaid," that is, by the appropriation of the rent. The mortgagors, having failed to pay under that option, have lost their right to take advantage of it and their suit can succeed only if they have a right to redeem their mortgage by payment, in spite of the special stipulation to let the mortgagees remain in possession till the mortgage amount and interest are worked off by the usufruct. Admittedly the mortgage amount has not been so worked off yet. In fact a calculation shows that it requires $17\frac{1}{2}$ years to pay off the principal which has to be first paid under the terms of the document, and another 18 or 19 years to pay off the accumulated interest.

The learned Advocate for the mortgagors' assignee, who is the appellant before us, urged that, on the construction of the document itself, the mortgagors were entitled to re-pay the mortgage amount due at any time after the 12th January 1912 as they pleased. I agree that this contention is untenable on the language of the document. He then argued that the covenant was a clog on the equity of redemption and should be treated as invalid and that it was no hinderance to the mortgagors' claim to redeem. It is impossible to argue that an express covenant between the parties that redemption shall take place only at the end of a given term should be ignored or set aside as a clog on the equity of redemption if that covenant is otherwise valid, in the face of the rulings in Sri Raja Setrucherla Ramabhadra Raju Bahadur v. Sri Raja Vairicherla Surianarayana Raju Bahadur (13), Tirugnana Sambandha Pandara Sanadhi v. Nallatambi (7), Rose Ammal v. Rajarathnam (12) and Gunnam Dorayya v. Vadapalli Ayyamacharyulu (8). Section 62 of the Transfer of Property Act itself recognizes the validity of such covenants.

The learned Advocate, however, relied on the rulings in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai (2) and Sarbdawan Singh v. Bijai Singh (3) as authorities in favour of his argument. In the Madras case the covenant was one whose effect was to put an end to the mortgage itself, the property being treated as sold; and clearly that covenant was an absolute clog on the equity of redemption. In the present case we have only a postponement of the right to redeem for a period. In the Allahabad case, it was no doubt ruled that a postponement of the right to redeem may itself be a clog if it amounts to an unconscionable bargain. A covenant may be bad as a clog or it may be bad as an unconscionable bargain; the two are distinct and independent grounds, and it seems to me that it will lead to confusion of thought to mix them up. Assuming that a covenant to postpone redemption may be refused to be enforced if it is an unconscionable bargain, it is of no use to the appellant, as here the question of the nature of the bargain was not raised or discussed in the lower Courts and no evidence seems to have been given of it. The appellant relies on the facts that the period fixed is about 37 years and that the rent is to be taken at Rs. 20 a year for the whole period, as showing that the arrangement was an unconscionable one. We do not know if the fixing of the rent was not more to the advantage of the mortgagors than that of the mortgagees, as no evidence has been given on the point.

As for the length of the period I am not able to say that it is enough in the present case to justify, by itself, an inference that the bargain was an unconscionable one. My learned brother has referred to cases where periods ranging from 28 to 59 years have been allowed. Furthermore, the mortgagors had the option to terminate the period in 10 years and their failure to do so is their own fault. The covenant in this case cannot, therefore, be set aside on the ground of its being an unconscionable one.

The last argument urged by the learned Advocate was that under section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, if during the continuance of a mortgage the mortgage money becomes payable even for a day, the mortgagor at once got a right to redeem, which he could enforce at any time thereafter even though there was a covenant against it. He cited the case of Chakkangal Govinda Menon v. Chakkangal Chathu Menon (1) as an authority for this proposition, which he contended was applicable to the present case as the mortgage money was payable at any rate on 12th January 1912, if not afterwards. This argument seems to me to be very curious. It is based on the words "at any time after the principal money has become payable" in section 60 of the Act. The respondents' Vakil has tried to meet this argument by urging that the word "payable" in the section applies only when there is an obligation on the mortgagor to pay, which the mortgagee can enforce against him; although I think it is not necessary for me to decide the point as, in my view, the appellant's argument fails on another ground as stated below, I wish to guard myself against being understood as adopting this view. It seems to me to be opposed to the view expressed in Rose Ammal v. Rajarathanam (12), where (13) 2 M. 314; 4 Ind. Jur. 500; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 489.

JIWAN DAS v. PIRAN DITTA.

Mr. Justice Shephard held that money might become payable by the mortgagor even though payment could not be enforced by the mortgagee. The reasons given in that case seem to me to have considerable force. Where a mortgagor stipulates with the mortgagee that, though he should not be called upon for payment for a given time, he should have the option to pay and redeem the mortgage during that time, it appears to me to be difficult to apply the doctrine of the co-extensiveness of the right to redeem and right to foreclose to this case and to refuse to him the very right to redeem that he has stipulated for, on the ground that the mortgagee could not sue him for money seems unreasonable; and a construction of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, which leads to that result seems to be of doubtful correctness. If, in this very case, for example the mortgage money had been tendered on the 12th January 1912 and had been refused by the mortgagee, the mortgagor's suit to compel acceptance and to redeem could hardly have been rejected and yet the view put forward will necessitate that result. The word 'payable' in section 60 seems to refer to the mortgagor's right rather than to his obligation and to imply no more than that the mortgagor should have a right to pay, the mortgagee being under a corresponding obligation to receive; the existence of a right in the mortgagee to enforce payment does not appear to me to be really necessary to make the word applicable. I do not, however, wish to pursue the matter further or give a final opinion on it, for I consider that even assuming section 60 applies and not section 62, clause (a), and that money was payable on the 12th January 1912, the appellant must still fail as no tender was made on that day and as the right to do so and redeem was not subsisting after that date or when the suit was brought. I think that it is a necessary condition under section 60 that when payment or tender is sought to be made the mortgagor must have the right to make it, as the section speaks of the payment or tender of the mortgage money "at a proper time." For the time to be proper, the tender or payment must be one validly and properly made; and for that, the person making it must have at the time the legal right to make it.

I do not consider the ruling in Ohankkangal Govinda Menon v. Ohakkangal Chathu Menon (1) to be against this view. That decision seems to have proceeded on the ground that after the due date in 1899 the mortgage money was always payable, the arrangement referred to therein apparently not affecting it or the right to sue but only fixing a time for redemption and delivery of possession. It is, therefore, clearly distinguishable. I do not regard it as an authority for the proposition the appellant contends for.

As the appellant's arguments have all failed, his second appeal must be dismissed with costs of 1st respondent.

Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887), ss. 48, 158 (1)—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Jagirdar, suit by, for declaration that he is entitled to receive land revenue in kind, maintainability of.

The plaintiff, a jagirdar or assignee of the land revenue of a village, sued the proprietors and tenants of the village for a declaration that he was entitled to recover one-fourth share of every kind of produce of the lands in the village and Rs. 2 per annum per well as malikana from the tenants and that the proprietors were only entitled to a one-fifth share out of it and had no right to interfere with the realisation by the plaintiff of the said share of the produce:

Held, that the suit as laid involved the question whether in the village in dispute land revenue should be paid to the jagirdar in cash or in kind, and that, therefore, it was not cognisable by a Civil Court, the matter being one which under section 48 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act only the Local Government could decide. [p. 385, col. 2.]

JIVAN DAS v. PIRAN DITTA.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 16th February 1917.

Mr. Moti Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdur Rashid and Sheikh Gulab Din, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for decision in this first appeal is whether the plaintiff's suit is cognizable by a Civil Court or not. The Subordinate Judge has answered this question in the negative, and has dismissed the suit on the ground of want of jurisdiction. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

The substance of the plaint, which is very prolix, has been given in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff, who is mahant of a dharamsala in Sheikhpura, claims to be jagirdar or assignee of land revenue of a neighbouring village called Qilla Sahib Singh, the jagir being created in Sikh times for the maintenance of the above mentioned dharamsala. The jagir was granted in perpetuity "to enjoy the revenue thereof for the time being" conditional upon the good behaviour of the mahant. In this suit the plaintiff has impleaded as defendants 29 proprietors of the village and about 47 tenants, and he alleges, inter alia, that he has always been realising direct from the tenants one-fourth of the produce of the village lands out of which he has been giving one-fifth to the proprietors; and he has brought the present suit for a declaration that he as adna malik and jagirdar of Qilla Sahib Singh is entitled to recover one-fourth share of every kind of produce of the lands in the village and Rs. 2 per anrum per well as malikana from the tenants and that the proprietors are only entitled to one-fifth share out of it and have no right to interfere with the realization by the plaintiff of the said share of the produce.

It is clear from the allegations in the plaint that there is no dispute between the plaintiff and such of the defendants as are proprietors in the village regarding the status of the plaintiff; in other words, no question arises in this case as to whether the plaintiff is an adna malik or not. The gist of his claim is for a declaration that he as jagirdar or assignee of land revenue is entitled to receive the revenue in kind out of the landlords' share of the produce which has to be paid by the tenants to the proprietors but which, as a matter of fact, has always been paid to him by the cultivators in the shape of one-fourth of the produce. Out of this he has been paying one-fifth share to the proprietors and has been appropriating the rest in his capacity of assignee of land revenue. The suit as laid, therefore, involves the question as to whether in the village of Qilla Sahib Singh land revenue should be paid to the jagirdar in cash or in kind; and under section 48 of the Land Revenue Act, this matter is one which only the Local Government can decide, and under section 158 (1) of the Act no Civil Court can exercise jurisdiction in respect of it. The Subordinate Judge was, therefore, right in holding that the suit as laid was not cognizable by a Civil Court.

But it has been urged by the plaintiff-appellant's Pleader, on the strength of Rahmun v. Hasham (1), that since the suit is one for a declaration under section 45 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, it is exclusively cognizable by a Civil Court. The decision cited is a Single Bench decision and is opposed to an earlier decision of Mr. Justice Rivaz in Bahadur Khan v. Sardar (2) and also to a Division Bench ruling of this Court in a case printed as a footnote to 95 P. R. 1907 [Shahya v. Karmi Khan (3)]. In the last mentioned case the learned Judges of this Court approved of Bahadur Khan v. Sardar (2) and said: "It does not follow that because a Civil Court can entertain a declaratory suit in regard to title as entered in the Record of Rights, it will, therefore, have jurisdiction in declaratory suits of a different nature, covering matters specifically referred to in section 17 of the Tenancy Act." We entirely approve of this ruling, and hold that although the suit is one for a declaration, in view of the nature of the relief asked for by the plaintiff, it is excepted from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts by reason of the provisions of the Land Revenue Act above referred to.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

EXECUTION OF DECREE APPEAL No. 44 of 1917.

April 23, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Lindsay, J. C.

PARMESHAR DIN—APPLICANT—

versus

DEBI PRASAD—DECREE-HOLDER—

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. XXI, rr. 55, 58, 60, 63—Res judicata—Finding not necessary for decision of suit, whether res judicata—Execution of decree—Attachment, withdrawal and revival of—Objection allowed—Declaration, suit for, by decree-holder, decree in, effect of—Decree reversed in appeal, but restored in second appeal—Attachment, whether revived.

Where it appears from the judgment of a Court that the real ground of decision is a particular finding which alone is sufficient for the disposal of the case, and that it has given other findings as well which are not necessary for the decision of the suit, the former finding is the only finding which operates as res judicata, especially when it is found that the judgment has been appealed from and that the Appellate Court has taken into consideration that finding alone. [p. 388, col. 1.]

Where an execution Court allowed an objection under Order XXI, rule 58, Civil Procedure Code, and referred the unsuccessful decree-holder to a regular suit, but did not pass any order under Order XXI, rule 60, of the Code raising the attachment, and the decree-holder thereafter filed a declaratory suit and obtained a decree in his favour:

Held, that in view of the provisions of Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, the result of the decree passed in the declaratory suit was to revive the attachment which had been previously carried out, even if it be assumed that the legal effect of allowing the objection had been to raise the attachment. [p. 388, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the decree of a Court of first instance is reversed in first appeal but restored in second appeal, the result of the decision in second appeal is to revive the attachment which, under the provisions of Order, XXI, rule 55, Civil Procedure Code, is deemed to have been withdrawn in consequence of the decision in first appeal. Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 16th September 1917, upholding that of the Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated the 27th July 1917.

Chaudhri Ram Bharios Lal holding brief of Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision in this appeal is whether or not an application for execution of a decree made by the decree-holder respondent on the 30th of August 1916 is maintainable and whether it is barred by the rule of limitation.

The facts of the case must be set out at some little length. In the year 1904 a mortgage of a share of 1 anna in a village called Dahua was executed by one Sheo Narain in favour of the present respondent Debi Prasad. Sheo Narain was the brother of the present appellant Parmeshar Din and died in the year 1910.

After the mortgage had been executed, a suit was brought by other members of the family of Sheo Narain for cancellation of the deed of mortgage on the ground that the property mortgaged was joint family property which Sheo Narain had no power to encumber. This suit was decreed in February 1905. The decision was upheld in appeal. Subsequently Debi Prasad brought a suit against Sheo Narain for return of the mortgage money and obtained a simple money decree against him on the 18th of January 1909 for a sum of Rs. 1,680 odd. It is this decree which Debi Prasad is now attempting to execute.

Having got this money-decree, Debi Prasad proceeded to attach a 2-annas share in Mauza Dahua for the purpose of obtaining satisfaction in the execution department; and it is admitted that an attachment of this share was actually made at the end of May 1909. An objection was thereupon made to the attachment by two persons, namely, the present appellant Parmeshar Din and his uncle Gaya Prasad. They alleged that the 2-annas share attached was no longer the property of the judgment debtor. It was stated that a 1-anna 4-pie share had been relinquished by Sheo Narain in favour of Gaya Prasad. As regards the balance of an 8-pies share the case set up was that another brother of the judgment debtor, named Sitla Din, had made an oral bequest of this share in favour of Parmeshar Din. These objections were allowed on the 19th of June 1909 and by an order of the executing Court the decree-holder was referred to a regular suit. No order was passed at the time raising the attachment which had already been carried out.

The declaratory suit having been filed, a decree was passed in favour of Debi Prasad in April 1910 declaring that the 2-annas share which had been attached was liable to be taken in execution of the money decree. The Court held that the deed of relinquishment set up by Gaya Prasad and the oral bequest which was put forward by Parmeshar Din were not established. The opinion of the Court was that these transactions were wholly fictitious and collusive transactions, and that the property had never in fact passed out of Sheo Narain's hands. This decree was upheld in appeal by the learned District Judge of Gonda on the 1st of June 1910 and his judgment was allowed to become final.

Meantime the decree of January 1909 which was passed in favour of Debi Prasad against Sheo Narain was reversed in appeal by the District Judge of Gonda in the month of May 1910. Subsequently in an appeal made to this Court the decree of the first Court was restored by a judgment dated the 24th of August 1911. On the 22nd of August 1914 the decree-holder having got his money decree affirmed by the decision of this Court made an application for execution, a copy of which is Exhibit A-7. In this the whole of the facts were set out. The decree-holder informed the Court that his money-decree had been affirmed. He also mentioned in his application that the declaratory suit regarding the liability of the 2-annas share (which had been attached) to be taken in execution had been decided in his favour. He requested the Court to issue a notice under Order XXI, rule 22, to Musammam Ram Dei as being the widow and legal representative of Sheo Narain who had died meantime. A further prayer was that after the notice had been issued an order for sale should be made with reference to the provisions of Order XXI, rule 66. This application remained pending for a considerable time and was dismissed on the 6th of February 1915 for want of prosecution on the part of the decree-holder.

Another application was made on the 14th of June 1915, in which the decree-holder again asked for sale of the 2 annas share. In this application it was mentioned that the share was still under attachment, no order having been passed declaring that the attachment had been raised.

It was prayed, however, that, if for any reason the Court were of opinion that the previous attachment was not still subsisting, an order for attachment might be made preliminary to the order for sale. On the 13th of June 1916 this application was consigned to records on a joint application of the parties. It was represented to the Court that the parties were about to enter into a compromise.

Finally we come to the present application which, as I have already stated, is dated the 30th of August 1916. Musammam Ram Dei having died meanwhile, the present appellant Parmeshar Din has been impleaded as her legal representative on the allegation that the property which Sheo Narain held and which came to his widow for the period of her life has passed by inheritance to Parmeshar Din. I may also mention here that the decree of this Court dated the 24th of August 1911 was amended on the 19th of March 1915, it being declared that Debi Prasad would only be entitled to take out execution against such of the assets of Sheo Narain as had come to the hands of his legal representative Musammam Ram Dei, who was at that time alive.

Now that the present application for execution has been made, it has been resisted on a variety of grounds by the present appellant. Both the Courts below have dismissed his objections and held that the execution of the decree can proceed. The first plea taken by Parmeshar Din was that as a matter of fact he and Sheo Narain had continued to be members of a joint family until the time of the latter's death. Upon this point both the Courts below have decided against the objector. They have held, and there is, in my opinion, ample evidence to support the finding, that at the time of Sheo Narain's death he was separate in estate from his brothers. It has been sought to be argued here that this finding of the Court below is wrong in law, the ground taken being that in the declaratory suit which was decided finally by the order of the District Judge dated the 1st of June 1910 it was held that Sheo Narain and his brothers were at that time members of a joint Hindu family. There is indeed in the judgment of the first Court which dealt with that suit a statement to this effect. It appears, however, from the judgment that the real ground of decision was that the transfers which were pleaded in that suit both by Gaya Prasad and Parmeshar Din were held to be fictitious and fraudulent. That finding was sufficient for the disposal of the case; and it seems to me that any statement or finding in the Subordinate Judge's judgment to the effect that the family was joint was not necessary for the decision of the suit and consequently cannot operate now as res judicata. In this connection it is further to be observed that the judgment which must be looked to for this purpose, is not the judgment of the Subordinate Judge but the judgment of the District Judge, which was delivered on the 1st of June 1910. There the learned Judge came to a distinct finding that the transfers pleaded by Gaya Prasad and Parmeshar Din were fictitious; and it was upon this ground that it was held that the 2-annas share was liable to be taken in execution of Debi Prasad's decree. This point, however, is really one of minor importance. The principal matter to be decided now is whether or not the attachment of this 2-annas share, which was made in the month of May 1909, ceased at any time to subsist between the date upon which it was made and the 22nd of August 1914 when an application was made for execution. If it be found that the attachment was never removed, then it does not matter whether Sheo Narain died as a member of the joint family or whether he was separate in estate at the time of his death.

To come now to this principal question, the first argument which has been addressed to me in this connection is that the attachment ceased to remain in force when the objections of Gaya Prasad and Parmeshar Din to the execution were allowed on the 19th of June 1909. I have already stated that when these objections were accepted no order was passed removing the attachment. The appellant, however, relies upon the provisions of Order XXI, rule 60, and contends that the effect in law of allowing the objections was to release the property from attachment. This argument cannot, I think, be accepted, for it appears to me from the provisions of Order XXI, rule 63, that any order which could have been passed under rule 60 for the release from attachment would have been subject to the result of the declaratory suit which was brought thereafter. In my opinion as soon as the decree-holder Debi Prasad obtained a declaration in his favour that the property was liable to be taken in execution, the attachment which had been previously carried out was revived. If any authority is needed for this opinion it will be found in the case reported as Ram Chandra Marwari v. Mudeswar Singh (1).

The next point argued is with reference to the provisions of Order XXI, rule 55. This rule lays down that where the decree is set aside or reversed, the attachment shall be deemed to be withdrawn. It also provides for a proclamation announcing the withdrawal of the attachment being made on application made by the judgment-debtor. No such application appears to have been made in the present case. I have already mentioned that the money-decree which Debi Prasad obtained on the 18th of January 1909 was reversed on the first appeal on the 18th of May 1910, and it may be argued on the language of rule 55 that the result of this decree was that the attachment made in the year 1909 must be deemed to have been withdrawn. The further fact remains, however, that the decree of the District Judge which produced this effect was in its turn reversed by a decree of this Court; and it is, therefore, to be considered what was the result of the lower Appellate Court's decree having been reversed in second appeal. There is no direct provision of the law on this subject laying down that the result of such a reversal would be the revival of the attachment which, under the provisions of the rule, is deemed to have been withdrawn. But upon principle it appears to me that there is no reason why such a result should not ensue when the decree of an Appellate Court is reversed by this Court. I may refer here to the provisions of section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which lays down the principle that the result of a variation or reversal of a decree of the first Court is to place the parties in the status ante quo, and the section provides that an order for restitution can be made by the Court of first instance on an application made for that purpose by the party entitled. It could not, I think, be denied that if, after this Court by its decree dated the 24th of August 1911 had restored the decree of the Court of first instance, the decree-holder had made an application to the first Court for restoration of the attachment, that application must necessarily have been allowed. There is not in terms any application to that effect made by Debi Prasad; but I have pointed out that in his application for execution dated the 22nd of August 1914, the decree-holder represented all the facts to the Court; and so far as I can see, the Court proceeded with that application on the footing that the attachment was still subsisting. I think that in the circumstances I am entitled to treat this application of the 22nd of August 1914 as being tantamount to an application to the Court to hold that the attachment previously made was still in existence. I hold, therefore, that the appellant is not entitled to succeed upon the plea based upon the provisions of Order XXI, rule 55. The consequence is that if it be held that the attachment still subsisted on the 22nd of August 1914, it must be taken as having been still subsisting when the present application of the 30th of August 1916 was made; for in the interval there has been no order of a competent Court to declare that the attachment has been raised. The Courts below were of the same opinion and I agree with them in thinking that the appellant is not entitled to succeed on the ground that the present application for sale of the property is not maintainable on the ground that no attachment was subsisting at the time the application was presented.

(1) 33 C. 1158.

PARMESHAR DIN V. DEBI PRASAD.

It has been conceded that if the Court holds that the attachment continued to remain in force from May 1909 till the date of the present application, then the appellant is not in a position to contend that, even if it were shown that Sheo Narain died as a member of a joint family, the attachment would not take effect and prevail over the passing of the property to the appellant by the rule of survivorship.

Lastly there is the question of limitation. The appellant seeks to defeat the present application by pleading that it has been made more than three years after the date upon which the obstacle in the way of the decree-holder's proceeding with execution was removed. For this purpose the learned Counsel for the appellant relies upon the judgment of the District Judge dated the 1st of June 1910, in which it was held that Debi Prasad was entitled to bring this 2-annas share to execution for the purpose of satisfying his decree. Obviously this argument is not sustainable for, as has been pointed out, there was another obstacle in the way of the decree-holder, namely, that his simple money decree which he obtained in January 1909 had been reversed in appeal in May 1910. It was not till the 24th of August 1911, when this Court delivered its judgment, that Debi Prasad's right to this money decree was finally established; and so, although in June 1910 the right of Debi Prasad to bring this property to sale in execution was declared, the declaration availed him nothing so long as the money decree which he had obtained and which he was seeking to execute continued to be set aside by virtue of the appellate order of the 18th May 1916. It was only when this Court after reversing the lower Appellate Court's decree finally decided that Debi Prasad was entitled to this money that the last obstacle to the execution was removed from his path. If, as the learned Counsel for the appellant argues, limitation for an application in execution is to run from the date when the obstacle to execution of the decree is removed, then it is clear that Debi Prasad had three years from the 24th of August 1911 to apply to the executing Court. It is admitted that he made his application on the 22nd of August 1914 within three years from that date.

I have now dealt with all the questions which are raised in the memorandum of second appeal. In my opinion the pleas which are raised on behalf of the appellant must fail and I decide them against him. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 17, 50—Vendee claiming under unregistered deed, position of—Vendee under subsequent registered deed, whether can eject prior vendee.

The possession of a vendee who claims title under a sale-deed which for want of registration is inadmissible in evidence, is that of a trespasser, and until such possession matures into ownership by prescription, such vendee is liable to be ejected from the property by a subsequent vendee under a registered deed of sale.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jhang, at Sargodha, dated the 4th August 1917.

Messrs. Oertel, Brij Lal and Devi Dayal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Morton and Anant Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are very fully given in the judgment of the learned District Judge and it is unnecessary for me to repeat them here. The District Judge was inclined to hold that the writing, dated the 5th April 1910, contained in Janji Ram's bahi amounted to a written contract of sale of the house in dispute for Rs. 250 and was, therefore, compulsorily registrable, and being unregistered was inadmissible in evidence. But he did not feel called upon to decide this point finally, as he was of opinion that Janji Ram's possession at the time of the sale on which the plaintiff relied had not been proved to be wrongful and that the plaintiff had failed to show that his title to the house, which was alleged to be derived from the original owner Fattah Sher, was better than that of Janji Ram. Upon that ground alone, the District Judge has dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

I am of opinion that the view taken by the District Judge is erroneous and his judgment and decree must be set aside. Janji Ram in his written statement clearly relied upon the sale of the house by Fattah Sher to him on the 5th of April 1910 for Rs. 250 as the origin of his title to the same; that title he is unable to substantiate because the writing embodying the contract of sale on which he relied cannot be admitted in evidence, and no oral evidence can be given by him to prove the alleged sale in his favour. But it does not follow that because Janji Ram is now in possession of the house, his possession must be presumed to be that of an owner with a title superior to that of the plaintiff to whom the house was admittedly sold in December 1914 by Fattah Sher, who is also admittedly the vendor of Janji Ram. As noted above, Janji Ram's title originated in the alleged sale to him by Fattah Sher in April 1910; the origin of his title being thus definitely known, it cannot be presumed that because he, is now in possession of the house it originated otherwise than in the said sale. As he is unable to prove his title because of the non-registration of the writing on which he relies as evidence of the sale in his favour, his possession is clearly that of a trespasser [Mangalasamy Devar v. Subbiah Pillay (1) and Uttam Singh v. Basanta (2)]; and since his possession has lasted for a period of about four years only, it has not matured into ownership by prescription, and he cannot, therefore, resist the suit of the plaintiff who rightfully claims, as is admitted by the original owner Fattah Sher, under the latter. I accept the appeal and setting aside the judgment and the decree of the District Judge restore that of the Munsif with costs throughout.

Orissa Land Law—Khurdah Estate—Sarbarakars—
Sarbarakari jagirs, whether heritable and transferable.

Sarbarakars of the Khurdah Estate in Orissa have no heritable or transferable right in the office of sarbarakar or in the jagirs held by them as sarbarakars. They are liable to be dismissed for misconduct, and on such dismissal lose all right to occupy the sarbarakari jagirs. On the termination of a settlement they are bound to enter into a fresh engagement with Government (or with the grantee, when Government has made a grant), otherwise they lose their office. [p. 394, col. 2; p. 395, col. 1.]

In 1861 Government granted certain Mouzas in Khurdah revenue-free, but subject to the engagement of the then sarbarakar (defendant's father) with themselves for the settlement period then current. On the completion of a fresh settlement in 1893 the defendant, who had succeeded his father as sarbarakar, was called on by the grantee to execute the usual ekrarnama, but refused to do so. He set up a claim that he was a tenure-holder, and misappropriated the rents which he collected. Plaintiffs thereupon dismissed him and brought a suit to recover the sarbarakari chakran lands in his possession:

Held, that defendant was not a tenure-holder, that his position under the grantee was the same as that of a sarbarakar under Government, that he had been rightly dismissed, and that plaintiffs were entitled to eject him from the sarbarakari jagirs. [p. 395, col. 1.]

Appeal from two decrees of the Calcutta High Court, dated the 4th June 1913, reported as 22 Ind. Cas. 359, modifying a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Cuttack, dated the 22nd March 1909.

FACTS—Plaintiffs-appellants sued on the allegations that they were proprietors of certain Mouzas in Orissa formerly part of the Khurdah Khas Mahals, which were granted them in 1861 subject to the engagement with Government of the then Sarbarakar: that defendant No. 1, who had succeeded to his father as Sarbarakar since that date, was merely an office-holder and was liable to dismissal for misconduct during the currency of a settlement and had no right of renewal of his appointment at the end of a settlement; that in 1899, when a new settlement was made, he refused to comply with their demand to execute a Kabuliyat as Sarbarakar, that they dismissed him, but that he claimed to be a tenure-holder and collected rents from the tenants and misappropriated them. They prayed that he be ejected.

First defendant contended that he and his ancestors were tenure-holders not liable to dismissal or summary ejectment.

The Subordinate Judge held that plaintiffs were proprietors of the villages in suit, that first defendant was not a tenure-holder and was liable to dismissal and had been rightly dismissed. He decreed the suit. On appeal the Calcutta High Court (Chitty and Teunon, JJ.) reversed this decision and dismissed the suit, holding that first defendant was a tenure-holder. Hence this appeal.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. C., and Parikh, for the Appellants.—There are concurrent findings that plaintiffs are owners of the villages in suit. The onus lies on defendant No. 1 to prove he is a tenure-holder thereof. In the Record of Rights prepared during the last settlement he is not shown as a tenure-holder. He admits he knew this, and says he applied to be recorded as a tenure-holder but never learnt the result. The presumption is that he is not a tenure-holder: Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885 (Act VIII of 1885), sections 101, 102, 103, 103A. He is a Sarbarakar and his position is the same as that of a Sarbarakar in the Khas Mahal. He was liable to dismissal for misconduct and was bound to execute a fresh Kabuliyat on completion of the last settlement in 1899. He was not entitled as of right to a renewal of his appointment, nor was he entitled to collect rents from the tenants. The plaintiffs were justified in dismissing him. JUDGMENT.

SIR JOHN ELGE.—This is an appeal against two decrees, dated the 4th June 1913, of the High Court at Calcutta, which modified a decree, dated the 22nd March 1909, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack.

The suit in which this appeal has arisen was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack by the appellants on the 5th October 1907.

The plaintiffs, who are the appellants here, claim to be, with the defendants Lakimani Ama and Bhagabat Deb Thakur, proprietors of revenue-free lands in Orissa. Kripasindhu Roy, who will be in this judgment referred to as the first defendant, is the principal defendant. The plaintiffs claim a declaration that the lands in dispute in this suit are their free behali lands held and enjoyed by the plaintiffs and the defendants Lakimani Ama and Bhagabat Deb Thakur; a declaration that except the share of 11 gandas 3 karas 7 dantis 10 biswas 9 gandas 1 kara of the Darpanarayan Math purchased by the first defendant, he has no right to the share of 15 annas 8 gandas 1 danti 5 biswas 10 gandas 3 karas of the lands in dispute; a declaration that 57.892 acres of land mentioned in schedule (Kha) of the plaint is the Sarbarakari Chakran Jagir land appertaining to the properties in suit, and that the first defendant has no right of occupancy in 30.045 acres of land mentioned in schedule (Kha); a decree of ejectment against him from the disputed lands mentioned in schedules (Ka) and (Kha); mesne profits; an account of moneys received by him as Sarbarakar from 1306 to 1308 Fasli; and any other relief to which the plaintiffs might be found to be entitled.

It was alleged in the plaint that the first defendant held the lands from which it was sought to eject him by virtue of his office as a Sarbarakar in the service of the plaintiffs and their co-sharers, who are Mathdharis, to whom or their predecessors the Government had granted in 1861 five Mouzahs of Garh Atiri in Khurda revenue free, in lieu of an annual allowance of salt theretofore made by the Government to the Mathdharis. The five Mouzahs were Bande, Koranga, Sardhapore, Atiri and Chutipalang. It was alleged by the plaintiffs that it was the duty of the first defendant as Sarbarakar to collect the rents due from occupiers of lands of the plaintiffs, to account for moneys received by him as the Mathdharis' Sarbarakar and for disbursements, and that he was liable to dismissal from his office for misconduct. It was also alleged by the plaintiffs that the first defendant, in right of his office of Sarbarakar, was entitled to apply to his own use 20 per cent. of the rents received by him from the lands of the Mathdharis, and to hold certain revenue-free grants of land known as Sarbarakari Jagirs. Some of the Sarbarakari Jagir lands which were held by the first defendant as a Sarbarakar of the Mathdharis were in Mouzah Bande, which had been granted to the Mathdharis by the Government in 1861, other Sarbarakari Jagir lands which were held by him as Sarbarakar of the Mathdharis were in Mouzah Panasabasta, which had not been granted to the Mathdharis. It was alleged in the plaint that after the Settlement which was completed in 1899 the first defendant, having been called upon by the Mathdharis to execute an Ekrarnama as Sarbarakar and directed by the Mathdharis to collect as their Sarbarakar the newly assessed rents of their lands, and to pay the same to the Mathdharis, did not execute the customary Ekrarnama and assuming to be himself the proprietor of the Mathdhari lands collected rents from the tenants of those lands and misappropriated the same, and that in consequence of such misconduct the Mathdharis dismissed him from his office of Sarbarakar. It was also alleged in the plaint that the first defendant had dispossessed the plaintiffs.

By his written statement the first defendant denied all the material averments contained in the plaint; he denied the title of the plaintiffs, and alleged that the plaintiffs' claim was false and fraudulent, and that he was a tenure-holder of the lands of the Mouzahs from which the plaintiffs sought to eject him and held the Jagir lands in his own right, and denied that he was liable to dismissal from his office of Sarbarakar.

The Subordinate Judge of Cuttack found on the evidence that the first defendant was not a tenure-holder of the Mouzabs in suit; that he was a Sarbarakar liable to be dismissed from his office for misconduct, and that by his acts he had dispossessed the Mathdharis, and had been dismissed from his office of Sarbarakar; that 30'045 acres of the 57'892 acres mentioned in schedule (Ga) of the plaint were Raiyati lands, and that 27'847 acres, remainder of the 57'892 acres, were Sarbarakari Jagir lands which were liable to resumption on the dismissal of the first defendant from his office of Sarbarakar. The Subordinate Judge found that 19'677 acres of the 27'847 acres were in Mouzah Panasabasta. He dismissed the claim for an account as time-barred; he reserved the ascertainment of mesne profits; and he found that the plaintiffs were entitled to a declaration of their revenue-fee title to the Mouzabs in dispute. The Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiffs a decree declaring their proprietary right to the share which they claimed in the Mouzabs in dispute; decreed that the plaintiffs and the defendants on whose behalf they claimed should be jointly put in Khas possession of those Mouzabs, with the exception of 30'045 acres, which he had found were Raiyati land, "if the defendant No. 1 (the first defendant) as a Sarbarakar, as found in the judgment, do not in two months execute a Kabuliyat in their favour, agreeing to pay annually the sum total of the rents assessed on tenants as per khatians prepared during the last Settlement, deducting 20 per cent. thereon, minus the rent payable in respect of the Jagir land in his possession, for a term expiring with that of the present Settlement.....If the defendant No. 1 execute the Kabuliyat within the time allowed to him, the plaintiffs will not have Khas possession of the Mouzabs in suit."

From that decree the plaintiffs and the first defendant respectively appealed to the High Court at Calcutta.

As stated in the judgment of the High Court, the case of the plaintiffs as argued on the appeal was that the first defendant, his father and grandfather before him, were mere officers or servants, first of the Government, then of the Mathdharis, liable to dismissal for misconduct during the currency of a Settlement, and having no right to any renewal of their appointments at the close thereof.

"They, therefore, sued for the ejectment of defendant No. 1 (the first defendant) from the 2½ Mouzabs in suit and also from the Jagir lands recorded in villages Bande and Panasabasta."

As stated in that judgment the first defendant—"on the other hand, contends that he and his ancestors were and are tenure-holders, not liable to dismissal or summary ejectment, and that he held the Jagir lands in Bande and Panasabasta as Dalabehara, and not as Sarbarakar."

The learned Judges on the appeals considered historically the position of Sarbarakars in Khurdah, from the insurrection in 1817 of Jagabandhu Mahapatra, the hereditary Bukshi or commander of the forces to the Raja of Khurdah, down to the present time, and relied mainly for the information on which they acted on the "Selections from the correspondence on the Settlement of the Khurdah Estate, in the District of Puri" (Volume I published in 1879, Volume II published in 1881).

The Mouzabs which were in 1861 granted revenue free to the Mathdharis were in and prior to 1813 and thence until 1861 Khas Mahals in proprietary possession of the Government, by whom the Sarbarakars were appointed. It is not necessary for their Lordships to refer to all the reports and papers contained in the "Selections" to which their attention has been drawn at the hearing of this appeal. They will refer to those of them only which they consider to be the most important.

Mr. Forrester, who was the Deputy Collector in special charge of Khurdah in his report of the 17th October 1819, on the then Settlement, stated that he had in general admitted as Sarbarakars the persons who had entered into engagements, at the preceding Settlements, and had reverted to the rates fixed for the different classes of land in the different villages by Gholam Kadir in 1803, that the Sarbarakars were bound by their engagements to adhere to those rates, and not to charge more than 4 annas per man on new cultivation, and they had no proprietary right in their villages. ("Selections," Volume I, page 105.) Mr. Forrester also in his report referred to the general resumption of Jagir lands after the rebellion of Raja Mukunda Deo and his followers. The Governor-General in Council confirmed Mr. Forrester's Settlement, which was for a term of years.

Mr. Wilkinson, who had succeeded Mr. Forrester in charge of Khurdah, in a report of the 24th October 1833, on a Settlement which he had made, stated that he had — "taken from the old Sarbarakars engagements for the payment of the aggregate of the Raiyati rents, less 20 per cent. in lands and money, and that in this 20 per cent. he had included the assessed or estimated rents of the Jagirs reserved for Delabeharas and Dalais by Government order."

He added that the Delabeharas were removable for misconduct and claimed no proprietary rights ("Selections," Volume I, page 123). On the 22nd August 1837, the Government confirmed that Settlement of Mr. Wilkinson, and stated its agreement with Mr. Halliday, then member of the Board of Revenue — "that neither the engagements (of the Sarbarakars) with Government nor, of course, the lands by which the service rendered is remunerated, should be matters of inheritance and liable to subdivision among heirs." ("Selections," Volume I, page 136.)

The orders of the Government were on the 15th September 1837 forwarded by the Board of Revenue to the Commissioner with the following instructions: —

"You will cause it to be distinctly notified to the Sarbarakars that at the expiration of the present Settlement Government will select its own engager, wherever they may choose to exercise the right so to do, and that the present incumbents will be held liable to dismissal for default or bad behaviour satisfactorily proved before the local authorities. It is very desirable that in all future cases individuals only should be acknowledged and allowed to treat as Sarbarakars." ("Selections," Volume I, page 133.)

In his report to the Board of Revenue of the 5th October 1880 Mr. Metcalfe, then Commissioner of Orissa, stated in relation to Khurdah:—

"The Government revenue of Khurdah has hitherto been collected by (1) Sarbarakars proper, (2) by Pursethis, and (3) by Reportdars.

"The first enjoy Jagir lands, and enjoy rents of lands brought under cultivation during the period the Settlement runs.

"The second are Sarbarakars of homestead lands, who, as a rule, do not enjoy Jagir lands.

* * * * *

"No one of the three clauses has any proprietary or hereditary rights." ("Selections," Volume II, page 258.)

The reports and papers in the "Selections" from the correspondence relating to the Settlements in Khurdah have satisfied their Lordships that Sarbarakars in Khurdah had under the Government no heritable or transferable right in their office of Sarbarakar or in the Sarbarakari Jagirs; that they were liable to be dismissed for misconduct, and that on dismissal they lost all right to occupy any Sarbarakari Jagirs; and that on the termination of a Settlement they were bound to enter into a fresh engagement with the Government if they wished to be continued in the office of Sarbarakar. When the Government in 1861 granted the Mouzah revenue free to the Mathdharis a Settlement had in 1857 been made, and the Sarbarakars, including the first defendant's father, Brindaban, had entered into engagements by Kabuliyats with the Government for the period of the Settlement, and the grant to the Mathdharis was subject to those engagements of the Sarbarakars. That Settlement terminated in 1880. Brindaban died in 1889. The statements in the suits in which Brindaban was concerned, which are referred to in the judgment of the High Court, do not alter the conclusions as to the position of Sarbarakars in Khurdah which are to be drawn from the reports and papers in the "Selections."

The High Court came to the conclusion that it was clear that from 1818 onwards the tendency of the Government and of the majority of its officers was to regard the Sarbarakars in Khurda as mere office holders, and that in practice their position was hereditary. The High Court held that the first defendant was a tenure-holder, and by its decree in the appeal in which the plaintiffs were the appellants dismissed their appeal. In the appeal in which the first defendant was the appellant the High Court by its decree affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, in so far as it declared the plaintiffs' title as proprietors of the two and half Mouzahs in suit; declared that the first defendant was a tenure-holder; and in other respects set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit.

On the hearing of this appeal Counsel for the first defendant contended that the decision in 1871 of the High Court at Calcutta in Saddanando Maiti v. Nourattam Ma'iti (1) was an authority which showed that Sarbarakari tenures in Cuttack are permanent, hereditary, and transferable. Apparently that decision was not brought to the attention of the Subordinate Judge or of the High Court in this case, possibly because it does not appear that the lands the rent of which was in that case sought to be enhanced were situate in Khurda; possibly because it does not appear on what finding of the Court of first appeal or on what evidence, if there was any, as to the position of Sarbarakars in Cuttack the High Court came to the conclusion that Sarbarakari tenures in Cuttack were permanent, hereditary, and transferable. That case before the High Court was a second appeal.

Their Lordships agree with the Subordinate Judge that the first defendant was not a tenure-holder: that he was liable to be dismissed for misconduct from his office of Sarbarakar; that he was rightly dismissed from that office; and that on his dismissal he ceased to be entitled to hold the Sarbarakari lands in Mouzah Bande; and that except as to the Sarbarakari lands in Mouzah Panasabasta, the plaintiffs were entitled to the decree in ejectment and for possession, and to the declaration of title which the Subordinate Judge by his decree gave to them.

The plaintiffs have failed to prove any title in them to the Jagir lands in Mouzah Panasabasta.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed; that the decree of the High Court in the appeal in which the plaintiffs were the appellants should be set aside with costs; that the decree of the High Court in the appeal in which the first defendant was the appellant, except in so far as it affirmed the declaration of the Subordinate Judge, of the title of the plaintiffs as proprietors of the $2\frac{1}{2}$ Mouzahs in suit, should be set aside with costs; and that the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be affirmed so far as it declared the proprietary title of the plaintiffs to the $2\frac{1}{2}$ Mouzahs in suit; that it should be varied by decreeing the ejectment of the first defendant from possession of the Jagir lands in Mouzah Bande, but not from the Jagir lands in Mouzah Panasabasta, by decreeing mesne profits to be ascertained in the Court of the Subordinate Judge; and by striking out of that decree the clause giving to the first defendant an opportunity of executing a kabuliyat in favour of the plaintiffs; and by giving the plaintiffs the costs of the suit as against the first defendant. The costs, if any, of ascertaining the amount of mesne profits should be in the discretion of the Court of the Subordinate Judge. The first defendant must pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

CIVIL REVISION No. 834 OF 1917.
April 10, 1918.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II,

LACHHMAN PRASAD v. BALDEO PRASAD.

paras. 2, 5—Arbitrator refusing to act—Appointment of new arbitrator—Procedure—Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 8.

The provisions of paragraph 5 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code relating to the appointment of an arbitrator by a party in the event of the arbitrator previously appointed refusing to act must be read with the provisions embodied in paragraph 2 of the same Schedule, so that both parties must concur in appointing an arbitrator in place of the one who has refused to act, and the appointment does not rest solely with the party who has been served with a written notice by his opponent.

Revision of the order of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Ferozepore, dated the 8th August 1917.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain and Mr. Kanshi Ram, for the Petitioner.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi and Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are very fully given in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, and the only question for decision in this revision is whether the interpretation placed by him on the concluding portion of paragraph 5 (1) and on paragraph 5 (2) of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code is correct or not. The Subordinate Judge has held that the provisions of paragraphs 5 (1) and (2) relating to the appointment of an arbitrator by a party, in the event of the arbitrator previously appointed refusing to act, must be read with the provisions embodied in paragraph 2 of the same Schedule and that reading the two paragraphs together, it is clear that the new arbitrator must be appointed by both the parties and not solely by the party who has been served with a written notice under the concluding portion of paragraph 5 (1) by his opponent.

After hearing Pandit Sheo Narain and without calling on the respondents' Counsel, I am clearly of opinion that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge is perfectly sound, as the construction contended for by Pandit Sheo Narain would lead to absurd consequences. The intention of the Legislature in enacting paragraphs 5 (1) and (2) of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code appears to me to have been the same as that underlying section 8 of the Indian Arbitration Act, IX of 1899. The concluding portion of the said section 8 (1) shows that both the parties should concur in appointing an arbitrator in place of the one who has refused to act and that the appointment does not rest solely with the party who has been served with a written notice by his opponent.

I maintain the decree of the lower Court and dismiss this revision with costs.

Revision dismissed.
